Excessive perspiration of the feet calls for stringent measures to offset "colds." As a rule such feet are soft and require hardening. They must be bathed morning and night, then paftned with a 10 per cent. solution of chromic acid; a weaker solution should be used if the skin is broken. The hosiery is soaked for one hour in a solution of corrosive sublimate, 1-2000, then rinsed in hot water and dried. If the perspiration is so great that it soaks into the shoes, they should be painted all over the inside with a solution containing one ounce of salicylic acid to ten ounces of spirits of wine, not, of course, until after the shoes have been well dried and aired.

Changing the footwear several times daily, giving it and the feet faithful care as outlined above, will completely restore them.

PRESIDENTIAL PLATFORM OF THE REPUBLICANS

New York, Feb. 23.—Adoption of a platform and election of delegates and alternates at large to the national convention was the program before the unofficial Republican state convention here. The convention got under way when Elihu Root, as temporary chairman, delivered the keynote speech in which he attacked the Democratic National Administration and outlined a proposed platform for the party's guidance.

Nathan L. Miller, of Syracuse, was named a delegate-at-large to the national convention in place of Mr. Root, who declined to serve. Mr. Root definitely announced his decision not to be a delegate in a letter addressed to State Chairman George Glnn.

Mr. Root gave no reason in his letter of withdrawal, but it is understood that he has decided to accept appointment as a member of the committee that is to prepare a plan of organization for an international court of justice provided for under the covenant of the League of Nations.

Desires To Be Free.

Mr. Root, it is understood, desires to be free from other duties, especially those of a partisan nature, while he is connected with the international organization.

The sub-committee on resolutions, headed by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler worked until the early morning hours before agreement was reached on a tentative platform, which will be acted upon during the day.

It was indicated that the platform would follow closely the suggestions made by former Senator Root. Among the planks considered by the sub-committee were these: Ratification of the Peace Treaty with Senate amendments; decentralization of executive powers; establishment of a national budget with rigid Governmental economy; revision of the income tax involving tariff changes; Americanization and universal military training.

Denunciation Cheered.

Mr. Root brought the delegates to their feet cheering time and again in his denunciations of the Democratic Administration and especially in his references to what he termed the autocratic conduct of President Wilson.

Most striking of Mr. Roots' proposals were:

Decentralization of the executive powers that have made the President "more autocratic than any sovereign in the civilized world."

Reform of the League of Nations covenant by a congress of nations at the call of "a Republican President immediately after March 4, 1921;" to establish "the rule of public right rather than the rule of mere expediency."

Rigid Governmental economy and the adoption of an executive budget.

Limitation of the right to strike at a point where it conflicts with self-preservation of the community; establishment of a labor tribunal with power to enforce its mandates.

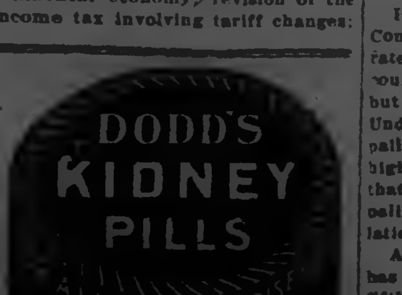
Americanization and the elimination of "a lot of Bolsheviki or Bolshevik sympathizers" from public office.

Universal military training.

Mr. Root's address was regarded as the opening gun of the campaign. It was prepared after informal conferences with the most distinguished Republicans of the state.



TAX RATE 35 MILLS

In Hamilton This Year as Set by Board of Control.

Hamilton, Feb. 23.—The Board of Control has fixed for the year the tax rate. The rate will be 35 mills. It would be two-fifths of a mill higher, but that would be the outside limit. Under the municipal act the municipality may strike a rate of 25 mills higher than the school tax rate, but that is the limit to which any municipality can go without special legislation.

As the local Board of Education has decided on a rate of ten and two-fifths mills, the highest the Board of Control can go is thirty-five and two-fifths.

METHODISTS HAVE DECIDED TO RAISE FIVE MILLION FOR FORWARD MOVEMENT

Have Already Raised $4,300,000, Anglicans Forge Ahead and Presbyterians and Baptists Exceed Objectives.

The Methodist Forward Movement has been so successful that at a meeting of the organizers in Toronto it was decided to raise their objective to $5,000,000. The Ontario and Quebec organizers are confident they can raise another $600,000 in the two Provinces from congregations which have not yet started their campaigns. It was therefore felt that an effort should be made to raise the balance of $100,000 necessary to bring the total up to $5,000,000, and the amount was accordingly divided pro rata among the five central conferences in the two Provinces. A resolution was passed giving the churches and districts which have not yet inaugurated their drives until March 15 to complete their work.

Many New Promises.

A portion of the $600,000 referred to seems assured as Manitoba has promised an additional $140,000, Alberta $50,000, Saskatchewan $20,000 and British Columbia $25,000. Of the extra $100,000 which has been accepted by Rev. Peter Bryce as an allotment for the Toronto Conference, the city's share is $40,000 and this, it is believed, will be speedily made up by several churches by a new effort.

Newfoundland, the only conference still untouched, is looked to for $75,000. Montreal has undertaken to raise an additional $20,000, Hamilton $18,000, and Belleville $10,000. The balance of the added objective will be distributed in smaller amounts.

Anglicans Forge Ahead.

The Anglicans to date have raised $2,656,080.

Among the Toronto churches the Church of the Redeemer has raised $23,425 against an objective of $25,000 and St. Mary's Dovercourt road, report $9,100 with an objective of $6,700.

The Congregationalists announce a new Dominion total of $106,327 on their $100,000 objective. When reports are received from the East and the West, it is expected this amount will be greatly augmented. The total to date represents in the main returns from Ontario and Quebec.

Presbyterians Go Over Top.

No additional returns are expected from the Presbyterians for a few days. This denomination has reached its objective of $4,000,000, and assurances are forthcoming that this will be exceeded. St. Paul's, Toronto, who have raised $93,000, are hard pressed by St. Andrew's, and St. Paul's, of Montreal. The latter church has raised $90,000, with a determination to pass the $100,000 mark. Encouraging reports come from the Maritime Provinces. Three reports from the Halifax Presbytery all announced that their churches have gone over the top, St. James, Dartmouth, Elmsdale, and Nine Mile River. Barrie Presbytery has reported from two additional centres, Alliston, with $2,000, and Burns with $850. Sarnia Presbytery adds two more reports, Wyner, with $119, and Mandaumin, with $1,152. London Presbytery reports from Chalmer's Church, Dunwich, with $1,501, and Bryanston, with $604. Hamilton Presbytery has two new reports, St. Ann's, with $454, and Lynedoch and Chaboime, with $423, considerably over the top. A particularly fine report comes from Thessalon, where the United Church and Alma Heights announced $23,053. St. Andrew's Church of Lindsay has announced $14,176. The Kingston Presbytery reports $3,067, from St. Andrew's Church, Burnbrae, and $3,379 from the united congregations of Seymour and Rylstone, on an allocation of $3,540. ore Bay has reported $958.

The Baptists, who have raised $878,188 on an objective of $850,000, express confidence that when all their returns are in they will be well over the $1,000,000 mark.

MINIMUM WAGE FOR ONTARIO

Important Reforms Likely to be Made by the Legislature.

Elora, Feb. 23. — Members of the Drury Cabinet made important announcements concerning new legislation at a meeting here in connection with the East Wellington by-election. Hon. Walter Rollo, Minister of Labor, stated that measures would be introduced at the approaching session providing for mothers' pensions and a minimum wage, while amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act and other progressive enactments would be submitted to the Assembly. Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney General, spoke of the proposed appointment of a purchasing agent which would save the people at least $400,000 annually, and stated that the Government will announce in a few days the selection of a commission to solve the Kapuskasing problem. He also announced that the Government is going to change the election law back again to the basis of the municipal lists for the reason that the recent general election cost $1,500,000 which was ten times the cost of the 1914 election. The bulk of the money, according to the Minister of Labor, went to enumerators whose main purpose was to leave the names of political opponents off the lists.

A FEMALE "BILLY SUNDAY"

Winnipeg, Feb. 23.— Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, native of Ingersoll, Ont., who is known wherever she goes as the "female Billy Sunday," is creating a considerable stir here in an religious revival campaign which she started a few days ago. She is attracting great crowds nightly and her vigorous preaching has resulted in scores of men, women and children "hitting the sawdust trail" at every meeting.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

At 10 a.m., April 6, 1909, the Stars and Stripes were hoisted over the North Pole, terminating a race for that honor which has attracted the most learned and daring explorers of the world for 400 years.

The man who finally accomplished the feat which won for this country an honor equaled only by the discoverer of America, was Robert Edwin Peary, who died at Washington last week, then a commander in the United States Navy, and one of the foremost Arctic explorers of the world. The achievement was the climax of a career of 23 years of effort, of which period 12 years were actually spent in the Arctic regions.

His explorations in the Arctic started in 1886, when Peary made a reconnaissance of the Greenland inland ice cap east of Disco Bay. Following this performance, Peary was made chief of Arctic expeditions for the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, and acted in that capacity from June, 1891, to September, 1892, during which time he led his expedition to the northeastern angle of Greenland Bay.

He was the discoverer of Melville Land, Hoilpein Land, and other far north territories, beyond Greenland, and was the man who established the "farthest north" record, and held this honor until his discovery of the Pole itself. Other expeditions were made in 1896-1897; 1997 and 1902.

FAMINE AND COLD REIGN IN VIENNA

REPRESENTATIVE OF AMERICAN RELIEF SOCIETY SENDS BACK HARROWING PICTURE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 21.—A cable message to the American relief administration of the European children's fund, from a representative of the organization in Vienna, tells of conditions of financial chaos and extreme want and suffering rampant there. "A crown is worth less than half a cent, the message stated. There is no coal, and street cars have stopped running.

"People badly clad walk miles to work. Vienna is a picture of dissolute, helpless misery. Last fall 225,000 was a fair estimate of the number of under-nourished children, but today we believe three hundred thousand would be more correct. We are informed that the city has sufficient foodstuffs to last only a month, even at the present starvation rations.

"If you could see the endless lines of people, including even old women and little children, trudging into Vienna through slush and snow, bent down under huge loads strapped to their backs; if you could see pinched, sallow faces in kitchens, you would wonder how human endurance could stand up under such a strain."

BLACK TYPHUS IS KILLING THOUSANDS

The tragedy of the wandering little orphans of Poland and the sorry efforts of the mothers of that war-stricken country to care for the homeless ones, is an appealing phase of the big heart-breaking story of destitution that relief workers bring back from abroad.

Thousands of youngsters, motherless and fatherless through the ravages of the "black typhus," trudge wearily from village to village over the desolate country seeking what food they can find to keep life in their starving bodies. Sometimes bands of refugees find the little folks and take them in charge. Now and then some almost equally poor peasant gives them shelter and divides his small portion of food. And then, in the course of a day or two, the children take up the tramp again like so many small gypsies. Once in a while a woman will mother the little travellers and aid them until starvation overtakes them.

Jacob Bashein, who had been in charge of a relief unit for the Joint Distribution Committee, which handles funds collected by the American Jewish Relief Committee and other Jewish fund-raising relief organizations, told of these tragic pilgrimages. The Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee is appealing for funds to alleviate this terrible suffering.

How a Python Kills.

The python kills by contraction says Prof. John A. Jordan, in the Wide World Magazine, and I have heard many discussions as to how this is done, some stating emphatically that they must get their tail round some solid object to get a leverage. I prefer to keep an open mind on the subject, and can only relate what has come under my own observation. Most agree, however, that the giant python can overpower and kill almost any animal. Some declare that the width of their jaws will only allow of the passage of an animal about the size of a goat. This is not correct, for I have killed pythons with the horns of a Topi hartebeest sticking out of the jaw, and the Topi weighs well over two hundred pounds.

The circuit rider, that most picturesque figure in the religious life of the country in the rural districts, is passing away almost as rapidly as is the cowboy. In the earlier life of the country, with his saddlebags, his tracts and his Bible, traveling on horseback through the wilderness, he was a vital factor in the life of the inhabitants along the frontiers and in the sparsely settled districts. Without him many a community would have heard no preaching from year's end to year's end unless it were from the lips of a lay exhorter; many a bride would have felt herself but half married with no minister to perform the ceremony, and the dead would have been laid to rest without religion's comfort to the survivors.

The circuit rider of the early days, though his visits might be few and far between, was nevertheless an integral part in the religious and social life of the communities on his circuit. His coming was eagerly expected and the pioneers in the wilderness were loath to see him go.

The rapidity with which he is disappearing may be gained from a study of the circuit system in rural Methodism as shown by the annual conference minutes, using the number of churches per charge as a basis. Of the rural charges 6,890, or 51 per cent, are stations; 3,524, or 26 per cent, are circuits having two churches; 1,620 have three churches to a circuit; 815 have four; 282 have five, while but 177 circuits, or 1 per cent, have more than five churches to a circuit. In other words more than half of the rural Methodist churches now have ministers who do not have to devote part of their time to other churches. The figures show that 11,000 or more charges included in this study have not more than two points to a circuit.

The surviving circuit system is most marked in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, southern Missouri, Illinois and West Virginia. The centenary movement of the Methodist Episcopal church will doubtless have the effect of hastening the departure into oblivion of the circuit rider in some sections of the country, as part of the money derived from the joint centenary drive for $80,000,000 for world upbuilding, mission and church extension will be devoted to the rural church. In other sections, however, it has been found that the efficiency of the Methodist Episcopal church will be materially increased by extending the circuit system on the parish plan. This applies, however, to the less-favored sections of the country; in the more developed sections a pastor with but two churches to care for has more than he can look after if he considers his task one of community upbuilding as well as of community service.

Hot Blast of Volcanoes.

Writing in the Monthly Weather Review, George N. Cole sets forth detailed arguments to prove that the hot blast which swept over the city of St. Pierre during the eruption of Mont Pelee, as well as similar blasts in connection with the eruption of Vesuvius that destroyed Pompeii and Herculaneum, the eruption of Taal, Sakurajima, etc., derived its heat from the sudden compression of the air surrounding the volcano, and not from conditions in the volcano itself. In other words, it was not, according to this hypothesis, an outpouring of hot crater gases that caused the destruction, but the dynamic heating of the air attending the propagation of the explosion wave. Mr. Cole cites a number of interesting observations at St. Pierre after the Martinique disaster that seems to support this idea.—Scientific American.

One Real Joy Ride.

Just before the first event at the balloon circus at Arcadia the other day, a rancher addressed Lieutenant Colonel Mygatt, saying:

"You're one of them gover'ment fellows, can you tell me if I can buy one of them war tanks, now that the fight's over?"

"What in the world do you want a tank for?" demanded the astonished officer.

"Well, it's this way," explained the rancher. "I'm tired of these here road hogs in their big machine crowdin' my flivver off into the ditches, an' I'd be willin' to pay good money just to jog down the road a piece in one of them tanks, just to see what would happen."—Los Angeles Times.

An Insult to Canada.

A protest against the new regulation which does not permit the person registering births to use the word "Canadian" in the nationality column, was made by the York Pioneers at their annual meeting in Toronto, and after this new order was branded as an "insult to the Canadian race," a resolution was passed, to be forwarded to the Dominion Government, calling the attention of the officials to the pioneers' protest. The matter was brought up by Mrs. E. A. Kantel, president of the Daughters of Canada, who felt it was not much encouragement to the Canadian spirit of citizenship to prevent children born in Canada being registered as Canadians, after their parents had been naturalized and had shown every inclination to become Canadian citizens.

WOMEN EVERYWHERE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as the Greatest Remedy for Woman's Ills.

New Haven, Conn.—"For two years I suffered with a female weakness, pains in my back and painful periods, and I was so weak and tired that I was not able to do my work. A friend told me to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it gave me great relief. My pains left me and I am now able to do my work and feel fine. You can publish my testimonial and if your Vegetable Compound does others as much good as it has me I will be very much pleased."—Mrs. CHARLES E. MORGAN, 37 Sea Street, New Haven, Conn.

The reason Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is so successful is because it contains the curative, strengthening properties of good old fashioned roots and herbs, which act directly on the female organism.

There are women everywhere who long for children in their homes yet are denied this happiness on account of some functional disorder which in most cases would readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Such women should not give up hope until they have given this wonderful medicine a trial, and for special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of 40 years' experience is at your service.

Wife of Ex-Crown Prince Knew Much Unhappiness In German Royal Family

PRINCESS CATHERINE RADZIWILL, once intimately acquainted with the Teutonic courts, had given a peep behind the scenes of the unhappy married life of Cecile, daughter of the reigning house of the little Duchy of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and wife of the former Crown Prince of Germany. Her mother, a Russian princess, was never in love with Germany and the Germans, and after her marriage to the prince, who later became the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, took no pleasure in the German society of her new home, and spent the greater part of her life abroad, usually in the south of France. Her daughter, Cecile, who was born at Schwerin, September 20, 1886, shared her mother's antipathy to Germans. Nevertheless, after one or two refusals, she consented to marry the German Crown Prince, and repented at her leisure. The engagement of the prince and princess was distasteful both to the Kaiser and to the grand duchess, the mother of Princess Cecile. To the Kaiser it was distasteful because he heartily disliked the grand duchess as a Russian and by reason of her unconcealed dislike of him. To the grand duchess it was distasteful because of her contempt for everything German, but she was willing to thwart the Kaiser's desires, and so gave her consent to the marriage. The Kaiser was piqued that the daughter of a woman whom he so cordially disliked should hesitate an instant over the question of accepting as her husband the heir to the German throne, and his royal will was aroused. And so the match was finally made up.

At Florence, in which the two young people were for a while staying, prior to the marriage, occurred the first quarrel between the two, the occasion being the cruel act of the crown prince in killing viciously a small dog which the princess was fondling. This quarrel was soon made up, but the princess had gained an insight into the character of her fiancée. The marriage occurred in June, 1905, performed in the ancient chapel of the old Castle of Berlin with great magnificence.

PRINCESS CECILE.

The crown princess speedily became a favorite with the Kaiser, who often took her part against the crown prince when that personage gave way to fits of brutality common to his character. The mother of the princess, by reason of the Kaiser's hatred, was not allowed to visit Berlin, the crown prince soon tired of his wife and treated her with neglect, and presently the day came when the crown princess felt that she was surrounded by enemies and had not a friend at hand. The author proceeds in great detail to describe the distressing life which the princess was forced to lead. At St. Moritz, Switzerland, where she was stopping for a while, not long after the birth of her first child, occurred a shocking scene in which the crown prince openly assaulted his wife, so that the occupants of the hotel were startled by her screams and rushed to her aid. Later, the crown prince being heavily in debt, he persuaded his wife to loan him some of the most valuable of her jewels, which he pawned in Vienna to raise the necessary sum to meet pressing liabilities. And when the jewels were missed and the matter of their absence became public the crown prince told his father, the Kaiser, that his wife had herself pawned the jewels to raise money to pay the claims of dressmakers and milliners. At this time the crown princess returned to her home in Schwerin with the intention of securing a separation from her husband.

Meantime active preparations were making for war, and of these preparations the crown princess was well aware and would have been glad to warn her relatives, but was prevented by her position as a German princess. At the wedding of the Kaiser's only daughter, indeed, she did venture to warn the Czar in a whisper of impending trouble, but he failed to comprehend her meaning and incautiously betrayed her, and the Kaiser afterward assured her that if he should go to war he certainly should not attack Russia. Nevertheless the crown princess saw trouble impending for Russia. She was closely connected with the imperial house of Russia and she had been brought up in France, where she had many friends. Officially, then, she was in the position of an enemy of many whom she loved. Nevertheless during the war, the writer tells us, Cecile bore herself with great tact, but was unpopular with her husband's family, who regarded her as a Russian.

First Omnibus.

"Omnibus" was an almost brand new word in its modern sense when Shillibeer took it from the French in 1829, and in France the name possessed a special significance for those who knew their history, for from 1672 to 1676 Paris had already seen a regular service of roomy public vehicles, "carosses a cinq sous." Only these predecessors of the modern bus were not "omnibus"—for all. The letters patent which instituted them for the benefit of middle class people laid down that they were not to be used by soldiers, lackeys or any other wearers of livery or artisans and laborers. These exclusive vehicles faded out of existence, and the new ones, which were started in Paris in 1828, were named "omnibus" expressly to signify their democratic character.—London Chronicle.

Crockett Wouldn't Have Maggie.

The first school the late S. R. Crockett attended was the Free Church school in the village of Laurieston, of that parish, distant three miles from his home. When he was a very wee chap "Sam" used to be accompanied to school by Maggie—a girl somewhat older than himself, who was supposed to look after him. Their daily appearance together led one of the villagers to say to him one day as the couple passed her door: "Man, Sam, I think ye'll be mairryin' Maggie some day; ye're aye thegither." "Mairry Maggie —," was the indignant boy's response. "She disna ken the names o' the kings o' Israel yet!" The lady whose suggestion to the future novelist was so contemptuously received often recalled the incident with amusement.—Westminster Gazette.

Yellow Fever on the Amazon.

Iquitos is a town on the Amazon river within four degrees of the equator. An equatorial swamp not only surrounds the place, but thrusts invading swales into the city itself. Open sewers run the length of the principal streets, which are quite innocent of paving. Yet an American surgeon, loaned from the public health service and loyally supported by the Peruvian government of the place, has driven out yellow fever even under such disadvantages as these and reduced the general death rate from forty-nine per thousand per year to twenty-eight. In the face of such an achievement, what excuse has any American city for harboring preventable disease?—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Haggis as the Scotch Make It.

To make haggis take the heart, tongue and small liver of the sheep, one pound of bacon, four ounces of crumbs of bread, the rind of one lemon, two eggs, two anchovies (sardines may be used), a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper and two teaspoonfuls of salt. Chop the heart, tongue, liver and bacon, mix thoroughly, add the breadcrumbs, the anchovies, chopped fine; the lemon rind, grated; then the pepper and salt. Beat the eggs and pour them over. Pack this into a kettle or mold, cover and boil or steam continuously for two hours. Turn it on a dish and serve very hot.

Seven Wonders of the World.

The seven wonders of ancient times were the pyramids of Egypt, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Diana at Ephesus, the statue of Jupiter by Phidias, the mausoleum of Artemisia and the Colossus of Rhodes. Seven wonders of the modern world have been given as the wireless telegraph, the telephone, the aeroplane, radium, antiseptics, spectrum analysis and X rays.—New York American.

AL BAIRD RETIRES FROM BASEBALL

Promising Infielder Decides to Devote all His Time to Oil Interests in Texas.

Al Baird, who gave promise of developing into a first-class infielder and a Giant regular in due time, and whom John McGraw planned to farm out to the Rochester club of the International League this year, is lost to the Giants and to baseball. The oil fields of Louisiana and Texas hold a greater lure for the youngster than the ball fields of the International League. At the close of last season Baird intimated to his teammates that he was about ready to write finis to his baseball career; McGraw's decision to shunt him to the minors for a season or so served to make him think more seriously than ever of laying aside his glove and cleated shoes, and the unusual opportunites which the southern oil fields now offer for a young man of his education and training are, he feels, too good to be overlooked.

The Baird family, it seems, is heavily interested in the Claiborne and Bull Bayou fields in Louisiana and in petroleum producing sections of land in Texas. Al, who specialized in the chemical analysis of oil at Louisiana State University and who has since studied other phases of the industry, is now superintending drilling operations on the property held by his family in the Claiborne district.

Reads Like Fiction.

Baird's inception into the ranks of professional baseball players was of the sort one reads of in fiction, but seldom encounters in real life. Back in the early spring of 1916, Baird was a member of the Louisiana State University team. He was also a football player of exceptional ability, but that is neither here nor there. He was just a kid who looked as though he might in time become a pretty good ball player, but he was unknown except in southern collegiate circles. No major league scouts had dogged his trail and playing professional baseball was furthest from his mind.

Then, one afternoon in April, the Giants rolled into Baton Rouge to play an exhibition game with the L. S. U. team. L. S. U., incidentally is a coeducational institution, and all the beauty and chivalry of Baton Rouge was in evidence in the long, loosely built stands that fringe the field laid out on an embankment overlooking the broad Mississippi that afternoon four years ago. Christy Mathewson, then a member in good standing of the Giant pitching staff, was selected by McGraw to face the university team in deference to the wishes of the undergraduates. So Matty tossed the ball up to the youngsters for four or five innings and Bill Ritter finished the game and the Giants won. But through the long, sultry afternoon McGraw's attention had not rested solely on his own players. Early in the game he had spotted a kid on the university team and he watched closely every move that kid made. The kid was Al Baird, and when the game was over and the Giants were climbing into their cars for the trip to the hotel, McGraw sought him out and offered to him a tryout with the Giants at Marlin the following spring. Baird accepted the offer.

The next year Baird reported at Marlin with a batch of other recruits and his work was such that McGraw became convinced that he had made no mistake in selecting him as a possible future great. Toward the close of the training season Baird informed McGraw that his family had raised serious objection to him playing professional ball, and regretfully he left the Giant camp, but he managed to convert his family to the belief that a few years of baseball might not be a bad thing for him after all, and he rejoined the club in Dallas.

Al remained with the Giants through the season of 1917 and late in the fall of that year enlisted in the navy. He received his discharge shortly after the signing of the armistice and last spring reported to McGraw in Gainesville. Last season he broke into the game now and then, and, though his play was rather brilliant at times, McGraw conceived the idea that a year or two in the minors would do him a world of good. He therefore obtained waivers on him this winter and released him to Rochester. Arthur Irwin, manager of the Rochester club, thinks highly of Baird, and is of the opinion that a year or so in Rochester would make a finished ballplayer of him. Definite news of Baird's retirement will be a blow to Irwin, who has counted upon him to hold down second base for his club this year.

PETERBOROUGH WAS GAME

Professor Rausenberger Invented German Cannon To Slaughter Civilians

It is said that Prof. Rausenberger would like to disown the sudden fame that came to him on Good Friday in the spring of 1918 when the Germans began to bombard Paris with a gun that would send a projectile seventy-five miles. On that holy day, the Germans began a campaign that was intended to terrorize the French capital. It followed close upon the first great drive of that year which had smashed the Fifth British Army. The high command considered that this was the psychological moment to disclose to the world the fact that they possessed a gun with which it was possible to bombard cities over seventy miles distant. Paris was greatly alarmed by the spring offensive, so Parisians would be given something more to worry about. The first thing that this gun accomplished was the wrecking of a church, in which a number of Good Friday worshippers were killed. The bombardment of Paris by his great gun continued at intervals as long as the Germans were in a position to do so. It was announced that the man who invented the gun was Prof. Rausenberger, who was in charge of the heavy gun section of the Krupp Works. The Germans boasted about Rausenberger's accomplishment, but the allied experts declared that it was nothing to be very proud of. The fact that it was more or less indefinite in its aim made the gun useless so far as battles were concerned. It could only be used for the purpose of killing and terrorizing the civilian population. In fact the 75-mile gun has never been used in any military operation. On that account Prof. Rausenberger has been named as one of the men who ought to figure in the list of German War Criminals. It is claimed by those who mention his name that he should be made to prove that the gun was intended to figure in plans of battle and that it actually did so. Otherwise it may be concluded that Prof. Rausenberger deliberately devised a new scheme for the wholesale murder of civilians. And now word comes from Germany that Prof. Rausenberger and his friends would like to have it understood that he was by no means entirely responsible for the invention of the gun. Such modesty is becoming and also suggests that Rausenberger is not altogether unacquainted with the phrase "Safety First."

PROF. RAUSENBERGER.

The Dog Walter.

A man and wife moved to New York from the west—a sane, conservative man and wife, used to money and knowing the worth of it—and brought a family dog along, paying $5 extra fare for the dog, by the way, on the train. They went to a large and orgulous hotel and in the due course of time the dog needed sustenance. "Ring for a waiter," said the husband, "and we'll get the dog some scraps." The floor waiter came and when asked to bring some food for the dog explained with some hauteur that he was the floor waiter and not the dog waiter, but would inform the dog waiter of the desires of the dog. The dog waiter arrived in course of time and the predicament of the dog was explained to him. The dog waiter wrote down the order carefully and departed. Presently he returned bearing a silver tray on which were displayed daintily various articles of food — some vegetables, some meat and a cracker or two. "What's that?" asked the husband, examining the contents of the tray with interest. "The service for the dog, sir," the waiter replied. "How much is it?" "One dollar, sir." The husband took the tray. "Get the dog a bone," he said. "I'll eat this. It's the best looking meal I have seen in the place, and the cheapest."

Her Family.

An old gentleman in the even older waiting-room, annoyed by some youngsters playing tag around his feet, exclaimed, "Stop that racket, children!" "Well, I like that!" said the mother in a loud, angry one. "Now, look here, madam," said the old gentleman, "I've raised three families of children and not a single child was ever allowed to annoy people." "Well," replied the irate lady, "if you've raised three families you've certainly done your duty, and I'll thank you to allow me to raise mine."

Had to Work Up.

"I am a student and would like to know if you could take me on as a bricklayer?" "Bricklayer? No! We might start you as an architect with a chance of working your way up."

It is quite easy to convince some married men that it is good to be aloud.

Rockies Surpass the Alps

Few people who have never been to the scenic regions of the Canadian Rockies and the Selkirks have the slightest idea of its wonders.

Perhaps this fact will help a bit; The Swiss Alps are traversed in five hours, but the magnificent scenery between Calgary and Vancouver lasts for twenty-three hours of rapid railroading!

Edward Whymper of Matterhorn fame once stated that the Canadian Rockies were "fifty Switzerlands thrown into one." Snowy peaks, vast glaciers hanging from them, rugged precipices, waterfalls, foaming torrents, great canons, lakes like vast sapphires and emeralds set in pine clad mountains, have been flung together in unparalleled profusion.

Banff, Lake Louise, Field and Glacier all have ample accommodations for tourists, but last year the hotels were more than full owing to the heavy tourist traffic across Canada. Banff, but a short ride west of Calgary, has an altitude of 4,521 feet and is surrounded by majestic snow capped peaks that rise a mile above the Bow Valley. This valley is a vast amphitheatre, walled in by mountains, and through it winds the Bow river, which some wag once called the "Baby Blue Bow." The Bow Valley as viewed from the Banff Springs Hotel is so beautiful that even the strongest adjectives seem weak and futile.

Banff is the capital of Rocky Mountains Park and is the tourist's own town. There are fine automobile roads, a busy business section, boating and fishing on the Bow and interesting side trips to Lake Minnewanka, the Stony Indian's name for "Spirit Water," and Johnson's Canon, Tunnel Mountain and the great open air zoo, where buffalo and the big game of the Rockies may be seen in their natural haunts.

Mule deer from the mountains wandered through the streets unmolested, because Banff is a safe refuge for them, and elk, bear and Rocky Mountain sheep are frequently seen by automobile parties and tourists who "hit the trail" up the mountains to various points of interest. Banff, too, is headquarters for the Canadian Alpine Club, whose members go into camp each year and climb some "heaven kissing hill." Their clubhouse, more than a mile above the sea, clings to the wooden slopes of Sulphur Mountain, one of the most remarkable peaks in the Canadian Rockies.

Sulphur Mountain is one of Mother Nature's great tea kettles, except that the brew is hot sulphur water and not tea. There are excellent bathing facilities at the Hot Sulphur Springs, high up on the peak, the Cave and Basin, the Government's handsome $150,000 pool and the Banff Springs Hotel's pool, all of which get a bountiful supply of hot water at about 90 degrees from Sulphur Mountain.

The Government also owns and maintains a first-class golf course along the Bow river, where the golfer may enjoy his favorite sport amid the most inspiring surroundings. Mountains rise from the edges of the fair green, and the scenery is so attractive that the golfer finds trouble in "keeping his eye on the ball."

Glacier, in the heart of the mighty Selkirks, is a great resort for Alpinists. Here Mount Sir Donald, 10,808 feet in altitude, rises to the height of a mile and a quarter above the valley. It was named after Sir Donald Smith (Lord Strathcona), one of the far-seeing geniuses who bound eastern and western Canada together with the rails of the Canadian Pacific and made Canada a nation. Near Glacier is Illecillewaet Glacier, which covers ten square miles and is nearly a mile high. Its forefoot is almost in Glacier's backyard. Nearby, too, is Asulkan Valley, with its big glacier and the mysterious Nakimu Caves on the lower slopes of Mount Cheops.

There are many scenic wonders in the Canadian Rockies and the Selkirks, but only a few can be described within the limits of an ordinary newspaper article.

Push Good Roads Policy.

Active arrangements are being made for carrying out the good roads policy initiated by the Dominion Government in its legislation at the last regular session of Parliament. By the terms of it $20,000,000 is appropriated to be spread over a period of five years. This represents 40 per cent. of the outlay, the provinces being asked to contribute 60 per cent.

	Federal grant.	Required from province.
Alberta	$1,477,810	$2,216,715
Brit. Columbia	1,251,955	1,877,932
Manitoba	1,602,265	2,403,397
N. Brunswick	1,163,854	1,745,767
Nova Scotia	1,468,720	2,203,080
Ontario	5,877,275	8,815,912
P. E. Island	603,455	905,182
Quebec	4,748,420	7,122,630
Saskatchewan	1,806,255	2,709,382

The expenditure will be made by the provinces on the basis of contract, but the plans must be up to a certain standard, according to the traffic to be handled, and must be approved by the Federal authorities.

Ontario this year plans to build a road from Windsor to the Quebec boundary by way of London, Toronto, Kingston and Brockville, while the Quebec plans include roads from Hull to Montreal, Montreal to Sherbrooke, Montreal to Levis, South Shore and Levis to Riviere du Loup.

Theory of Gravitation Is Assailed as Mistake By Man With a New Idea

"Thee bee'st forward lad, and will turn out ill, thee sayest Sir Isaac knew not of what he spoke. Why, thee mightest as well deny that there be a God Almighty!"

So spoke the schoolmaster in the town of Grantham, Lincolnshire, England, where Sir Isaac Newton lived and discovered his theory of gravitation. He was speaking fifteen years ago to a boy of sixteen named Albert H. Johns, who declared that Newton was mistaken in his theory.

Where Sir Isaac had lived. In one of the churches in Grantham, stands the statue of the great British mathematician and philosopher, and hard by is an apple tree purporting to be the identical one from a bough of which he saw fall the apple which set in motion that train of thought from which his laws were drawn before the eyes of the world.

But Johns persisted in his disbelief. He is now in New York, a theatre decorator by vocation and by avocation a physicist who, like Ajax, defies the lightning and has grown the bolder in setting forth his belief that gravitation, as explained by Sir Isaac Newton, does not account for the motion of the heavenly bodies.

His being a foreman painter of the inside of theatres ought not to be in his way of being a scientist, any more than it prevented Jeffery Farnol, scene painter, who worked in a studio not far from where Mr. Johns toils, from becoming a successful novelist.

Sir Isaac deduced his laws from a trifling incident, such as the falling of an apple, and Mr. Johns three years ago perfected his theory by observing the wreath which rose from the bowl of his pipe. Let anyone take a pipe or cigar or cigarette, either tobacco or cubeb, and cause a whirl of smoke to rise high above his head, and watch is carefully. He may see, as Mr. Johns did, that this mass of finely divided particles of carbon, which we call smoke, began to take form and to move itself aright. Here we have a miniature world in the making.

"Did you ever," said Mr. Johns, illustrating his experiment, "notice a cloud of smoke whirling about, as it were, internally? Do you see how they are drawn about common centres and are carried away to form new whirls, losing their own identity in the process?

"A whirlpool can only form when outer coils meet other currents or forces which because of their greater momentum cannot be pushed aside. The energy is thus driven to the centre. The longer the whirl continues, the denser the core or vortex becomes.

"Now we shall consider this cloud of smoke as a universe. First we have the matter so finely drawn out that it is difficult to say whether it is material or merely units of force of electrons. Then matter goes into a denser state, the particles are driven more closely together, and here is gas, and then if we condense gas, we get a fluid under pressure, and if the pressure be applied with greater force a solid results.

"Relieve the pressure and this solid goes back to a fluid, then to a gas; apply heat and the particles in the gas are hurled further and further away from each other and become part of an intensely rarefied medium. This is the cycle through which what we call matter is constantly going, world without end."

The great Newtonian idea, as Mr. Johns always heard of it in his English home, sacrosanct by the traditions of 250 years, holds that masses draw each other; that to which Mr. Johns adheres considers the planets as always hurled by mighty atomic force into space, developing their own motions, and surrounding themselves with whirlpools. The whirlpools about them, not their masses or their weight, have to do with their seeming attraction for each other, according to the belief of Mr. Johns.

Mr. Johns has pondered deeply on this problem and has evolved several interesting mechanical tests in support of his theory.

The Observant Tommy.

The British Tommy found much to make him wonder in the character of his Poilu comrade on the French front. According to an Englishwoman who has received many confidences on the subject, the courage, the endurance, the pluck and daredevil heroism of the French all received their due admiration from the Britisher. "They know how to die, these fellows," it would be, and perhaps. "No one ever taught us how to die like that." But the thing that really shocked Tommy, and that he could not in the least understand, was the Frenchman's saving propensities, his love of money, avidity (yet no one can be more generous in a case of real need or on a great occasion). Those who know them say that the French are fond of money because they are fond of the future; as a race they are contemptuous of the present, and have always an object ahead for the sake of which it is a delight to deprive themselves. The little boy will do without some toy because of the bicycle he is to have five years hence; the young couple are saving for the dowry of a child still in her cradle, and the elderly pair are putting something by for that cottage in the country where they hope to live out their old age in happiness. They will find another object then to save for, if it be only the founding of an annual prize for the French Academy.

Noble Exiles From Russia Make Up Strong Colony In the British Capital

The war has made London the political centre of the world, and one of the centres of London's complex foreign political life is the old Russian Embassy. To-day, the Russian Embassy is London's leading "hush club." Nothing crops up to the surface from the Russian Embassy, save occasional sales of jewels in the auction rooms of Piccadilly, jewels whose owners desire their names suppressed.

Outside the Russian Embassy the exiled Russians in London who once bore titles and attended the czar have busied themselves with work for the Russian Red Cross. They have taken a house in Belgrave Square, in the shadow of the Russian Embassy, where Prince Yusupoff heads one of the most astounding households imaginable. To begin with, Prince Yusupoff is something more than the wealthy, good-looking Russian aristocrat who came to Oxford, married a Czar's granddaughter and danced in the most important English ballrooms. He is the man who shot Rasputin.

The director-general of this astonishing workshop is a woman of middle age, very plainly dressed in black. She wears no jewelry. She is the Countess Carlow, who once had palaces filled with wonderful treasures. For nearly six months after the Bolsheviki took them for the Russian people, she lived in a small house, never knowing what hour of the day or night the Bolsheviki might choose to kill her. Countess Torby, whose marriage with the Grand Duke Michael made her a romantic exile long ago, is among those who help at this fragment of Czarist Russia in Belgrave Square. "We need money," she said in a public appeal lately. "We are not sending money to the Bolsheviki. We are relieving want and misery. We sell our jewels—and what next? We do not know."

Indeed, the famous auction rooms along Piccadilly have been announcing some rare gems lately, wherever they have come from. One auction house recently offered for sale a pearl necklace, regarded by experts as one of the finest in existence, under a reserve price of $1,750,000. The sum of $335,000 was bid for it and refused. It consisted of four rows of perfectly matched gems, numbering 188 pearls, the largest of which weighed 28 grains, and the total weight of which was 4,000 grains. The collection was commenced two or three centuries ago, and is believed to have belonged to the Czarina Nathalie, mother of Peter the Great. When offered for sale it was accompanied by the extremely carefully worded announcement that "it comes into the market by order of the descendants of the Russian Imperial dynasty."

The Grand Duchess Marie, another of the knitters at the Russian Red Cross, came to London six months ago from Petrograd, where she had been running a small tobacco shop in the Nevsky Prospect. The Grand Duke George, whose younger brother married a sister of King Constantine of Greece, took ten days to grow a beard in order to disguise himself, and reached London four months ago from Finland.

Countess Pahlen, a cousin of Prince Yusupoff, who escaped from Odessa, is knitting for $9 a week. Her husband, who was a major in the Horse Guards at Petrograd until it was disbanded by the Bolsheviki, expects to return to Denikine as soon as the situation takes a favorable turn. Princess Belosselsky-Belozerski, whose father was an A.D.C. to the Czar, is another famous member of the colony, but her sufferings in escaping the Bolshevik regime have been such as to leave her paralyzed.

Mme. Nikea Letzinska, formerly Princess Sakova, is a recent addition to the London colony. She escaped from Russia by selling her jewels and forging a passport. "My daughter and I left Petrograd over two months ago disguised as country people," she told me. "We had been put down as of '3 category' in Petrograd, and our allowance of bread was less than one-tenth of a pound per day. That, with some onions, and a weekly ration of fat, potatoes and dried beans, was all we could get.

"My home in Petrograd during the first part of the war was transformed into a hospital, which I ran completely at my own expense. This lasted up to the time of the Kerensky Government. Then I was considered a suspect and my house was raided and partly set on fire. I managed to give French lessons in the house of a member of the Bolshevik Government, a Jew from Tichvin, who now occupies the beautiful palace of Prince Abimelek. When my daughter's health kept getting worse, I sold some jewelry, dressed my girl as a peasant and wrapped myself in very shabby clothes. Both my girl and I talk fluently the dialect of the upper Dvina region. That saved us. I declared that my husband, a soldier in the Bolshevik army, had been killed, and that I wanted to go back to my village. Little by little, partly by train, and partly by cart, we reached Lake Onega. Through Finland, we finally reached Sweden and embarked at Stockholm for England."

Oldest Bishop Living.

Bishop Stirling celebrated his episcopal jubilee December 21. He is now nearly 91 years of age, and, it is believed, the oldest bishop living. In 1869 Rev. Waite Hocking Stirling was consecrated first Bishop of the Falkland Islands with jurisdiction in South America. It is proposed to mark the event by a memorial which will carry on the work he initiated more than fifty years ago.

Fighting Forces Compared

In view of the report that Gen. Pershing recently claimed that "America won the war," the following official figures, published in the Boston Transcript, illustrating the efforts made by the British Empire and America are interesting: Between August 4, 1914, and November 11, 1918, more than six million men passed through the ranks of the British army. This contribution places Britain in the second place among the Allies in respect of the contingent contributed for military service. Pride of place goes to France, while the third largest contribution was made by the United States of America, who sent close to two millions of her sons to fight in this theatre.

The table below shows the strength of the British army in France under three heads. Column A gives the ration strength of the army—that is, the total number of men (excluding colored labor and prisoners of war) who were being fed from army stocks in France. This figure includes thousands of men whose duty was not to fight, but to supply, equip, and in other ways assist the fighting men. Column B gives the combatant strength, including all fighting troops, namely, cavalry, machine gunners, garrison and cyclist battalions, together with the troops in divisional or base depots—that is, all troops whose functions are in the first place fighting. Column C gives the rifle strength—that is, the officers and men of the infantry battalions alone.

	A. Ration strength.	B. Combatant strength.	C. Rifle strength.
Mar.	245,000	123,000	49,000
April	319,000	214,000	51,000
Sept.	1,641,000	1,195,000	341,000
Nov.	1,924,000	1,160,000	322,000

The captures of prisoners and guns in France during the victorious offensive against the German army between July 18 and November 11 were as follows:—

	Prisoners.	Guns.
British armies	200,000	2,540
French armies	135,720	1,880
American armies	43,300	1,421
Belgian armies	14,500	474

In addition, there were 80,000 British combatant troops in Italy who co-operated effectively in the final defeat of the Austrian army, capturing 30,000 prisoners. In Palestine and Mesopotamia about 400,000 British troops on an average throughout 1918 were fighting, and the complete defeat and destruction of the Turkish army was effected by the British alone, and a total of 85,000 prisoners taken.

TOTAL OF TROOPS FROM BRITISH EMPIRE EMPLOYED IN WAR.

British Isles	5,704,416
Canada	640,886
Australia	416,809
New Zealand	220,099
South Africa	136,070
India	1,401,350
*Other colonies	134,837
Total	8,654,467

*Includes colored troops recruited from Africa, West Indies, etc.

TOTAL CASUALTIES.

	Approx. killed, died of wounds. Died.	Approx. missing and prisoners.	Wound.
Br. Isles	662,083	140,312	1,644,786
Canada	56,119	306	149,733
Australia	58,450	164	152,100
N. Zealand	16,132	5	40,749

India	47,746	871	65,123
*Others	3,649	366	3,504
	851,117	142,057	2,067,442

*Includes colored troops from South Africa, etc., but excludes 44,262 African native followers — that is, died and killed, 42,218; wounded, 1,322; missing, 622. The deaths were due mainly to epidemics.

Official figures made public January 26, 1919, by Gen. March in Washington showed that on November 11 the United States was represented on the Western front by 1,950,100 men. France, on November 1, the last day for which official figures were available, had 2,550,000 men. The British and the Portuguese attached to the British army totaled 1,718,000, while the Belgian and Italian forces on the Western front aggregated about 200,000. These totals are all based upon what is termed the ration strength. This includes every soldier who has to be fed, both combatants and the necessary medical and supply organizations. Gen. March made no specific mention of bayonet strength, as referred to by the British.

Rat Hunt is on Again.

The people of the United Kingdom, young and old, have embarked on another vigorous campaign against rats with the beginning of the new year, under the provisions of the Rat and Mice Act. This law compels the occupants of land to keep their premises free of these rodents, a penalty of £5 being provided for failure to do so. The law applies also to ships in port.

FARM WORKERS WILL FLOCK TO CANADA

THAT IS OPINION OF COMMISSIONER LAMB OF THE SALVATION ARMY

Commissioner Lamb, of the Salvation Army, has just returned from England. He foresees a big emigration shortly of agricultural workers. He states that Canada should be very careful not to erect artificial barriers against them. He says that Canada should not miss her oportunity of obtaining the best possible class of immigrants from the British Isles. The population of the British Isles is overflowing. If Canada is to get her share of the type of immigrants that is wanted here some of the barriers which now stand in the way, will have to be lowered.

More Women Leaving

"The chief features of the new emigration movement will be increased numbers of women. Among the younger men, a greater proportion than formerly of those who (before the war- had been following sedentary occupations will come. The fact that the latter came through the war proved that they were not unfit. But there had been a tendency, on the part of the Canadian authorities in London, to discourage these men from coming to Canada."

Paid Own Fare

Commissioner Lamb states that when some of these men applied for passages under the British Government scheme for discharged ex-service men, they were referred to the Canadian Emigration Office for approval and were turned down. Nevertheless, by paying their own fares they were able to reach Canada $100 or so out of pocket.

Cannot Standardise Work.

"You can legislate for the mass but the work of migration cannot be standardised," he stated. He believed that, although the call to Canada was finding a ready response, the attraction to Australia and New Zealand was stronger than ever. These countries offer greater facilities in the shape of through passages to ex-service men.

THREE-FIFTH CLAUSE MAY BE RESTORED

TALK IN OTTAWA THAT CLAUSE WILL BE INSERTED IN REFERENDUM

Ottawa, Feb. 23. — During the coming session an attempt will be made to have the Canada Temperance Act amended so that prohibition will not go into effect in any Provincial area until a referendum on the question shows a three-fifths majority in favor of the bone-dry regime.

Not a Party Matter.

The Government, it is alleged, will not make it a party matter, and Unionists, Oppositionists and crossbenchers alike can express their real sentiments.

Manitoba has asked for a referendum under this act, and Alberta and Saskatchewan also want one. If the proposed amendment should carry it would have practically the effect of rendering the whole bill invalid, as Legislatures would not ask so quickly for referendums when it would be so difficult to pass them.

Mr. Spence's Attitude.

Commencing on the announcement that an effort would be made to pass a three-fifths clause in the Dominion Parliament, Rev. Ben Spence, Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, said last night:

"I think if the Dominion Parliament has gone absolutely and utterly crazy it will pass a little more liquor-favoring legislation. If the members are wise they will pass some string temperance measures. What they need to do is to make the temperance laws of Canada stronger instead of weaker. I think it is an outrage upon modern civilization that the Government should have allowed war-time prohibition to be repealed without substituting something really worth while in its stead."

May Be of No Use.

Mr. Spence pointed that the three-fifths clause was on Bill 26, "and Bill 26," he said, "is the bill which some lawyers say is no good anyway. It is a matter of dispute as to whether it is of any use.

"Any Government of any country or Province that passes reactionary temperance legislation is politically doomed, and it deserves it."

TO STOP PILFERING FROM FREIGHT CARS

C. P. R. SECURES CONVICTION OF NUMBER OF SUCH THIEVES

In view of considerable losses incurred through pilfering and careless handling of goods in transit, losses which amount in a year to close on three million dollars, the Canadian railways have recently been conducting an active campaign against such robberies, not only in their own interests, but also to protect the merchants and shippers who naturally suffer great inconvenience, even though the losses may be made good. The loss of portions of a shipment frequently renders the balance of a shipment useless or depreciates its value, and affects the business of the merchant.

As a result of this campaign, the C. P. R., for instance, have recently brought into court and secured convictions against several offenders. Thus at Ottawa, Ambrose Nilks, a teamster of a transport company, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for breaking into a freight car and stealing a case of gin, while at McAdam Junction three men were condemned to five years' penitentiary, two years penitentiary and four years reformatory, respectively, for a series of thefts from freight cars involving many consignments of considerable value.

The subject of pilfering on railways has been taken up in England by the National Union of Railwaymen, which has recently circularized its branches, pointing out the moral obligation that devolves upon them to check the practice and help to remove the stigma which threatens their prestige. The branches have responded very favorably to this appeal, with beneficial results

CARS FRIGHTEN HORSES.

Sides of Autos Must Not Be Allowed to Flap in Breeze.

Complaints have been made that drivers of trucks and cars in the city have been allowing their sides to hang loose and flap in the wind with serious results to cutters and other horse driven vehicles. This danger became very apparent on Saturday when two serious runaways were narrowly averted, the cause in each case being the flapping sides of a car. Chief Thompson stated that this was a breach of the Motor Vehicles Act, and that if the charge was brought home to anyone they would be dealt with under the act.

SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT.

As Planned for Guelph Will Cost About $30,000.

Guelph, Feb. 23.—The tender for the construction of a new sewage disposal plant, to be put in during the coming summer, was awarded to P. H. Secord & Sons of this city. They will receive $3000 in excess of the actual cost of construction. It is estimated that the total cost will be abont $30,000.

FIRST CASE IS HEARD UNDER NEW STATUTE

LAW IS DESIGNED TO PREVENT CHILDREN LIVING IN IMMORAL SURROUNDINGS

The first case in the local Police Conrt under the new Act by which the Children's Aid Society is empowered to prosecute anyone who commits immorality in the home of a child under 16 thereby rendering the home an unfit place for the child to live in.

Wm. Foustaine, a Ukrainian, was charged under the above Act by Mr. G. W. Powell, agent of the Children's Aid Society in Peterborough. Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton prosecuted and the prisoner was defended by Mr. J. F. Strickland.

Mr. Powell stated that he had no conversation with the prisoner directly but was present when the chief of police interrogated the accused. The prisoner was warned that anything that he said would be used in evidence against him and while he did not answer to this he seemed to understand.

The chief asked him if he was living with this woman, Marie Buechnck, as her husband. Prisoner replied "yes." The chief then asked him if the little girl was sleeping in the same bed with them and the prisoner replied "yes." The chief then asked where the two boys in the family slept and he said in the other room.

Chief Thompson then entered the witness box. On the day in question the witness stated that the prisoner and Mrs. Buechnck were brought to the police station, the woman being held on a charge of theft. He held a conversation with the accused after having properly warned him. The conversation, as related by the chief was the same as given by Mr. Powell except that the accused had stated to the chief that he told the landlord of the house the woman was his wife. The prisoner had not concealed anything but was ready to answer all questions. He did not appear to know that he was committing a breach of the law. The accused had not been charged when the conversation took place.

Detective Meagher said that the ages of the boys were 9 and 11 and the girl runs between 5 and 6. He saw the premises consisting of three rooms upstairs on the same flat. He went there at about 10.30 on the morning and found the accused in bed in the middle room with the little girl and Mrs. Buechnck was in the kitchen.

Mr. Strickland, for the defence, called no witnesses but submitted that the Crown had made no case.

On the request of the Crown Attorney the Magistrate reserved his judgment until tomorrow morning to give the case his full consideration.

Melka Buechuck, who was charged with theft by her husband on Saturday, was let go on suspended sentence. At first she steadfastly refused to return to her husband, but when she discovered that it was a choice between that and imprisonment, she began to listen to reason and finally agreed to go back with him.

Belleville's New School Plans Have Been Accepted by Board.

Belleville, Feb. 23.—The Board of Education of this city has approved of sketch plans prepared by Beaumont Jarvis of Toronto for a new ten-room school in this city to cost upwards of $100,000. It is expected that the work on the building will be commenced in early spring. It is also proposed by the Board to secure a considerable sum from the Council for the erection of a Collegiate Institute.

CURFEW FOR WOODSTOCK.

Boys and Girls Must Be Off Streets at Reasonable Hour.

Woodstock, Feb. 23.—The Woodstock branch of the National Council of Women are on the initiative to keep the boys and girls of Woodstock in their homes at a reasonable time in the evening. The local branch of the council favors the enforcement of the curfew law in the city, and also the appointing of two women patrols to see that the rule is observed. The local council are also determined to pay closer attention to the educational affairs of the city.

PRESIDENT'S NOTE TO BE MADE PUBLIC

AS SOON AS CABLED COPY IS IN HANDS OF THE ALLIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 23.—Notes exchanged between the United States and the Entente powers on the Adriatic question will be made public by President Wilson within a few days, it was stated today officially. The publications, it is understood, will be made with the consent of the British and French Governments.

It is expected that the notes will be published as soon as the President's latest reply to the Entente premiers is delivered. A completed draft of this note was to be sent to Mr. Wilson today by the State Department for his final approval and the officials hoped to have it on the cables tonight.

A WARNING TO AUTOISTS

Many Owners of Cars Have Failed to Renew Licenses.

The 1920 automobile licenses have been in the city for over a month now, and yet there are still many who are driving cars under the 1919 licenses. The Chief of Police called attention to this fact today and said that he intended taking immediate action against the offenders. It is generally urged in defence of this practice that the new licenses are difficult to obtain, but this cannot be used as an excuse this year as there are lots of the new number plates in stock.

EVEN WORSE IN OTHER PLACES

What it Costs to Live in Some Cities of Ontario.

Peterborough housewives have at least something to be thankful for. Reports from other cities indicate that the price of eggs instead of going down as in the case of this city, is increasing. Toronto reports that eggs there are a dollar a dozen and in Hamilton prices range from 95c to a dollar, while the price here is 70 cents. Potatoes are also reported as being higher in other cities than in Peterborough and in Hamilton people are paying $4.25 a bag and glad to get them at that price. In Toronto potatoes are being quoted at $4.25 wholesale, while in St. Thomas they go one better and charge $4.50.

ABOLISH STONE PILE AT PENITENTIARY

AND DOMINION INSPECTOR ALSO FAVORS USE OF TOBACCO BY PRISONERS.

Ottawa, Feb. 23.—The abolition of the stone pile in Canadian penitentiaries is strongly advocated by W. S. Hughes, Dominion superintendent, in his report of the last fiscal year to the Minister of Justice, Hon. C. J. Doherty. "Nothing ever written regarding the 'stone pile' was to my mind sufficiently severe," he affirms, "and I never look at the men at this work that I do not wish I could place those responsible in their places."

Superintendent Hughes also advocates employment for every man in useful work, and a small wage which, in the case of married men, would be turned over to their families, and for single men would be held to give them a new start upon their release.

The report deprecates the theory of "criminal types" among the men sent to penitentiaries.

"Because the man commits one bad act, we have no right to say he is a bad man, any more than a man who does one good act should be considered a good man," is Superintendent Hughes' terse way of expressing it.

The old question of tobacco for the prisoners is again dealt with. Mr. Hughes states that the majority of wardens and chaplains advocate a small weekly ration, and he suggests that if the men were paid they would be in a position to purchase their own smoking material.

The number of convicts in the penitentiaries at the close of the fiscal year was 1,689, compared with 1,465 at the close of the previous year.

FARMERS AND LABOR TO SWEEP COUNTY NEXT ELECTION

U. F. O. ORGANIZER IN TORONTO ADDRESS DENOUNCES MIDDLEMEN AS PROFITEERS.

Toronto, Feb. 23.— The only remedy that will prevent a recurrance of hard times, more severe than anything previously experienced in Canada, will be the enactment of legislation to provide for the taxing of unearned increments of excess profits, large salaries and of large inheritances, said Mr. A. A. Powers, U. F. O. organizer, at a meeting of the Independent Labor Party at the Labor Temple yesterday afternoon. The speaker was in a very pessimistic mood and predicted a gloomy time for artisans and agriculturists alike unless drastic measures were adopted immediately to induce more people to return to the land and to provide them with an opportunity to farm a at profit. At present they heard a great deal of the work of various commissions in exposing profiteers, but all the investigations were a joke, because no action was taken to stop the nefarious business. Then there was the great campaigns to stimulate production and all the time production was decreasing simply because the governments would not change conditions on the farms. It was no use fixing prices for farm or other produce if the middlemen were allowed to go free. Under present conditions the middlemen obtained for their questionable services as much money as the farmer obtained for his produce. Mr. Powers cited milk to illustrate his point, declaring the profits charged by the middlemen to the consumers were almost equal to the amount paid the farmer for the milk. Cheese was sold cheaper in Great Britain than in Canada for the same reason despite the fact that it had to compete with the home-made article. No country in the world said Mr. Powers, was so plagued with the curse of speculation as Canada. One hundred and ten million acres of land was kept out of cultivation by speculators and exploiters. Thirty years ago the agricultural population of the Dominion was 40 per cent. of the whole, now it was less than 30 per cent. and ten years hence it would dwindle to 15 per cent. or less. The urban population, which is 1881, was only 14 per cent. of the whole, was now over 41 per cent. He concluded his address with the prediction that a Dominion election would take place in the near future, when the present Government and its followers would be swept from power and their places would be taken by U.F.O. and Labor men.

WANT HEARST PAPERS BANNED FROM CANADA

ST. THOMAS VETERANS ALSO ASK GOVT. TO SUPPRESS STATESMAN.

St. Thomas, Feb. 23. — The St Thomas branch of the Great War Veterans' Association adopted a resolution strongly opposing the introduction of Hearst publications into Canada, and unanimously requesting the Government to ban these publications and also to suppress The Statesman.

Another notable resolution passed by the Veterans was one petitioning the Government to take immediate steps to conserve Canada's timber reserves, either by an embargo or by prohibitive export duties, and urging that a greater effort be made to carry out the work of restoration in order that enormous quantities of of timber now being cut may be replaced by new growth.

The Veterans' action was the direct result of recent reports from the forestry centres, showing that 85 per cent. of the timber cut in Canada is being shipped to the United States. They protested that this wholesale monopoly was clearly a result of a selfish motion on the part of the United States to conserve its own timber with the view of holding it for higher prices. The fact that the lumber was bought at a discount of 15 to 18 per cent. through the unfavorable exchange rates, also figured in the G. W. V. A. protest.

MRS. BRODIE MISSED TRAIN

Large Gathering of Farm Women at Board of Trade Rooms.

The large gathering of women who assembled in the Board of Trade rooms at 3 o'clock this afternoon, were disappointed to hear that Mrs. Brodie had missed her train by the short space of five minutes. However, Mrs. Brodie will take the next train and is expected to arrive in the city about five o'clock. She will speak at the banquet in the Great War Veterans' hall this evening.

FEDERAL TROOPS ARE AFTER MOONSHINERS

OVER ONE THOUSAND ILLICIT STILLS SAID TO BE OPERATING IN MICHIGAN.

Chicago, Feb. 23.— Whether Federal troops will be sent into northern Michigan to enforce prohibition, was expected to be determined at a conference here between Attorney-General Palmer and Major Dalrymple, Federal Prohibition Enforcement Officer for the Middle West States.

Major Dalrymple said he has received reports that about 1,000 stills are in operation in northern Michigan, and local officials show no disposition to enforce the law. On the contrary, he charged the local authorities were upholding moonshine operations.

TO GIVE HIGHER PRIZES FOR HORSES AND CATTLE

POULTRY EXHIBITORS WILL BE ALLOWED INCREASED AMOUNTS NEXT FALL.

The Industrial Exhibition Committee meeting which was held at the Board oif Trade rooms on Saturday afternoon was well attended, there being most of the members of the Board of Trade present. President R Denne occupied the chair. The most important business of the afternoon was the revising of the prize lists for the annual exhibition next September and indeed this work was lengthy and took up the greater part of the afternoon itself. The value of prizes were greatly increased the total amount allowed for this purpose being increased by about $800. The greater part of the increase was for horses and cattle but poultry also figured to a large extent. In the poultry classes it was decided to add a fourth prize in all clases where there were more than six entries and to increase the value of the first, second and third prizes also.

Slight changes were also made in the arrangement of the prize list.

CAN OBTAIN FILM OF INSIDE HUMAN BODY

TWO FRENCH SCIENTISTS ARE SAID TO HAVE WONDERFUL INVENTION.

Paris, Feb. 23.—By a combination of Xrays and the "movie" camera two French scientists, Drs. Lormon and Comandon, have perfected an apparatus by which it is possible to obtain films revealing the inside of the animal body fully working.

The slightest details, such as the beating of the heart, operation of the digestive organs and the working of the lungs are accurateoly reflected on the screen. Most of the experiments thus far have been made with large dogs. No tests have yet been made with the human body owing to the difficulty of applying the X-rays in conjunction with the film photography. However, the inventors assert they are confident they will solve this problem before long.

RAILWAY MEN DEMAND a LARGE WAGE INCREASE

SCHEDULE, IF ACCEPTED, WILL INVOLVE EXPENDITURE OF $1,200,000.

A demand for wage inceases which would approximate $1,200,000 if the schedule is accepted by the company without alteration, is to be presented today by the wage committee of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Emploes to General Superintendent Bowker of the G. T. R. on behalf of three thousand employes of the company in Ontario and Quebec.

President Moshier of the Canadian Brotherhood, which is an organization distinct from the International Brotherhood, presiedd over a meeting of representatives of local unions from London to Sherbrooke, which was held on Saturday in the Elliott House, Toronto.

"There are three thousand members in our organization. It embraces clerks, freight handlers, station and motive power employes and similar help. Their wages at the present time range from $50 a month for apprentices to $200 a month for chief clerks in the general offices." said Mr. Moshier. "We are asking for a minimum wage of $90 a month and a wage of $300 a month for chief clerks. Our demand means a general advance of $25 a month."

Mr. Moshier stated that the conference had been sought by the brotherhood for some time and had been finally arranged for today. George S. Gregory of St. Thomas would act as chairman of the committee of which [illegible] secretary.

CHEESE FACTORY MEN IN CONFERENCE TODAY

LARGELY ATTENDED MEETING IN SESSION IN SONS OF ENGLAND HALL

A meeting of delegates from the different cooperative cheese factories in this part of the province is being held this afternoon in the S.O.E. hall for the purpose of taking action with regard to an amalgamation of all these factories into one huge co-operative concern. There was a very large attendance and some of the prominent speakers for the occasion are Messrs. E. H. Stonehouse and H. B. Cowan. Mr. Cowan is chairman of the Provisional Board of Directors of the company, being formed for the purpose of taking over these industries. Mr. W. G. Andegson was in the chair.

Mr. Cowan, who was the first speaker and who was still speaking at the time of going to press, outlined the methods to be adopted and the reasons and advantages of the proposed merger. He stated that all papers were now in order and that the charter was ready to be presented to the Government, but before taking this step, it was advisable to know just how many factories were going to go on with the proposition. He said that the Provisional Board was anxious to have at least 25 or 30 factories in the amalgamation before placing the charter before the Government. So far the reception had been very encouraging. He detailed the success which had been achieved at different places, mentioning that up to the present about 12 or 13 factories had definitely decided to go on with the merger and had appointed their own valuators to set a valuation on their factory. The feeling was growing rapidly all over the country and many people were amazed at the strength of the movement. At a big meeting at Madoc, which is to be held this week, big results are expected to accrue from it. In conclusion, Mr. Cowan drew attention to the splendid support which they were receiving from all the banks which were rendering great assistance to the movement.

In STUPOR FOR WEEKS

And Another Montreal Man Asleep for Six Days.

Montreal, Feb. 23.—Although the Board of Health states that no cases of sleeping sickness have been reported to it, it is known that there are several such cases in the city. One is the son of a prominent real estate agent, who has been lying in a sort of stupor for weeks, and is only now beginning to show signs of returning to his normal condition. His sight has been affected, and he is almost blind. Another case is that of a man who has been asleep for the past six days, just regaining consciousness yesterday.

Steam and Gas.

True dry superheated steam has every property of a true gas save one—it is not permanent. When heat disappears what appeared to be gas then becomes water. Heat oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen as hot as possible in an expansion container and they will become rare, occupy more space, but allow the heat to vanish and the gases will resume their original temperature volumes. Freeze these gases down to liquid or solid, when the cold is so intense that it cannot be imagined. Restore the heat and the solids or liquids will be gases again—that is, they are permanent gases at terrestrial temperatures. But steam is not permanent at these temperatures and is therefore a vapor of water.—New York American.

Walking for Pleasure.

The old-fashioned person who used to walk mile after mile on pleasant Sunday afternoons through the countryside has practically disappeared. This is the inevitable conclusion drawn by anyone who still pursues this ancient pastime and who has spent Sunday after Sunday drifting by foot over macadam and dirt roads frequented only by automobiles and an occasional farm hand traveling to a neighbor's.

Walking for the sake of the walk has nearly passed out, along with the one-horse rig, the glass incased artificial flowers in the parlor and plush covered furniture. It had its day before the bicycle and the automobile, and with the advent of these quicker, easier means of transportation it dropped from the human scheme of things with a dull thud.

And yet a hike through the country is good for body and soul. It gives the body a workout that is bound to be beneficial, it exercises muscles that are all too seldom used nowadays, and it gives an opportunity of really seeing the beautiful country instead of hurrying through at 40 miles an hour and [illegible] that you've seen trees and shrubbery. MARRIAGE A LA UNCLE SAM.

Divorces Are on the Increase in the United States.

The latest report of the National Census Bureau of the United States once more discloses not only an increase in the ratio of divorce to marriage, but in the ratio of divorce to growth of population—112 divorces to every 100,000 people in 1916, as against 84 in 1906 and 73 in 1900.

There were 112,036 divorces granted in the United States in 1916, concerning 108,702 of which these are exact statistics; of these 39,990, more than a third, were for desertion, with cruelty second, the two combined accounting for very nearly two-thirds (63.1 per cent.) of all the divorces granted in that year, adultery figuring far behind, and drunkenness lagging in the rear. While these causes, says Robert Grant in Scribner's, preserve the same order as in the two previous censuses of twenty years apart and are deceptive so far as they may sometimes conceal the real reason for separation, they serve notice on their face that one or the other spouse had wearied of the association—a decision the social morality of which rests on the individual [illegible].

Once more, too, it appears that the proportion of divorces granted to the wife in comparison with the husband has not stood still, the 66.6 per cent. determined by the 20-year investigation from 1887 to 1906 having risen to [illegible] per cent. of the whole. While a portion of this discrepancy between the sexes is explicable on the ground that the wife has a legal [illegible] for divorce more frequently than the husband, and that certain grievances such as failure to support and cruelty are more peculiar to the wife, the assumption that married life in the United States continues to be purer than elsewhere in the world must face the dual knowledge that more people continue to obtain divorces in the United States than ever before and that a larger number of the applicants are women.

Hindenburg's Writings.

Field Marshal von Hindenburg bids fair to become a millionaire from his writings, according to the new Berlin Gazette. It is reported that he has sold some of his works in America for $12,000, which, at present exchange, would amount to about 2,000,000 marks.

Chinese Dentists.

The only dentists of China used to pull teeth with their fingers. They practiced by pulling pegs from a wooden board until they had a grip with a lifting power of 300 or 400 pounds.

A Nabob.

"Rich as a nabob," is an expression not infrequently heard, but why a "nabob" should thus be associated with wealth and who he was precisely is not so generally known. Under the great moguls the provinces of India were administered by deputies known by the designation of "nawab," who commonly amassed much money and lived in great splendor. The office and the title continued under British rule in the orient, but gradually the word became corrupted into "nabob" and was applied generally to all natives who had grown rich. More latterly it was bestowed—often in a derisive sense—upon Europeans who, having made large fortunes in India, returned home and spent their money in a luxurious and ostentatious way.—London Tatler.

The Colossus of Rhodes.

The gigantic Colossus of Rhodes was one of the seven wonders of the world. It was erected in honor of the sun by Chares of Lindus, a disciple of Lysippus, and was thrown down by an earthquake about 224 B. C. The figure stood upon two moles, a leg extended on each side of the harbor. A winding staircase led to the top of the figure, from out of the eyes of which were visible the coast of Syria and the ships sailing on the coast of Egypt. The colossi were the peculiar characteristic of eastern art and were of common occurrence, many of them being over sixty feet in height. The most celebrated is the statue of Memnon, on the plain of Thebes, described by the historian Strabo.

Widows' Caps.

The widow's cap is a survival of an old Roman custom. Widows were obliged to wear their weeds for ten months, and the bereaved woman shaved her head as a token of mourning. Naturally the widow could not very well appear in public with a bald head, so dainty caps were made in order to hide the disfigurement. The cap still remains, though the immediate necessity for its existence has long passed away.—Pearson's Weekly.

"A financial genius, my child, is a man who can spend money that he has never had and which the people who think they are getting it will never see."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Faulty English.

A slipshod use of English has been a favorite charge against American writers by their English cousins. The latest accusation is that we have gone so far as to force the English themselves to use our slang. But Dr. Rossiter Johnson has no difficulty in showing that even classic English writers are guilty of clumsy and incorrect usages. If this is the case with makers of English in the slow and careful process of book writing the critic should not be quite so captious concerning the slangy or faulty English that creeps into the American newspaper and periodical produced under a degree of pressure entirely foreign to a writer of books. Dr. Johnson ranges over the field of literature and shows by striking examples how Macaulay, Ruskin, De Quincey, Tennyson, Lecky, Thackeray, Hallam and many others have split their infinitives, separated verbs by modifying words put in the wrong place and dotted their writing with various awkward, ill contrived and ambiguous expressions.—Leslie's.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

KASPAR HAUSER.

Mystery That Excited Europe Ninety Years Ago.

For sheer strangeness the mystery of Kaspar Hauser, which a little less than a century ago was one which held the attention of all Europe, has probably never been surpassed. Dozens of extraordinary tales were invented, circulated, believed. Responsible writers advanced the theory that Kaspar Hauser was a son of the Grand Duke Charles of Baden, kidnapped by the Countess of Hochburg in order to secure the succession to the children of the Grand Duke Charles Frederick. Thousands pored over the "Almanach de Gotha" in order to endow the mysterious and afflicted being with illustrious birth.

One morning in May, 1828, in one of the streets of the old walled town of Nuremberg, there was found a youth of sixteen or seventeen years of age, dressed in peasant garb. He was dazed and mumbling incoherently. On his person was found a letter addressed to one of the town officials. This letter was apparently from an illiterate workman and related that the boy had been left in his care when an infant and brought up in the strictest seclusion.

Within the first letter there was another letter, purporting to be from the boy's mother, and bearing marks of crudity, saying that the lad's father had been an officer in a cavalary regiment. These explanations were dismissed as unsatisfactory on account of the youth's peculiar personality. His vocal organs were unimpaired yet he could not talk; the soles of his feet were convex and he could not walk. Sounds and the sight of the commonest objects terrified him. The ringing of a bell threw him into paroxysms of weeping, and the music of a street band caused him to swoon. He would eat only bread and water.

Under instruction he learned with extreme rapidity, and his own story, when he was able to tell it, heightened the mystery. According to this, as far back as he could remember he had always lived in a cage or a hole in the ground so small that the only way he could rest was sitting down with his feet stretched out in front. Until the morning of his discovery in Nuremburg he had never seen the sun or heard the sounds of the outer world. Two toy horses were the only objects of which he had any knowledge. Bread and water had been served to him by a person of whom he spoke as "the man." One night when he was sleeping "the man" had awakened him, taught him to stand, walk, had put shoes on his feet, and taken him to Nuremburg. It was a tale that roused wide interest. The boy was adopted by the authorities and placed under instructors, among them Prof. Daumer, who took him to his home, where thousands flocked to see the strange youth and hear the mysterious story.

In October, 1829, an interest that had been waning was fanned to new life. Daumer heard frightened cries coming from his protege's room and rushing in found Kaspar writhing on the floor with blood flowing from a wound in his head. His story was that "the man" had come with blackened face and stabbed him. It was impossible, however, to find any trace of the alleged assailant.

But in greater numbers curious crowds came from all parts of Europe to see Kaspar. An eccentric English nobleman, Lord Stanhope, adopted him and sent him to Anspach to be educated. But his early promise was not realized. He showed signs of intellectual degeneration. In December, 1833, came another strange attack, real or alleged. Kaspar staggered into Lord Stanhope's apartment in Anspach with blood dripping from a knife wound in his side. "Palace—Uzen monument—purse!" he gasped, and then fell to the floor, dead.

Acting upon the clue, Lord Stanhope went to the Uzen monument in the palace grounds and there found a purse of violet colored silk containing a slip of paper on which had been scrawled: "Kaspar Hauser, born April 30, 1812., Murdered December 14, 1833. Know by this that I come from the Bavarian frontier by the river. These are the initials of my name, M.L.B." A reward of five thousand florins offered for the apprehension of the assassin by Lord Stanhope led to nothing. People had grown sceptical, and the belief was general that the wound had been self-inflicted, though the youth had not counted on its proving mortal.

Marvelous Coincidence.

The following story was told by a famous New York wit recently: A party of skaters were once progressing at considerable speed down a certain frozen river in Canada when, to the horror of his companions, one of the party was seen to skate straight into a hole in the ice. Before he could stop himself he had fallen through it, and the sharp edge of the ice cut his head clean off his shoulders. The speed at which he was going, however, caused his head to skim along the top of the ice, while the rest of his body traveled at an equal speed beneath it, until, by a stroke of good luck, the severed portions met at another hole farther down and joined so exactly that the unfortunate man came out of his accident with nothing worse than a severe cold.—London Strand.

"Dear Eleanor"

By OTILLIA FRANCES PFEIFFER

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

"Dear Eleanor" everybody called her, if not to her face, at least behind her back, and the latter was the surest proof of her popularity. She was a bright faced, smiling girl, but just as ready to share and console in the troubles of others as to become a partner in their joys. Adaptability was the secret of her rare magnetic influence, and Vance Dunbar felt that he had acquired a precious prize when she consented to become his wife.

"You don't know what you are going to," said a friend of Eleanor Tyrrell, a week before wedding. "I have a relative living near the Dunbar house of which Gerald's mother is the mistress. They say it is a dismal, forbidding place. And as to your prospective mother-in-law, I hear she is a stern, antiquated, self willed woman of the old time school."

But winsome Eleanor kept the same sunny smile on her face she always wore. "Yes," she nodded, "that may all be, but haven't I got Vance?"

So the girl who kept a town lively with her wit and pleasantness refused to think of the barren prospect outlined. Eleanor it was who had written a relative when he announced a visit: "It will be glorious to see you again, dear uncle, and I will meet you at the station on your arrival. But I might not recognize you after all these years, and so I think that for purposes of identification it would be best for you to hold a long string of pearls in one hand and a bit of fur—say an ermine lined stole—in the other." Her spirits were not to be dashed, therefore, and if in her new life she could not draw on her mutual fund of fun and vivacity, she could find some way to win over a crabbed, selfish old woman or patiently learn her ways and follow them—for the sake of Vance.

She confessed to a sentiment of desolation as she and Vance reached the home of his mother. It seemed to step out of an old fashioned picture. Ten days dust had settled on the keys of the parlor organ. The stereoscope lenses were sadly in need of polishing and spider webs criss-crossed the basket of cathedral interior views. The five cruets of the dining room table were empty, and the portraits on the wall looked as if they needed their faces washed.

"I find mother has been away at her sister's for over a week," remarked Vance. "It is not her way to neglect the house. You see, our coming a week earlier than we arranged has caught her unawares."

Next day Mrs. Dunbar arrived and Eleanor's martyrdom commenced just as her school friend had predicted.

The grim, set face of the elder woman, the sharp, mandatory accents of her voice chilled and depressed Eleanor, and the latter wondered if there was any use of hoping that beneath the rough surface lurked some sentiments of human emotion.

"I don't believe in new jimcracks, son," observed Mrs. Dunbar crisply as Vance introduced into the house a Morris chair. "I'm not encouraging your wife in the cooking line, either. Things are dear, a hard winter is coming on and the closer we keep to plain hog and hominy the surer we'll be in pulling through." But there was a good deal of fiction about all this, for Mrs. Dunbar had a surplus at bank and had acquired recently a modern residence in the village.

Vance admired while he pitied Eleanor. Silently, patiently she bent to the iron rule of her husband's mother. She made no complaint as the winter came on and there was shivering in every part of the house. It nearly broke Eleanor's tender heart to be deprived of putting to practical experiment her knowledge acquired in a course of scientific cookery. Then fate intervened to change things. Mrs. Dunbar slipped on the ice in the yard one morning and for the first time in her life was flat on her back in a sick bed. The doctor announced a full three months' confinement with a broken limb and the draughty, half heated condition and general discomforts of the old house began to force themselves upon Mrs. Dunbar's consciousness.

Cook, nurse, housekeeper, how Eleanor strove to become all three in model perfection! Within a week she had won her mother-in-law to all kinds of dainties in the way of desserts, and the day she lifted the invalid to the Morris chair the old lady sank into its depths with a resigned sigh of perfect peace and comfort. Mrs. Dunbar began to appreciate the comfort of luxury and realize that she was growing old, but with a young, capable assistant who knew more than she did about the joys of living.

"It isn't right for Eleanor," she spoke to her son one day. "The house is getting too old to keep out the winter chill, and a clever young housekeeper like she is deserves a more convenient home. It is easier to lease the farm than the town house, and I think we'd better move. And say, Vance, the old melodeon is getting cracked and hoarse, and we might sell it and the old furniture and get new. And let Eleanor pick out the furnishings for the new house—your home and hers."

Keep Healthy With Good Exercise

JAKE SOLOMAN, Proprietor

Chinese Are Very Thrifty

NUMEROUS things which are not worthy of consideration by peoples of other nations are being turned into good use by the people of China, and the ingeniousness in utilizing things of no value whatsoever is shown by scavengers who collect peachstones in the street. Children and women are to be seen in the markets picking up and treasuring the peachstones. In the months of May, June and July the women and children of the poorer class appear in groups carrying baskets home when filled.

These peachstones have several uses. Broken into pieces and dried in the sun they will furnish good fuel. But the kernel, which has a good market value, is being sold to the native druggists for making medicine. Another profitable use of the peachstones is by selling to native artists or engravers, who carve them in different forms of animals. Some of the large stones, however, if round enough, are carved into finger rings, which cost between 20 and 30 cents each. Out of one full basket of peachstones 10 to 15 can be selected suitable for engravers and they will be sold at a cent each, thus turning waste material into a good profit.

During the season one may see in the interior of South China the hutyards of poor people full of peachstones drying in the sun. After having cleaned them groups of small girls and boys pick out the big stones. The smaller ones are broken up and used for fuel when the kernel has been taken out. Sometimes the kernels are sold to chemists or druggists; they are preserved in bottles and used as a good cough medicine after the kernels are turned into white powder. In many small villages this white powder is a very popular, convenient and cheap medicine for the poor people as a remedy for cough.

Another waste material put to use by Chinese in different towns of each province are oyster shells. They are in great demand for the manufacture of Chinese lime. One picul of such shells (about 133 pounds) cost approximately 60 or 80 cents. In many towns where there are many Chinese restaurants one will see scavengers packing shells of this kind into bamboo cases. In the front corner of Chinese houses in villages, especially those near coast cities big baskets are always seen; they are put there by scavengers as refuse boxes.

When full, they will pick out fish shells and even broken potteryware, for everything has a market value in China. The broken bowls and cracked potteryware is broken into small particles and afterward sold to masons for making foundation of strong walls after being mixed with cement. Many pretty houses in big seaports such as Shanghai, Canton, Foochow, etc., have the walls made of broken potteryware mixed with cement. One hundred catties cost about 50 cents, which means the upkeep for two days of a poor family. In big towns there are hundreds of such scavengers who make a living upon the collections of the waste materials.

Another interesting collection of waste material in Shanghai alone has brought not a small amount of money to many poor children and women, and this is the collection of cigarette ends. After filling a tin of about two inches in diameter and four inches deep it is brought to a foreign or native tobacco factory which will buy it for five or seven cents. The tobacco factory will remanufacture it into cigarettes and thus make a good profit out of the material, which it buys at a cheap price.

So far as the frugality of the Chinese is concerned nothing is wasted in China and even the dirt of the street costs money when it is carried to a farmyard where farmers will buy it and turn it into fertilizer. Prices of dirt vary in their kinds and the ash of burning wood from a cooking stove of a Chinese family has a good value. It brings a good amount of [illegible] money to the house-boy of a big Chinese family who sells it to gardeners for fertilizing flower plants. When a [illegible] [illegible] is heard the house-boy seems to understand that an ash-buyer has come; immediately a big quantity of kitchen dirt and stove ash, which he has stored up is brought to the buyer. Thirty pounds of the waste material of this kind cost about 10 to 15 cents.

During the last few years the demand of waste foreign magazines, pamphlets, newspapers, etc., has been exceedingly great among the hawkers who buy different kinds of very old foreign magazines nearly at one-third of what they cost originally. Their use probably is to make soles for sandals for the poorer classes of Chinese to wear in place of shoes in good weather. If the waste magazines contain some war pictures they will be applied to better use than making of sandal-soles. These people are too poor to get themselves educated and they do not know how to read and write and the best way for them to get some knowledge of the world affairs seems to be through the medium of the pictures in some foreign magazines. Many scavengers buy such things from the house-boy of some foreign residents.

A Speedy Typist.

What is claimed to be the world's record for long endurance in speed typing was achieved by Arthur Hanrahan, Toronto, at the enquiry into military accounts held recently in St. Catharines. At this enquiry Hanrahan wrote to the dictation of Thomas Bengough, Toronto's veteran court reporter, at a speed of over seventy words a minute for six hours, completing in that time ninety-four foolscap pages containing 300 words each. Deducting time lost in adjusting the paper, inserting and removing it from the machine, the net speed figures out at about 100 words a minute.

Some idea of Hanrahan's speed may be gleaned from the fact that it is considered a good day's work for a fast typist to write sixty sheets of foolscap, allowing eight hours to the day, whereas in six hours Hanrahan completed ninety-four pages.

Hanrahan, who is not yet twenty-two years old, is the holder of seven medals for fast typing. In 1916 he won the Canadian championship for speed, when he averaged 105 words a minute for a period of half an hour, and this record has not yet been wrested from him; he is also the Canadian champion in accuracy. Writing for a period of half an hour he recently established another record of 126 words a minute, and on occasions hit up 260 words in two minutes.

Locating a Broken Wire

When a telegraph wire is broken or damaged, say, several hundred miles away, how does the operator, sitting in his office, know exactly where the accident occurred?

The explanation is simple. It requires, as every one knows, considerable force to send electricity through a wire. The longer the wire the greater, of course, must be the force required. This force is measured in units, called by electricians "ohms." Let us suppose that a wire between a New York office and a point 150 miles away has broken somewhere. The telegrapher knows that when the wire was intact there were required, say, 2,100 ohms to facilitate the current, or fourteen ohms to the mile. He now finds that he can send a current with only 700 ohms. Dividing 700 by 14, he finds that the break in the wire is fifty miles from his end.—New York Tribune.

Contrasts in Mexico.

Perhaps nowhere else in the world is there a country so full of contrasts as Mexico. Here you will see a Mexican halfbreed barefooted wearing a dollar pair of trousers, a fifty cent shirt and a ten dollar sombrero. There at a single glance and within the length of a single city block you may see an Indian cargador, a donkey cart, an oxcart, a carriage, a railroad train, a street car and a motorcar—almost every type of locomotion since Adam. You may tread the burning sands of a tropical desert with a wet of perpetual snow of towering mountains still upon your shoes. You may take a single railway journey of thirty-six hours in which the people you see at the railroad station will be dressed in four different weights of clothing. Everywhere you turn there is contrast, high lights and deep shadows.—William Joseph Showalter in National Geographic Magazine.

Who Was the Iron Mask?

There is one satisfactory aspect to what is perhaps the greatest enigma in history, the mystery of the identity of the Man in the Iron Mask. It happened so long ago that the imagination is at perfect liberty to disregard all evidence connecting him with a person of minor interest and importance and enjoy full belief in the most romantic theories. Two hundred and twenty years have passed since the masked prisoner was brought to the Bastille from the islands of Sante-Marguerite, and a problem that has persisted so long in undiminished vigor deserves a better answer than a Bulonde or a De Marshiel, or a Count Mattioli.

If he had been any of these, why should he have been treated with such deference? Who was this man who was guarded with such secrecy, whose face was always covered with black velvet, and before whom even M. de Saint-Mars had to stand bareheaded? It was Voltaire, in his "Siecle de Louis XIV.," who first gave currency to the story, afterward delightfully perpetuated by Dumas in the "Vicomte de Bragelonne," that he was a twin brother of the Grand Monarch, whose existence was suppressed for reasons of state.

A still more extraordinary twist to the same tale was unearthed a few years ago by M. Funck-Brentano, according to which the mysterious prisoner was not only a son of Louis XIII. and Anne of Austria, but the direct ancestor of Napoleon Bonaparte. This curious legend had it that the Man in the Iron Mask, while in confinement on the island of Sainte-Marguerite, had been married to his jailer's daughter, and that there had been born to this union a son who was smuggled over to Corsica, where his foster parents were simply told that he "came from good part," which, being translated into Italian, gave him the surname "Bounaparte." The right of Napoleon to the throne of Saint Louis through the Man in the Iron Mask was something beyond even the dreams of Dumas.

Catfish Change Names.

Some catfish have been nosing around in the mud of the rivers to the north of Rio Janeiro for thirty-one years without knowing their right name. They supposed their name was "Steindachneria," under which they had been baptized by Carl H. Eigenmann and Rosa Smith Eigenmann in 1888. But G. Brown Goode has given this name to some other fish belonging to the aristocratic gadoid family of Macrurids. Confusion and correspondence ensued, until Prof. David Starr Jordan insisted that the catfish change their names. Therefore their sponsors have re-baptized them "Steindachneridion," and the catfish can now nose around in the mud of the Rio Jequitinhonha, the Rio Doce and the Rio Parahyba without fearing that the piscatorial mail intended for them may get carried out to sea and delivered to the Macrurids.

Two Kisses a Year Not Enough.

Having to start the fires in the morning, fetch the water from the pump, and then receive just two kisses during a year of married life, is not conductive to conjugal bliss, says Mrs. Blanche Geraldine Elliot, who asked separate maintenance, relates the Chicago Tribune. Her preacher husband, Clarence Michael Elliot, is accused of a number of other failings in the bill.

Elliott was a student at Emanuel Missionary College when first married. Visions disturbed his nightly repose and informed him that "his wife was untrue to him," so he deserted her, she charges. Later the college asked him to leave because of his marital difficulties, she says, and he agreed to live with her in order to remain.

Seasons Indoors.

There is nothing much more insidious in the whole net of habit that is always being wound about us than the growing claims of certain pieces of furniture to be used in certain ways. I do not mean to advocate a state of daily instability in one's surroundings, where nothing has a place of its own and you can never find a buffet or a coalbox when you want it. Still, to allow summer and winter to go by without any proper recognition within the house beyond stuffing a painted fan in the fireplace and sticking up a few muslin curtains is simply miserable.—London News.

The Matterhorn.

The Matterhorn, in the Swiss canton of Valais and Piedmont, rises to the altitude of 14,705 feet. In July of 1865 the highest peak was first scaled by a party of Englishmen, consisting of Lord Francis Douglas, the Rev. C. Hudson, Hadow and Whymper, with three guides, when the three first named and one of the guides were the first victims to fall into the icy precipice of the beautiful Matterhorn.

Where the Road is Water.

Writing of a tour of Holland, Arnold Bennett in the Century says:

"After a few weeks I began to perceive that Schiedam and similar places, though thrilling, were not the whole of Holland and perhaps not the most representative of Holland. As the yacht worked northward Holland seemed to grow more Dutch until in the chain of shallow lakes and channels that hold Friesland in a sort of permanent baptism we came to what was for me the ideal or celestial Holland—everything done by water, even grass cut under water, and black and white cows milked in the midst of ponds and windmills over the eternal flatness used exclusively to shift inconvenient water from one level to another. The road is water in Friesland, and all the world is on the road. If your approach to a town is made perilous by a succession of barges that will obstinately keep the middle of the channel you know that it is market day in that town and the farmers are rolling home in agreeable inebriation."

Kent and Burr.

James Kent, famous for his "Commentaries on American Law," was a great admirer of Alexander Hamilton, and when the great Federalist was killed by Aaron Burr in a duel be became the implacable enemy of the latter. One day long afterward when in New York the judge saw Burr on the opposite side of Nassau street. He went across the street as fast as his years would permit and, brandishing his cane in Burr's face, shouted:

Burr proved equal to the emergency. He raised his hat and bowed to the ground and then said in his calmest professional tone, "The opinions of the learned chancellor are always entitled to the highest consideration."

Easily Answered.

"I'm a little short and will propound to you a question in mental arithmetic."

"All right, go ahead."

"Well, suppose you had $10 in your pocket and I should ask you for $5, how much would remain?"

"Huh! Ten dollars."—Chicago News.

A Lesson to Learn.

Elephant and Tiger Enmity.

One of the most interesting employments of the elephant is in hunting tigers. From the lofty back of his elephant, at a height which, increased by the howdah, may be twelve or fourteen feet above the ground, the hunter can take his aim at a tiger with a coolness that he would not possess if facing the animal on terra firma. If, as sometimes occurs, the tiger makes a leap for the elephant he seldom succeeds in attaining the man in the howdah, although the driver in his exposed position on the elephant's neck, is in greater danger.

There seems to be a natural enmity between elephants and tigers, although an elephant will not attack a tiger unless cornered or compelled to do so by the tiger's own fault. But then a good fighting elephant will if he can once get his tusks to bear on his enemy gore him to death or literally crush him by kneeling on him. It is said that the mere presence of a dead tiger will drive some elephants to fury.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Odd Death Certificates.

Certificates of death are not documents where one usually seeks for humor, but there is frequently to be found in them much of the unconscious variety. Here, for instance, is how the cause of death is stated in the case of a laborer:

The consideration shown for the feelings of the bull is a fine touch and suggests grave questions on the moral responsibility of the lower animals.

Again, a man is stated to have "died from the effects of injuries received after being run over by a railway train in motion owing to a misunderstanding between deceased and an engine driver." This description of a rather ordinary railway casualty is excellent.—London Express.

The French Academy.

The French academy is one of the five academies and the most eminent constituting the Institute of France. It was founded in 1635 by Cardinal Richelieu and reorganized in 1816. It is composed of forty members, the new member elected by the remaining thirty-nine members for life after personal application and the submission of the nomination to the head of the state. It meets twice weekly and is "the highest authority on everything pertaining to the niceties of the French language—to grammar, rhetoric and poetry and the publication of the French classics." The chief officer is the secretary, who has a life tenure of his position. A chair in the academy is the highest ambition of most literary Frenchmen.

To Multiply by Division.

Everybody knows that learning the tens in the multiplication table is as easy as "pie" and that the fives are not much harder; but, slight as is the mental effort required in multiplying any number by five, it may be lessened still more by discarding the multiplier entirely and substituting a divisor instead. This may sound paradoxical, but by experimenting you will find that dividing by two will bring the same result as multiplying by five, provided you add a cipher to the quotient if the dividend be an even number or five if it be odd. For instance, if you multiply 2,734 by five the product is 13,670. What is still easier, divide 2,734 by two, which is done almost instantaneously; then tack on your naught and you have 13,670.

Where Women May Not Pray.

In some parts of the world the women are not even allowed to pray. Certain Hindu congregations deny their women this privilege, and among the Ainus women can pray only in very rare cases as the deputies of their husbands. The natives of Madagascar, however, stretch a point and permit their women to intercede with the powers of evil, but prayer to their supreme being is strictly a masculine prerogative.

Some German Taxes.

Among the curious taxes imposed in Germany on various objects are those on baby carriages, where the amount is 40 cents each and $1.50 tax on caged nightingales, of which there have not been any for many years, and tourists for whom the hotel keeper is taxed 2½ cents, which is added to the bill.

Old Civil Service Examination.

Lady Dorothy Nevill in one of her books gave an amusing example of the style of examination for posts in the British civil service which prevailed before the advent of the competitive system. The young candidate was ushered into the room of the old chief clerk of the department, and this ordeal followed:

"Sit down, sir," roared a voice of thunder. Then after a painful pause: "Now, sir, attention. I shall examine you in arithmetic."

"Shall I not have pen and paper?"

"No, sir," thundered out the tyrant voice. "Attention! How much are two and two?"

Paralyzed by the voice and sudden question, the youth stared and then gasped out quite seriously:

"Four, sir."

But the question surely should have been, "How many blue beans make five?"

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

VETERAN'S DENTAL CLINIC

All Returned Soldiers are Urged to Accept Opportunity

The attention of all Veterans is called to the fact that there is at present a dental clinic being held at the Great War Veterans' hall. Any person who has at any time been in the service of His Majesty can avail himself of this opportunity of getting his teeth put into shape. This is a wonderful chance and may be the means of saving local Veterans many dollars. If, however, the Veterans do not avail themselves of this opportunity there is a danger of this clinic being closed up and the chance gone for ever. In view of this fact, Secretary Whatley of the G.W.V.A. strongly urges every returned soldier to attend and get his teeth examined and let the dentist, Capt. McLean, decide what is necessary.

AVERTED FREEZING BY BURNING THEIR SLEIGH

DOCTOR'S PARTY FROM HAILEYBURY HAD PERILOUS JOURNEY IN TIMAGAMI

Haileybury, Feb. 23.— Dr. Arnold of Haileybury, who recently went to the Timagami district in responses to an urgent appeal to come to the assistance of the few Indian families scattered through that region, has returned to Haileybury, and declares that he found the situation serious.

In company with two nurses and a priest, the doctor's party left the railway in the early morning, and, after a trip lasting until four o'clock the following morning, reached their destination. The journey was but 25 miles distant into the wilderness and the party had two teams of horses at their command. In one sleigh were the four travellers, while in the other were provisions for the destitute Indians, who, owing to illness, had been unable to get food. The latter sleigh also carried a number of coffins.

On Timagami Lake heavy slush was encountered, lying between the heavy coating of snow and the ice. This resulted in one team playing out, and the abandonment of one of the sleighs. Later on, the second team played out, and the driver was compelled to abandon the second sleigh and its occupants. It was only by chopping the sleigh-box into fuel that Dr. Arnold was able to get a fire started so as to prevent himself and his companions from freezing. Several hours passed between the time the driver left and the return of Indians with two dog teams and toboggans, together with extra snowshoes. The priest was placed upon one toboggan, one nurse upon the other, while the doctor and another nurse travelled on snowshoes to their destination.

One nurse had remained, and will do what she can to prevent the further spread of the "flu" in that district. She will make known from time to time the requirements in the way of drugs and further assistance.

L. JOFFE, FORMERLY RUSSIAN JEW TELLS STORY OF HIS CONVERSION

Interesting Address Delivered at St. Paul's Church Last Night—Speaks in Murray Street Church Tomorrow Night on "The Fall of Russia"

Last night at St. Paul's a large audience heard a most wonderful story of the conversion of a young Jewish Rabbi to the Christian faith. The speaker is now engaged by the Upper Canadian Bible Society as a colporteur. He has travelled almost all over the world; speaks fluently fourteen languages and whatever his linguistic proclivities may be in other languages he certainly speaks English well. In fact, his vocabulary would do credit to any educated Canadian. He served in the late war. He has done his bit, but he shunned the idea of being made a hero.

He had merely done his duty to the country of his adoption, which he loves, because of its institutions, Christian laws and human liberty. If there is anything worth while fighting for or dying for, it is to uphold the integrity of the most Christian state in the world today, the British Empire.

He told his hearers how he had found his Saviour some nine years ago in smokey, murchy Pittsburg, U.S.A. and how wonderfully God had led him through the nine years of his Christian life. It was a story enough to cheer any heart. It made a wonderfully deep impression upon his audiences.

Mr. Joffe will repeat the sermon tonight at Murray Street Baptist Church, and he speaks on the ',Fall of Russia" at St. Paul's Presbyterian church on Tuesday night.

Mr. Joffe is the author of a book "The Fall of Russia," which was very favorably comented upon by the Canadian press. He invites questions at all his mid-week sermons. No matter what the questions may be, he will answer them most cordially. This has been his practice in all cities, and the people were greatly blessed by listening.

Mr. Joffe is a native of Russia and Russian is his native tongue, having been born in Russia and having been reared and educated there. He has a first-hand message from that unhappy land, and if he will only tell the story of the fall of Russia half as lucid and interesting as the story of his conversion last night, a splendid evening of enjoyment is assured to all those who hear him. More than likely Mr. Joffe will discuss on Tuesday night the burning question of the day: "Bolshevism." And so Peterboroians will have the opportunity of hearing an authority on that subject.

In his opening remarks last night he thanked Rev. R. Pogue for his prayer, that God might remove the blindness which has in part fallen upon Israel. He wished that every Jew in the world should have heard Mr Pogue pray. He thanked God for such men as he, who have cheered him on in all these nine years of his Christian experience.

UNDERTAKER ASKED $45 TO MOVE THE BODY OF VETERAN SHORT DISTANCE

Remains Had Just Arrived From France and Mother Could Not Pay Charges—Knights of Columbus Helped Her Out.

New York, Feb. 23.—A sad-faced little old lady stepped down the gang plank of the Fabre liner Britannia sono after that vessel docked at the foot of Thirty-first street, Brooklyn, and following the orders of the pier guards, walked over to the roped area where passengers whose names began with "D" were declaring their possessions to the customs inspectors. She took her place in line and presently it came her turn to be questioned.

To the customs inspector she handed a formidable looking document, which proved to be a special permit issued by the Navy Department to Mrs. Anne Devera, 1517 Turner avenue, Chicago, for the removal of the body of Seaman James Devera, of the navy, from Marseilles, France, to a Chicago cemetery. The permit showed that the young man was Mrs. Devera's son, that he had been mortally wounded in action at sea, treated in a base hospital ashore, and buried with honors in the cemetery n the French city.

So the inspector didn't trouble Mrs. Devera with many questions. He gave the contents of the tiny trunk a brief survey and closed the lid. Then he took the lone traveller by the arm and led her to the desk, where she had to sign the customs blanks.

Telephones to Undertaker.

She fixed her name to all of them, signing for the body and the trunk. Then, turning to the inspector, she asked his assistance in obtaining transportation for the coffin. He took her to a telephone booth and they selected the name of a Brooklyn undertaker at random. She called the number.

"You know my soldier son's body is inside the coffin," she said while waiting. "His is the first American body to be brought back from France. It took a lot of time to get the permits fixed up, because there never had been a precedent for what I felt I had to do. Down in Washington and in Chicago where I went to see the recruiting officer everybody was so nice to me it made it easier.

"The hardest part was saving up money enough to buy a ticket to New York and then to France. That took a long time. Jim and my other two sons were in the service a long time, and we didn't have much money when the war ended."

Just then the undertaker whose number had been called after being selected at random from those in the telephone directory, answered the call. Mrs. Devera told him what she wanted him to do.

"I want the coffin taken from here over to the Pennsylvan'a station in New York in time for the 2 o'clock train to Chicago tomorrow," she said. "It must go on the train with me."

There was a short pause. Then came the answer: "That will cost you $45."

Unable to Pay Charge.

"I could not pay that much," said the sailor's mother. The undertaker then banged the receiver back on its hook.

A dozen additional calls brought the realization that Brooklyn undertakers—if those called were to be considered fair examples—wouldn't transport the body of a dead American sailor from the foot of Thirty-first street, Brooklyn, to Eighth avenue and Thirty-third street, Manhattan, for less than $45. In fact, that seemed to be the universal price.

After an hour of telephoning Mrs. Devera was in tears. Darkness had fallen, and with the exception of the customs guard and the body of her son she was alone on the pier.

Finally the guard suggested calling on the Knights of Columbus. A call to the office of Michael S. Hogan, supervisor of the New York district, brought quick response. A motor truck was sent to the Fabre line pier in Brooklyn. The chauffeur carried an American flag. Down on the pier with the guard to help him, the flag was placed on the coffin, and then the latter, watched carefully by the old lady lest it be dropped or jarred, was lifted into the truck. It was taken to the station. There was no charge.

In commenting on the apparent agreement among undertakers to charge the exorbitant sum of $45 for transporting a body so short a distance, an official of the Knights of Columbus declared future steamships would be watched for relatives of dead soldiers or sailors who might bring back their bodies. He said the services of the organization's trucks would be offered free to such persons.

SUNDAY STREET CARS

Car in Operation Yesterday Surprised Some Citizens.

Peterborough citizens rubbed their eyes and stared again when a street car was seen proceeding down George street on Sunday afternoon. Some of the unsophisticated even wondered if the action of the new City Council had already had its effect and that Sunday cars were in operation, but farther investigation elicited the information that it was simply a gang out salting the switches after the day's thaw so that they would not freeze up.

EVANGELIST KENNEDY IN MICHIGAN CITIES

HELD SPECIAL SERVICES IN CADILLAC AND IS NOW IN PETROSKEY

During the month of January, Evangelist H. D. Kennedy, of this city, conducted a very successful revival campaign in Cadillac, Michigan It was a union meeting of the Methodist churches of the city. From the first large crowds attended. Several nights the buiding would not seat all the people. Bible readings were held in the afternoons and upwards of 200 would be present. At the first altar call several came forward and nightly, till the close, the altar would be crowded with seekers. Children's meetings were also held week day afternoons, at which over 300 children would gather.

The closing night will long be remembered. The service ran till nearly midnight. When leaving, the committee handed the evangelist a check for $600, as a thank offering, and also a voluntary written testimonial for the great work done. Mr. Kennedy went next to Petoskey, Michigan; to a church where they have over 1,000 in their Sunday School. In March he expects to hold a campaign in Clarinda, Iowa, all the churches of this city uniting in the meetings.

"Earliest Settler" in North Can't Remember Similar Conditions.

Cobalt, Feb. 23.— The north is just starting to emerge from its first real blizzard of the winter. The snow fall has been the heaviest in years and for the most part the winter is said to be the worst in the history of the earliest settler. Lumbering operations farther north have been considerably hampered by the exceedingly deep snow.

LAND OF MILK AND HONEY BLASTED AND SPOILED

PEASANATS IN UKRAINE USE BARBED WIRE TO TILL THE SOIL

Barbed wire and cemeteries are monuments to the memory of the invading hosts of nearly five weary years in the "no man's land" of the Ukraine.

Before the war Ukrainia was Russia's granary, with all that this means to the peasants who people it. The high cost of living was not one of the farmer's troubles.

When the greay- green flood of armies swept over it, the once prosperous, peaceful country, was left barer and brown. Whole forests were shattered; great acreages of wheat and barley were laid waste. Gone were the fat herds of cattle and sheep from the low hill-slopes; gone the thatched cottages and barns that had dotted the landscape. Sparse grass and tougher weeds were the only vegetation.

Seared and blasted and trampled by the massed feet of plodding armies the once fertile ground grew hard and unyielding even to the stoutest ploughshare. But the weary refugee returning to the land of his fathers to live like an animal in the abandoned dugout and trench, found no implements to attempt cultivation. His ploughs, his spades, all his farming tools were gone.

Nor was there any raw metal with which to fashion even the crudest of farm implements, in all those great stretches of gray waste. Everywhere over the once flourishing fields writhed and twisted the endless miles of tangled, rusted barbed wire. Snake-like they crawled through the cemetries. Barbed wire was the first thing the weary peasant's eyes glimpsed in the morning; it was the last thing he saw at night.

Relief workers of the Joint Distribution Committee saw the peasants painfully trying to turn the wire to use. Jacob Bashein, who was in charge of a relief unit in this region, reported to the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee that the effort of the peasants was deeply pathetic.

"With the aid of stones and his bare hands the farmer of the Ukraine battered the barbs from the rusted coils and laboriously wove a sort of spade from the only metal at hand," said Mr. Bashein "Have you ever tried to manipulate barbed wire? In his dug-out the peasant toiled, resting only when the sharp points tore his hands until they bled. But a spade of some description, some kind of a tool which would serve to turn up the hardened soil was essential. After all the improvised implement failed to serve its purpose. The ground was entirely too thoroughly beaten down to yield to its treatment.

"Of course it was slow and tedious work. When these poor people, nursing their torn hands, discovered that their rude spades would not serve their despair was pitiable. And what is especially significant was the fact that this was once a land of milk and honey."

THIS WEEK AT THE "Y"

A busy week is being planned at the Y.M.C.A. Tomorrow night the senior class is having a sleigh ride. It was intended that the destination should be Lakefield, but owing to the condition of the roads, it is not known now whether or not it will be possible to go as far as that village. It is expected that there will be two bus loads and after a few hours of sleigh riding the merry party will return to the Y.M.C.A. where refreshments will be served.

On Friday night the High School Club is having a snowshoe party. The exact route of the tramp has not been divulged at present, but it is promised that it will be full of interest. Refreshments will be served at the Y.M.C.A. on the return of the party to the city. Other arrangements for the week are in the course of consideration, but nothing definite has yet been decided.

St. Andrew's Choir Gave Concert at Protestant Home.

On Friday evening St. Andrew's Ladies' Bible class and St. Andrew's choir, assisted by Miss Lillian Eastwood and Mr. Joseph John, entertained the old people of the Protestant Home to a concert and tea. All expressed themselves as having had a most enjoyable time and the old people were particularly appreciative.

WHAT ARE YOU GIVING UP

Lenten Season is On—Easter Sunday Falls on April 4 This Year.

Yesterday was the first Sunday in Lent—a day that the Anglicans devoted to "self-discipline and self-chastisement," according to their church.

"What are people giving up for Lent?" That is the pertinent question," observed a church official. "If they substitute fish for meat and eat just as much as ever they are merely making a farce of the fast."

Lent is supposed to tipify the 40 days which the Saviour spent in the wilderness, and the word is derived from the old English word "Lenckten"—the Spring fast.

Kingston Trades Council Delegates Favor Change in Time.

Kingston, Feb. 23.— The Trades and Labor Council, at their regular meeting last night in the Labor Hall, placed themselves on record as being in favor of daylight saving, for three months. June, July and August. The council felt that this would prove a success as in former years, though they were of the opinion that three months were sufficient. The action of the aldermen, in their stand on the proposed legislation of the Ontario Government, in regard to the giving of one day off in seven to all firemen, was endorsed by the Council.

The Council was in favor of the Independent Labor party, and all present felt that the Labor party was a success.

MAYOR McINTYRE EXTENDS WELCOME TO PREMIER DRURY AS CITY'S GUEST

Distinguished Visitor Was Met at Depot and Taken in State to the Empress Where Reception Was Held.

Sharp on time the train which bore the Premier of Ontario to Peterborough pulled into the G.T.R. station yesterday evening. There were few there to meet him, the main reception having been called at the Empress Hotel and the many who wished to be present at the latter were afraid that if they went to the station they would miss the civic reception. As the people began to pour out of the train and still Mr. Drury did not show himself, some of those eagerly waiting on the platform began to doubt his arrival and think that something had turned up at the last minute to keep him in Toronto. However, as the last few descended from the train the Premier came into sight with his pleasant smile. To those who had never seen him before he was a decided improvement on his pictures.

On the platform to meet him were Messrs. Rogers, president of the Peterborough U.F.O.; J. Gillespie, vice-president, and Mr. Thomas Tooms, M.L.A. After a short introduction to some citizens on the platform the Premier was conducted to the waiting "four in hand," driven by Sergeant Blade of the police force. Driving down to the Empress with the Premier were Mr. Rogers, Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Tooms.

A large crowd had gathered at the Empress before the appointed hour to witness the reception and get a glimpse of Ontario's First Man. In the reception room upstairs were gathered the Mayor, aldermen, representatives of the Board of Trade and the County Council and many other local notabilities. The Mayor read a short address of welcome on behalf of the citizens of Peterborough, a copy of which appears below. In reply the Premier mentioned the fact that he had visited Peterborough before, but it was now nearly ten years ago. If the time could be spared he would welcome the opportunity of visiting some of the points of interest, some of which he had heard about even though he had not been to Peterborough for ten years. However, at the present time he would not be able to take enough time for this. In fact, he had wondered whether he should really have taken the time at this particular stage to come to Peterborough at all, but the local Farmers' Club had been so insistent that he had felt compelled to leave the administration of the Province for a short space of time and come to Peterborough. In conclusion, he thanked all for their warm words of welcome.

Mr. Tooms and Mr. Rogers introduced the City Council, representatives of the Board of Trade and the County Council and others to the Premier and Mr. Rogers introduced the presidents of the different Farmers' Clubs. For all the Premier had a hearty handshake ready and a pleasant word.

W. R. BREYFOGLE HAS FAITH IN CITY'S FUTURE

The Board of Trade's Thursday evening meeting is to be a conference on co-operation in the upbuilding of Peterborough. The main address will be made by Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, who will speak as a practical organizer of business.

Mr. Breyfogle was a tower of strength in co-operation with President Turner in reorganizing the Board of Trade and putting it on a working basis. The future of the Board is far more important than its past, according to Mr. Breyfogle, who is one of those who believe in a great future if the citizens of all classes work together under the leadership of the Board of Trade.

Plans for practical and far-reaching co-operation are to be discussed at this meeting, and those members who are strong believers in the get-together spirit are expected to take part in the general discussion of the future.

The Board of Trade is thirty-one years old, but only nine months of age as a reorganized body. What has been done in those nine months will be reported at the annual meeting on March 9.

The Thursday evening meeting, which concludes the Thursday evening series, will be a preparatory one, so as to enable the members to make the annual meeting a great event.

MOVE TO COMBINE DAIRY INTERESTS OF CENTRAL ONTARIO MAKES PROGRESS

Meeting of Leaders Yesterday at Which There Was Numerous Expressions in Favor of Proposition.

The interest being taken in the proposal to effect an amalgamation of a considerable number of cheese factories and creameries in the Central Ontario district, which has been under consideration for some time, was shown by the large attendance at the meeting held in the S. O. E Hall Monday afternoon to consider it. Those present were largely delegates appointed by cheese factories and farmers' clubs to attend and hear the proposal discussed, with the object later of arranging for meetings by the patrons of the local factories to decide what action they desire to take in reference to the question.

After the meeting yesterday, delegates who were present intimated their intention to arrange for meetings at Keene on Friday afternoon, and also at Warsaw, Douro, and Ennismore.

The meeting yesterday was presided over by Mr. Wallace Anderson of Warsaw, county president of the U. F. O. Mr. J. W. Fraser, manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, gave an interesting address on the subject of dairy products as banking security. He showed that the Bank Act permits banks to make advances on dairy products, and that this was done constantly in the case of large importing firms. He was satisfied that the banks would be as willing to make advances to a co-operative organization of farmers as to any other business interest.

The principal speaker was Mr. H. B. Cowan, of Farm and Dairy, who was the chairman of the special committee that has investigated the proposal. He stated that so far, twelve or thirteen factories have expressed their desire to have valuators value their buildings with the object in view of joining the proposed amalgamation.

At the close of the meeting a number of farmers present were called on to express their opinions: Mr. Edward Hawthorne of Warsaw foresaw certain difficulties in the proposal and was afraid that the farmers might not hold together as they should. Mr. Samuel Armstrong of Indian River, Mr. J. E. Galvin, Lakefield, and Mr. Collins, Ennismore, endorsed the proposal.

GOVERNMENT MUST MAKE FARM LIFE BOTH ATTRACTIVE AND PROFITABLE DECLARES FARMER PREMIER DRURY

Hundreds Flock to do Honor to Ontario's Chief Minister and Party at Big Banquet Last Night—While Rural Guests Dominated City Interests Were Well Represented—Mrs. Brodie Heard to Telling Advantage on Need For Farm Women Organizing.

The reception and banquet tendered Hon. E. C. Drury, Premier of Ontario, last night, was indeed a flattering one. The tables in the banquetting hall in the G. W. V. A. club rooms groaned with good cheer, and the four hundred odd guests overflowed with enthusiasm. While the function really originated with the United Farmers of West Peterborough, still a goodly representation of this city's manifold interests entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion and united with their rural neighbors in doing honor to the new Premier of this Province. The banquet proved an innovation in so far as the sex of its guests was concerned, for both farmers and farmers' wives and daughters and citizens and their feminine connections, all sat down together at the feast of edibles furnished by Caterer Thomas Hooper. Generally speaking, as Mrs. R. B. Brodie, organizer for the United Farm Women of Ontario, satirically remarked, at such banquets the women sit in a corner and watch the men eat. But not so last night, the male and female invited them to dine with the distinguished political visitors.

The cloak room arrangements last night were very poor, and conductive of rush, delay and considerable discomfort. One had to check one's coat and hat in rooms at the head of a narrow stairway which was for some time congested with men and women, some going up, others going down, and the result was a half hour's exceedingly disconcerting experience, especially so for the gentler sex.

The guests included visitors to the city from far and near, and at the table of honor, among the notables, there sat, besides Premier Drury, Samuel Staples, M.L.A., East Durham; Thomas Tooms, M.L.A. (Labor), West Peterborough, and Mrs. Tooms; Mr. and Mrs. John Moore, 4th line of Smith; R. B. Rogers, president United Farmers of West Peterborough; G. A. Gillespie, ex-M. L. A.; Mayor A. A. McIntyre, of Peterborough city; Reeve Nichols, of Smith, Warden of Peterborough County, and Mrs. Nichols; J. J. Turner, president Peterborough Board of Trade; Roland Denne, president Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Board; Ald. Joseph Crowe, chairman of the City Council's Reception Committee; H. B. Cowan, editor Farm and Dairy; F. G. Sandy, M.L.A., Ourmee, and Mrs. W. R. Morris, member of Peterborough Board of Education. Mr. R. J. Soden, defeated Conservative candidate at the last Provincial election, was also present and Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P. for West Peterborough, while industrial, mercantile and professional men were evident in fair number.

The dinner itself was served by farmers' sons and daughters who kindly volunteered their acceptable services.

During the evening Mr. Wm. Thompson sang several comic vocal solos in good voice, in charming Scotch brogue and with irresistible humor. He won generous applause.

Mr. R. B. Rogers, president of the United Farmers' Club, made an exceedingly capable chairman and toast master. The toasts and responses slated, however, had to be cut off abruptly before half through, at 11.30, many of the guests having a long way to drive home. It had not been anticipated, of course, that dinner would be prolonged till 9.30 by reason of the crowd, which exceeded all expectations.

The dominant feature of the evening was the assurance by Premier Drury that while his Government shall indulge in no class legislation, the needs of rural communities are to be fostered to the uttermost, and that justice for all interests alike is to be the keynote of his administration. The honorable gentleman also made the rather startling statement that there is no place where Hydro Electric power can give greater results than on the farm, "and that some other things would have to go short of electric power when farmers are supplied, in the interests of rural and city communities alike."

Power of Women.

Mr. A. B. Mann, of Smith, in proposing a toast to Mrs. R. B. Brodie, spoke of the readiness with which farm women had responded to patriotic calls, of the need for electricity in farm houses to lighten the work of women, and of educational facilities to assure an uplifting of the female portion of rural communities.

Mrs. Brodie, in rising to respond, met with prolonged applause. She was pleased to announce that farm men had been first to invite their wives and daughters to the banquetting hall. "I have sat," she said, "at many political banquets where the women were seated in a corner from which they gazed on the men eating, and we did not always have present M.P.'s worth hearing." (Laughter). Referring to the U. F. W. O., she said we have formed an organization of farm women to act with farm men, having made up our minds that if we want members of the Legislature Assembly worth while it is necessary that we elect them.

Referring to past political history Mrs. Brody declared politicians had set themselves up on a pedestal and expected women to worship them from afar. She spoke strongly for mothers' pensions, and eulogized Mr. Drury and his Government as men with whom women delegations had fallen in love because those men are human and approachable. She believed the honorable gentleman is going to do what is right for rural communities and all classes in general; otherwise, we would not banquet him. "If our Premier does not give justice all round we shall give him the toe of our boot, for we are not afraid of him." (Laughter).

Continuing, Mrs. Brody agreed with the Liberty League that a woman's place is in the home, but her home, she contended, is where the interests of her husband and children lie. For instance, who are more interested in the school than women, she asked; and here the distinguished lady after-dinner speaker extolled Mrs. W. R. Morris of this city as the pioneer of female representation on the Board of Education. "A woman's place is to see that children get a proper education, but heretofore women have neglected that duty and have only themselves to blame." "We women," she went on to say, "must see to it that the standard of rural lives is raised. We have allowed every profession and calling on earth but farming to assume (I say assume) a superior position, and must now work out our own salvation. We farm men and farm women must put our industry on a business basis, for none other will do it for us. Some blame farm women for going into politics, but we could not approach our politicians before we did so therefore we had of necessity to force people to sit up and take notice that we women are on the face of the earth."

Turning to the organization of farm women and farm men, Mrs. Brodie explained that the idea is that the men shall think primarily of the commercial needs of rural districts and that the women shall give attention to social and educational requirements. There is big work ahead of the women, she declared, to secure the establishment

MRS. BRODIE SPOKE TO FARM WOMEN OF WEST PETERBORO

QUESTION OF FORMING LOCAL BRANCH OF U.F.W.D. POSTPONED FOR PRESENT

A meeting of the farm women of the surrounding district was addressed by Mrs. R. B. Brodie of the U. F. W. O. in the Board of Trade rooms yesterday afternoon. This meeting was called for the purpose of organizing a local branch of the U.F.W.O., but the women did not proceed with the business of organization, owing to the fact that a large number were unable to be present.

Mrs. Brodie, in her opening remarks, explained to the women the method of procedure in organizing such a branch. "We have the power," she said, "to vote at a men's meeting of the U. F. O. We have all the privileges men have in their meeting, and they have no privilege in ours. Women, even when they did not have the franchise, were proceeding to organize, in such clubs as the Ladies' Aid, the I.O.D.E., and now that they did possess that power, it behooved them to enter with earnestness into the business of applying the vote effectively for the general good.

"We are," Mrs. Brodie said, "the women's auxiliary of the U. F. O., and as such will endeavor to do our part in brightening the life of the rural community. Too long have the city women been dominating the institute. Too long have they been telling the farm women the why and the wherefore of things. They who knew practically nothing of the problems of rural life would deign to proffer advice in a knowing manner, and this sort of thing had been tolerated long enough. The farm women were not easily enthused—they were not carried on the gust of every whirlwind movement, but when they did move they moved with some speed.

"We are going to give the world the viewpoint of farm women. This idea of a city woman taking a six weeks' course in agriculture and then lecturing to the women of the rural communities won't do any longer."

Mrs. Brodie spoke at length upon the subject of organizing young people's clubs in rural communities for social and educational purposes. She stressed this point considerably, saying the young people were the hope of the country, and as such should receive every consideration. Concluding, the speaker outlined in detail the rules and regulations of the U. F. W. O. It was decided to call another meeting early in March. Miss M. Garbutt and Miss Millburn were entrusted with this responsibility.

During the afternoon Mrs. W. R. Morris addressed the women on the subject of organization after which the entire gathering were her guests at a delightful tea in Cressman's tea rooms.

Mrs. J. K. Moore, who presided expressed the sincere thanks of the ladies to their hostess.

ALLIES WILL RESUME RELATIONS WITH THE BOLSHEVIK OF RUSSIA

But Red Propaganda Must be Dropped and Warfare Cease on all Border States—Agreement Applies Only to Trade and Political Situation Remains the Same.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 24.—Agreements of considerable importance were reached at yesterday's session of the Supreme Allied Council, and an immediate announcement is expected according to some morning newspapers. Resumption of trade relations with Russia, says the Mail, were decided upon in principle, though with important reservations. The Soviet Government will be asked, on its part, to abandon its propaganda and recognize existing loans, while the Allies do not propose to encourage border states to war on the Bolsheviki. It is understood that the decisions were reached with complete unanimity and received the assent of Premier Millerand. The resumption of political relations between the Allies and Russia was not pressed, the Mail understands, so the problem of the recogniton of the Soviet republic remains unsolved. Poland is said to have been won over to the British view, but Roumania is reported to have asked guarantees from the Allies relative to risks involved in direct negotiations with the Bolsheviki. Representatives of the Baltic States and Finland are also said to have been promised support should there be further aggression on the part of the Soviet Government.

Roundabout Decision.

Paris, Feb. 24.—The decision to treat with the Russia Soviets has been reached by the Supreme Council, in effect, although perhaps in a roundabout manner, out of deference to French and other "susceptibles," according to foreign editors of Parisian papers who are at present in London.

London, Feb. 24.—The Allies will decline to deal with Soviet Russia "until they have arrived at the conviction that the Bolshevik horrors have come to an end," it was announced after the meeting of the Allied Supreme Council today.

Terms of Agreement.

London, Feb. 24.—The decision of the Supreme Council, it was recognized, precludes diplomatic relations between the Allied Governments and the Moscow Government in the immediate future. The Council expressed itself as pleased that the International Labor Bureau had decided to send a delegation to Russia to study conditions, but it stated its belief that the supervision of the delegation should be under the Council of the League of Nations, giving the investigators greater authority. The council, it was stated, decided, that the Allies could not accept the responsibility of advising the border states to continue the war against the Bolsheviki, which might be injurious to their interests. If the Bolsheviki attack within the territory of the border states, the Allies promise every possible support.

TO RAISE PENSIONS FOR DISABLED MEN IS PROGRAM NOW

THAT IS PLAN ADOPTED BY GOVERNMENT INSTEAD OF GENERAL GRATUITIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 24.—The demand of the War Veterans for increased gratuities is not expected to be an issue in Parliament this year. It is stated that there is every likihood of legislation to increase the pensions of disabled men and their dependents. It is generally felt among the members that there is need of further pension allowances so that these men may cope with the increasing cost of living. It is understood that the pension commissioners are now working on some proposed changes in the regulations.

Legislation based on the report of the Parliamentary Committee on Re-establishment regarding state insurance for returned soldiers is expected to be before Parliament this session.

LONDON JOURNALS SAY TURKS MUST BE UNMOLESTED

TO EXPELL THEM FROM CONSTANTINOPLE WOULD ANGER BRITISH MOSLEM SUBJECTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 24.—Agitation in favor of expelling the Turks from Constantinople, which has been a conspicuous feature in one section of the press recently and which has the support of religious and philanthropic bodies, met a counter blast from another section of the London newspaper world today, which contended question was one that could not be settled on sentimental considerations but must be left to the matured deliberation of the Supreme Allied Council. The Daily Telegraph counsels those who support the plan to expel the Turks, "to give more unprejudiced study to the new factors in the problem especially Great Britain's position as the power which must not disregard the feelings of many millions of its Moslem subjects. Similar opinions are expressed in other journals which call for consideration in the light of present circumstances.

CAME, SAW AND CONQUERED.

PREMIER DRURY came to Peterborough, saw, was seen, and conquered. If there were any lingering doubts in the minds of the people as to the ability of the new Premier, due to lack of experience or to any other cause, to fill the high office to which he has been called, all such doubts were dispelled by his presence and his address last night. The guests from the country were naturally proud of their chosen representative, but with ample justification, and this sentiment was shared by scores of the members of the old parties, who were still smarting from the disappointment of a political revolution, the overturning of old-established orders. Premier Drury is a man who in any circumstances or position is well qualified to hold his own. He is not in the slightest degree embarrassed by the position in which he finds himself. His head has not been turned by the honors so suddenly thrust upon him. He is a man whom any party will be proud to acknowledge as a leader and whom any province in the Dominion might well be equally proud to hail as Premier. He is a clear and convincing speaker, evidently a man of education and extensive reading, a man of high ideals and with a deep sense of his responsibilities. If he addressed himself particularly to the men and women from the farms last night, that was only natural when the composition of his audience is considered. In other communities and with other men and women for listeners, he has proved himself equally at home, a thorough master of the situation in which he finds himself.

"The Government must show the people," said the Premier, "that the men raised on the farm are fit to govern the country."

Anything of the kind is hardly necessary. The old delusion that the people raised on the farm are mentally inferior to the city-bred has long since been dispelled. The farm graduates are found everywhere in public, professional and business life. Farmers have before this been members of the Ontario Legislature with credit to themselves and their upbringing. Premier Drury's immediate predecessor in office is a product of an Ontario farm. And when the political history of Canada is written no Premier this Province has ever had will be given a higher place than will be accorded Sir William Hearst.

PREMIER DRURY AND LABOR.

PREMIER DRURY sees nothing anomalous in a coalition of the Farmers of Ontario and Organized Labor. He is satisfied that they can work in harmony for their own and the general welfare. On such problems as the hours of work and a minimum wage scale he sees no reason why they should fail to agree.

If the Premier can attain the high objective which he has set in this regard, then he will have achieved something that the most astute and diplomatic statesmen in other parts of the world have attempted in vain. It is difficult to see, for example, how, on the question of the number of hours that should constitute a day's work the two parties will ever be able to find themselves in accord. Organized Labor's objective is a universal eight hour day. The city wage-earner who is disposed to be fair and reasonable and who understands conditions in the country districts, realizes that for the farmer an eight-hour day in the busy season of the year is an industrial impossibility. He is willing, however, to compromise by having the eight-hour law apply to all lines of industry with the exception of agriculture.

Such a saving clause would not solve the problem. The main difficulty the farmer meets with today is to induce men to work on the farm on any terms. This difficulty will be inceased tenfold if the farm laborer is asked to work ten or more hours a day while the city wage-earner has legislative protection in his demand for a working day of eight hours. Daylight saving has found no favor among the farmers because of the discrimination between urban and rural conditions. An eight-hour day in effect, even if the farmer were at liberty to ignore it as he was free to treat the daylight saving enactment, would render his lot in the summer time all the harder. And an eight-hour day for Ontario is likely to be insisted upon by a party that can hardly fail to realize its opportunity now that it practically holds the balance of power in the Legislature.

The Farmers' Sun, the official organ of the U. F. O. in its latest issue says editorially, under the caption "What an Eight-Hour Day Would Mean":

> So much has been said about the eight-hour day for all workers that we would like to see the Department of Agriculture conduct an experimental farm on that basis.
>
> Let the Department hire men on the eight-hour plan, pay them the same wages as other skilled artisans, such as carpenters and plumbers make, pay extra for overtime, Sundays and holidays, keep an accurate account of the cost of production, marketing and all other expenses, and then sell the products grown on such a farm at cost, plus a reasonable profit.
>
> We venture the opinion that if this were done consumers would be paying $5 per dozen for eggs and corresponding prices for butter, vegetables, meat grain and other commodities. Such a survey would do more to open the eyes of city people than any amount of talk. For one thing, they would learn that farmers are not profiteers. Another thing they would do would be to thank heaven that the eight-hour day had not been universally adopted by the farmers. We hope the Hon. Manning Doherty will conduct such an experiment.

PREMIER DRURY'S HIGH IDEALS.

PROBABLY there is not in Ontario a man in the public service, or in any other walk of life for that matter, who could have drawn together the crowd that turned out last night to greet Premier Drury on his first official visit to the city. Certain it is that no man could have proved such a magnate to attract the interest of so many from the farming community, and no audience could have been more enthusiastic, more devoted to a political leader. And it was an audience, too, that fairly oozed prosperity. If under the old political order the farmers in Ontario have received anything less than justice, then it is a self-evident fact that the followers of that calling in this district give no outward token of neglect.

Who can wonder if in his address last night Premier Drury spoke with easy confidence of the future, with the confidence of a man for whom the road lies clear ahead? There was no question as to the sympathy of his audience. He was fresh from his recent personal victory in Halton County, and he had in his pocket a telegram announcing the election by acclamation of the Attorney-General, Hon. W. E. Raney. Nothing more was to be desired. The last obstacle in his pathway was removed.

Premier Drury took the audience into his confidence when he announced that the U. F. O. party is about to enter the wider Federal field, something that after all has been rather more than suspected for some time. In no other way, he declared, can real results be achieved. The inference was obvious. The U. F. O. in the Dominion arena is to work for the lowering of the tariff, probably to the point of free trade. The issue, then, is clear. The gauntlet has been thrown down by the party that would change the fiscal policy that has been in force with comparatively few and inconsequential changes, for nearly half a century.

THE PREMIER AND THE VETERANS.

PREMIER DRURY and his Cabinet have inherited from the late Hearst Administration, among other legacies, what was an ambitious attempt to establish a community of returned soldiers upon land in Northern Ontario. The attempt has been regarded as a failure to such an extent that the Premier has just appointed a commission to investigate the entire situation.

In his address in this city last night the Premier stated that he is satisfied that this commission will report that at least some of these veterans will have to be removed to more congenial surroundings. He added that the colony had already cost over eight hundred thousand dollars, or sufficient to allow each man ten thousand dollars, with which he could have purchased a farm in old Ontario.

Premier Drury speaks on this matter with the authority of a farmer who has at least some idea of the hardships of pioneer life. Why should an attempt be made to conquer the wilderness up north while the farms in old Ontario are producing vastly less than their normal capacity through sheer lack of the labor required to till them properly? The returned soldiers risked their lives to save their native land. Why, by way of reward, ask them to take up the role of the pioneer, to assume a task which to the most of them was no whit less unfamiliar or strenuous than the military service for which they so readily volunteered? The sparse rural population of old Ontario will not be built up by using the public funds to subsidize settlers in a region production returns from which will be a question of years.

ELECTRIC POWER FOR THE FARM.

IN HIS ADDRESS last night, Premier Drury spoke of the necessity for electric power on the farms of Ontario. Reading between the lines of this portion of his address it was no difficult matter to draw inferences. If there is not sufficient power in Ontario to go around, said the Premier, then some others must go short while the farmers are served.

In former addresses in other parts of the Province Mr. Drury has made himself clear on this point, and a conflict between the Government and the Hydro policy of Sir Adam Beck appears to be on the way. The program of building electric railways, some of them in direct competition with radials already established, and with roads now operated by steam, is likely to receive a check. Competition may be the life of trade, but there is danger in a system of public control that profits the State only in proportion as it creates private bankrupts, and that in the end saddles the community with a burdensome tax rate. What the Premier said last night may suggest class legislation as between the cities and the country, but if the latter in this regard has not been treated fairly, no one can blame the Administration if a change of policy is inaugurated. The general welfare is of more moment than the glorification of any ambitious individual.

Nothing that Premier Drury said last night or in any of his former addresses on this subject can be interpreted as a threat to cripple the power privileges of the urban industries. It is the construction of radial lines and the electrification of branches of steam roads that he proposes to circumscribe, and the agricultural interests are to be given an equal chance with those in the cities.

GENERAL TOWNSEND ANSWERS CRITICS

(Westminster Gazette.)

In a elngthy communication General Townshend answers the comments that have appeared in "Truth" regarding certain actions of his in the defence of Kut, wherein the writer stated that there was an unanimous agreement among responsible officers of the General Staff that General Townshend ought to have made an attempt to cut his way out on March 9, when General Aylmer's relieving force reached the Dujailah Redoubt.

General Townshend says he does not believe the writer had any proper authority for his statement, for thte simple reason that were this the case he (General Townshend) would have been informed on his return from captivity, and on the grounds of common justice asked to explain.

"Never a word of criticism of any action of mine in the Mesopotamian campaign, official or unofficial, has ever been communicated to me by the War Office," he declares, "or by either of the two Commanders-in-Chief, General Nixon and General Lake. Never have I excused any action of mine in that campaign, and were I to be placed in similar desperate circumstances again I would act in the same way. My record, I hope, permits me, and those who served under me, to laugh at the insinuation of want ofresolution.

"It was agreed upon by General Aylmer and myself by wireless that I should only be able to cross the Tigris to his bank and co-operate with him in the battle in the event of his reaching the line of the Hai river, opposite the town of Kut. Had I done all that was expected of me in the advance on Bagdat with that handful of troops at my disposal I should before now have reached the moon.

"General Aylmer's troops never reached the line of the Hai river. I could see his attack was hanging fire for the great part of the day through my glasses, and I considered therefore that to risk the hazardous operation of crossing driblets over the Tigris in disseminated packets, in skin rafts, in view of Aylmer's evident want of success, would be madness which would involve the destruction of my little force, and the consequent immediate fall of Kut. Thus I could only co-operate with Aylmer by my artillery fire, which I concentrated on a place where Turkish reinforcements were arriving.

What General Aylmer Said.

"That was my opinion as commander on the spot. I have not altered that opinion, and am not going to alter it. Not a word of criticism of my action ever reached me from Sir Percy Lake, and his praise of me in despatches ought to be read by my critics. General Aylmer left on March 9. Shortly after the reverse of March 9 he sent me the following message: 'I cannot tell you how much I admire the splendid way in which you are defending Kut. I heartily pray that you will gain your reward in speedy relief. Good-bye and God bless you, and may you be more fortunate than myself.'

"As a matter of fact," General Townshend continues, "I offered to cut my way out, and a plan of co-operation was arranged between General Aylmer and myself by wireless, but before the plan was executed General Sir John Nixon, Commander-in-Chief in Mesopotamia, overruled my sortie, as he was confident of being able to relieve me in the end, and as the risks involved were very great. All my sick and wounded and followers left behind would be massacred by the Arabs of the town of Kut, and in my opinion, Sir John Nixon was absolutely right. He gave me positive orders that I was not to make the sortie.

"It may interest my critics to hear that I had an impassable river on three sides of m and in addition a network of deep trenches and galleries and communication ways flooded with water to cross, a network which would have puzzled a cat to pick its way through, and, in addition, it was in the Mesopotamia desert, the country of the Arabs where every man's hand was against us. If I could get through with 300 men only it would be great luck.

"I find in my diary I offered again at the end of the siege, just before I was ordered to make what terms with the enemy I could, to run the blockade in an armoured tug-boat, the 'Samana,' which we possessed, with 700 of the most useful men to the State, but Sir Percy Lake ruled that I must stay with my garrison, and I think it was right.

"Perhaps some of my armchair critics with a natural genius for desperate measures would have succeeded where I failed."

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Among the prominent Germans who sneer at the demand of the Allies that German war criminals be surrendered is that well-known storm petrel, Count von Bernstorff. He is a politician and a diplomatist, and, it may be added, an unscrupulous schemer and plotter, as his record as Ambassador to the United States clearly shows.

Count von Berstorff belongs to the Prussian junkers, the landed and official aristocracy upon whom the old imperial military party relied for support in everything; and like many members of the junker families, he entered the imperial diplomatic service at different foreign capitals, and finally was sent to Washington, and was there through the first three years of the war.

At Washington Bernstorff labored indefatigably and in every way to stir up trouble between the United States and the Allies, and failing in this, he bent all his energies towards keeping the United States neutral, notwithstanding Germany's submarine piracy through which the lives of United States' citizens were lost while travelling on the high seas.

Finally the crisis came, and on February 3, 1917, Bernstorff was given his passport and sent home. His mission had failed, and on April 16, following his dismissal a state of war existed between Germany and the United States.

After returning home Bernstorff was sent for a time to Sweden, but since the collapse of Germany and the setting up of the German republic he has been trying to keep himself afloat in the stream of public life, and has done some work for the Foreign Office.

ALLOWED TO GO ON SUSPENDED SENTENCE

FRISTAINE'S OFFENCE AS MUCH DUE TO POVERTY AS TO ANYTHING ELSE

William Firistaine who was brought into court yesterday by the Children's Aid Society, was this morning let go on suspended sentence. In delivering his judgment Magistrate Dumble said that while the man had undoubtedly been doing wrong the actual charge which was laid against him was more the result of poverty than of wrong. He expressed the opinion that the same conditions of living might be hound in a hundred homes in Peterborough due to cramped conditions. He blamed the woman as much as the man for they were her children and she should have known better than the man what was not good for them in the way of surroundings. The costs amounting to $15.10 were paid into court and the prisoner was allowed to go.

While the prosecution thought that it was more then the prisoner deserved they were of the opinion that the purpose of the case would be answered just as well in that the suspended sentence would prevent the man from renewing the offence.

MORE ABOUT THE BRIDGE

Editor Review—Although I am not a boring expert, I would, with your kind permission and at the risk of somewhat boring your readers like to have a few more words to say on the bridge question.

In your account of the meeting held by the City Council on the 12th. inst., at which Mr. Frank Barber Engineer for this notorious Hunter Street bridge was present, Mr. Barber strongly objected to having this single arch termed experimental. His exact words as quoted were " this proposition," he added "is not experimental."

Well, in all my commiuncations to the press I have called it experimental and I will insist on doing so unless someone proves to me that it is not. If this arch is not experimental I don't know the meaning of the word. Webster gives its meaning as something that is "known by experience or trial." Now, if Mr. Barber or anybody else well let us know of a single reinforced concrete arch of this or equal length in any part of the world that is subject to the same or very similar climatic conditions to what this will be (viz, a range of one hundred and twenty-five degress fahrenheit,) as we have had it in Peterborough during the past nine months, and that has been standing intact for say ten years, I will at once admit that I am in the wrong in using this word.

In your report of the meeting you say. "It was brought in that in excavating for the lift lock, rock was found at eighty feet which would be about level with Hunter Street." What an extremely absurd deduction. While it is quite natural to assume that the original stratification of the limestone formation which underlies this city was horizontal or very nearly so, to suppose that it is so today, is a very erroneous accumption indeed. Mr. Maxon, Mr. Barber's man Friday, says: "I never knew rock to take so sudden and quick a dip as on the Otonabee's banks." If this expert expected to find rock at the river at the same elevation at which it was found at the lift lock, there would be no dip or strike to the rock in this locality at all.

Mr. Barber in reply to a question put by Alderman Whitehouse: "Isn't it usual to have a dozen borings?" said: "No, I don't think so, if he had put down a dozen holes we might have got the same results in each case." This is not of the worst description. A very complete and thorough set of borings should have been made, an engineer must bore all over and be absolutely sure of what he has to build upon before he can prepare plans or give even an approximate estimate of what the bridge is going to cost.

Let the aldermen question their own engineer on this point. Mr. Parsons, who, at his present munificent salary will take a lifetime to make as much as Mr. Barber expects to clean up on this one job, (if they let him fire ahead)— knows better than this.

Again, in answer to a question by Alderman Whitehouse as to what it was best to do under the present circumstances, Mr. Barber said: "We must determine how much pressure the hard pan will take," and in a minute or two after this in reply to the extra cost of spreading the foundation, Mr. Barber replies, $1465. Mr Barber must certainly be a wonder if he can figure down to a five dollar bill what the extra cost is going to amount to before he knows or has made any test at all of what pressure this hard pan will take. I think this is spreading it over the ratepayers a little too thick, $1465 extra cost. Does anyone believe such nonsense as this? Why it is quite safe to say that two or three times that amount has already been spent in extras, looking for a foundation.

Mr. Barber objected strongly to the presence of the contractor at this meeting and said: "It lessens my authority." This contention was very properly upheld by the City Engineer Mr. Parsons, but what about the propriety or ethics of having an employee of Mr. Barber's present and addressing the Council, a man who is under no responsibilty whatever to the city. If the presence of the contractor at this meeting lessens Mr Barber's authority, the presence of an employee of Mr. Barber certainly lessens the authority and dignity of the Council and the people they represent. Nearly $200,000.00, to be exact $188,809.80, which includes the last payment made about ten days ago, has already been spent on this work. Mr. Barber said he considered the bridge half-built—to the ordinary observer—properly speaking — the bridge is not started at all yet—in fact Mr. Barber admits he does not know what pressure the material will stand that he is going to build the abutments for the bridge on, and if he does not know this I think it is quite safe for us to assume that he does not know if it will be capable at all of standing the pressure of this immense arch. The simple retaining walls which constitute the approaches to the bridge may be half built but so far as the bridge is concerned it is all up in the air yet.

The Russell-Townsend Company have guaranteed this arch will not "fail or fall" for one year. This guarantee was given on the original plans and specifications. Let me ask our worthy aldermen what good this guarantee is today.

From the lavish way in which the people's money has been spent on this work to date my impression is that it is not so much a development commision or a housing commission that this city wants just now as a good live vigilance committee.

Respectfully yours,
J. W. FITZGERALD.

DESTITUTION IN EUROPE TERRIBLE

Long Processions of Starving, Ill-Clad Children Seen Daily on the Streets.

Long processions of little Jewish children in Eastern Europe, bearing their tin cups in their hands, daily walk from their villages to the nearest town in which there is a Jewish relief station, according to relief workers in these stricken lands, sometimes journeying five or six miles in order to get the cup of soup with a piece of hardtack, or the mug of milk which is often their sole food of the day.

Those tin-cup processions emphasize, as nothing else could do, the relief workers say, the terrible destitution of the Jews in Eastern Europe at present. The children in them are barefoot, almost without exception.

Reports received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee say that both boys and girls are wrapped in burlap, or dressed in clothing made from the sacks in which the relief supplies have come, or in the rags which they have worn during the five years of the war, their gaunt little bodies showing through the tatters. They do not walk as children usually do, without effort or restraint, but drag themselves along wearily, and hopelessly, like tired little ghosts condemned to move in hungry processions throughout eternity.

Arrived at the relief station, the children are so tired and so weak that they sit down upon the pavements to await their turn in line. Upon the faces of every one of them there is an expression of unchildlike anxiety. It has to do with the only really vital question in the world to them—whether or not the soup or milk will hold out, until their turn comes. Every day some of them have to be turned away without food, since their numbers are so great that the funds at present on hand are not always sufficient to care for them all.

The Valiant Eagle.

The eagle has been used as a device on royal banners from very remote times. It was the ensign of the ancient kings of Persia and of Babylon. The Romans adopted various other figures on their camp standards, but Marius made the eagle the chief ensign of the legions, and to the subdivision assigned various other figures. Constantine was the first emperor to introduce the two headed eagle as a royal or national device to indicate that his empire had two heads or kings, but was nevertheless one body or empire. The two headed eagle is now used to signify a double empire. Austria claims to be the successor of the Caesars of Rome, and also of Charlemagne, and the one head represents the eastern and the other the western empire. Russia also has a double headed eagle, having added that of Poland to her own.—London Standard.

Evolution of the Checker.

That formidable person, the chancellor of the exchequer, who levies toll in the house of commons today, draws his lofty lineage from the reign of Henry III. Henry, thinking it desirable that the lord high treasurer should be provided with a guardian, gave him one in the name of a "check."—The checker, keeping his name, has now become the cornerstone of the treasury edifice. The lord high treasurer disappeared with the Duke of Shrewsbury, whom Queen Anne appointed a few days before her death. It was George I. who put the office of lord high treasurer in commission in 1714, and in commission it has since remained. Five persons have the honor—the first lord, three junior lords and the chancellor. But the chancellor proved too strong for all of them, and the board, once a reality, has, like the board of trade, long since ceased to meet.—London Chronicle.

Death in Switzerland.

At the death of a person in Switzerland the family inserts a formal, black-edge announcement in the papers asking for sympathy, and stating that the "mourning urn" will be exhibited during certain hours on a special day. In front of the house where the person died there is placed a little black table covered with a black cloth, on which stands a black jar. Into this the friends of the family drop little black-margined visiting cards, sometimes with a few words of sympathy on them. The urn is put on the table on the day of the funeral. Only men ever go to the churchyard, and then generally follow the hearse on foot.

PLAGUES OF EGYPT.

How Moses Frightened the Stubborn Pharoah.

It is thought by modern Bible students that the famous plagues of Egypt, designed by Jehovah for the punishment of a stubborn Pharaoh, were probably distributed over a period of many years, and that the forms they took were such as corresponded to what in these days we would call natural phenomena.

One of them was a plague of frogs, which multiplied in astonishing numbers, invading houses and even getting into beds, ovens and kneading troughs. Later they died, were gathered in heaps and "the land stank."

Frogs are always plentiful in Egypt, and an exceptional flood of the Nile, leaving behind many overflow ponds as the waters retreated, might easily give rise to a great increase in their numbers. Under favoring conditions the little batrachians multiply at an amazing rate. And with the drying up of the overflow ponds they would inevitably perish in multitudes for lack of water.

But Pharaoh would not let the Israelites go. So the next affliction was that "all the dust of the land became lice throughout Egypt."

It is hardly to be supposed that these were "cooties." The word in the oldest manuscripts of the Scriptures might refer to any kind of biting insect. Perhaps the plague was one of sand fleas, which are fearful biters and a familiar nuisance in the southern United States. They live in sandy soil, which is often literally full of them; and Egypt is a sandy country. Not long ago the Isle of Pines (south of Cuba) suffered so severely from a plague of sand fleas that an appeal for help was addressed to the United States Bureau of Entomology.

The sand fleas having failed to convince Pharoah, the next effort made by Moses and his brother Aaron was with locusts. "And the locusts went up all over the land of Egypt. Very grievous were they. And there remained not any green thing throughout all the land."

These locusts were what we call grasshoppers. Egypt has had many plagues of them, though probably none worse than our own farmers in the west have experienced time and again (before their great breeding grounds were wiped out by cultivation of the soil), when clouds of the insects literally darkened the sky, and not any green thing was left after a swarm had alighted.

The plague of darkness was matched in Ontario in 1881, when children were lost on their way to school and men searched for them with lanterns at midday. It was believed that the end of the world had come.

When all the waters of Egypt turned to blood it must have been rather appalling. But Gerace, in Calabria, beheld a similar phenomenon in 1883, when a fiery red cloud approached from the sea, presently covering all the heavens, and a rain of blood followed. When the rain dried, however, the matter that gave it its crimson hue was found to be volcanic dust which had been carried in the clouds and deposited by the rain drops.

The "plague of flies" continues to this day in Egypt, encouraged by insanitary methods of keeping domestic animals. As for the "murrain of beasts," it may have been an epidemic of "rinderpest," such epizootics being doubtless much more frequent in ancient times, when there was no quarantine system.

The "plague of boils," which attacked man and beast, was presumably anthrax. Moses started it by throwing a few handfuls of ashes into the air—probably a figure of speech to convey the idea of wide distribution.

King Grasshoppers.

The champion aeronaut is the king grasshopper, which has the ability to jump 100 times its length. It can also sail for 1,000 miles before the wind. These grasshoppers sometimes go in such numbers that they make a cloud 2,000 miles in extent. Its great front tip hides a pair of jaws as effective as a hay chopper, and it has an appetite as voracious as that of a hippopotamus. A young chick finds itself shut inside the eggshell and must work its way out alone, but the young grasshoppers find themselves—the whole nestful—shut in a hardened case in the ground made by their mother, and it takes a half dozen of them working together to dislodge the lid which shuts them in.—National Geographical Society Bulletin.

Judging Distance.

Most people are unaware that the apparent distance of an object depends upon the use of both eyes. This fact, however, can be strikingly shown. Place a pencil so that two or three inches project over the edge of a table. Then stand alongside the table, close one eye and attempt to knock the pencil off by quickly hitting the projecting end with the tip of the forefinger. Almost invariably the person making the attempt underestimates the distance by an inch or more and, much to his surprise, misses the pencil entirely. One eyed people, accustomed to estimating distances with only one eye, of course have no trouble in hitting the pencil at the first trial.—St. Nicholas.

BIGAMY VERY COMMON.

New Social Problem Faces Great Britain.

Eight thousand cases of bigamy have appeared before the courts during the last twelve months, involving no fewer than 25,000 persons, the innocent and the guilty, says the special investigator for London Tit-Bits.

It is fortunate for women generally that the full extent of his folly is not as well known as one might expect, or much larger still would be the number of our sisters who have lately suffered the greatest of all wrongs by becoming innocent parties in the crime of bigamy.

The wonder is, not that dual marriages have become so frequent, but that they have not become more frequent. For though the law forbids a man to go through the form of marriage again while he has a wife living, it takes no effective measures to prevent him from doing so.

English marriage laws are the "easiest" in Europe. Before the war London was the Gretna Green of runaway couples from the continent.

France, Austria, Holland, Switzerland, Germany, Russia — these and other countries were the starting points of thousands of brides and husbands-elect. And there were several agents who did a roaring business in meeting them on their arrival in the Metropolis and piloting them to the altar. The war stopped this traffic, but it has revived. Many alien couples who cannot get married in their own country are going to London specially for the purpose.

No less significant is it that of late many a war widow has taken as second "husband" a person within the prohibited degree. I know of a case where a woman "married" the brother of her mother-in-law, and of one in which another widow—a woman living in Scotland—made an equally unfortunate choice.

Why not seek advice whenever such a blunder may be committed unwittingly? As a matter of fact; the Scotswoman went beforehand to the sheriff, who assured her that the union would be legal! No; the point is this: Why on earth are people permitted to make, in all good faith, a hideous mockery of the marriage ceremony?

There is a special reason why every possible precaution should be taken in regard to the remarriage of war widows. If one goes through the ceremony of marriage with, say, her deceased husband's brother, she is refused the re-marriage gratuity on the ground that she has not in fact re-married. But that is not all. Since she is not re-married, she is guilty of "misconduct" and consequently she forfeits her pension!

A further illustration of old Father Antic's pranks cropped up recently during the hearing of a police court case. Going to one register office, a minor, gave his right age, whereupon he was told that he could not marry without his parents' consent. This did not daunt him in the least. He went straight to another register office, gave his age as 22, and arranged everything satisfactorily.

How easy, then, does the law make bigamy!

What is to prevent a man getting "married" as often as he likes? Nothing. He is, as a registrar said to me, "master of the situation."

"We have no means," this official went on, "of verifying any statements made to us, and the clergy are practically in the same boat. The popular idea that nearly all bigamous marriages take place in register offices is without foundation. Marriage after publication of banns in church is just as likely to be bigamous as after the display of a notice for a clear twenty-one days in a registrar office. The addresses of the parties are not read out in church and, besides, the congregation do not, as a rule, pay much heed to the announcement. At least one-half of the bigamous marriages are contracted in churches.

"One check on false statements has no deterrent effect whatever. If they are made wilfully, the guilty person is liable to posecution for perjury. But what usually happens? The wrong-doer contrives that the other party shall give the notice.

"I remember a painful case where this was done. Less than two months afterwards the poor woman discovered that her husband was not only a bigamist, but a notorious forger."

This looseness is still more amazing when contrasted with the precautions in force on the continent. In France notice of an intended marriage cannot be given until the parties have produced to the registrar their respective birth certificates, which must have been issued within three months of the date of giving notice. Now, if either has been married, the certificate will be endorsed accordingly, and he or she cannot marry again without proving the death or divorce of wife or husband.

Germany relies mainly upon publicity, notices of a proposed marriage having to be exposed to the gaze of all and sundry. The publicity is so great, indeed, that it causes many to marry outside the beloved Fatherland.

"No, dear; I am glad you came down quietly. Now, don't ever let me have to tell you again not to come down noisily. Now tell these ladies how you managed to come down like a lady the second time, when the first time you made so much noise."

"The last time I slid down the banisters," explained Frances.

NELSON'S SWORD.

Historic Weapon Will Be Put Up at Auction.

Patriotic Britons are beginning to shake in their shoes for fear that Lord Nelson's service sword, which is to be sold at auction at Sotheby's, may be knocked down to some wealthy American collector, whose long purse will enable him to outbid those dealers whose desire it is to keep this most interesting historical relic in this country, says a London letter to the Boston Post.

There will be bitter lamentation if the sword should be carried off to the other side of the Atlantic, for apart from its association with this country's greatest naval hero, who carried it in some of his fiercest battles, the old weapon has a most curious later history.

This sword, which was made especially for Lord Nelson, is a plain naval service weapon 25½ inches in length, and is still in the original black leather scabbard. It is accompanied by several affidavits vouching for its authenticity, one of them by Sir Harris Nicholas, who edited Nelson's despatches. It was evidently not worn by Nelson during the battle of Trafalgar, but was taken from his cabin on the Victory, his flagship at the battle, by Sir Thomas Hardy, with whom England's greatest admiral was talking when he fell mortally wounded. It had been Nelson's wish that his uniform and personal effects should pass to the woman who was his inspiration, Lady Hamilton; and to Lady Hamilton they were sent by Sir Thomas, the sword being included with the other personal possessions of the hero. The coat worn by Nelson at Trafalgar is now in the museum at Greenwich, where it has been seen by many Americans.

Nelson's sword was presented by Lady Hamilton to Ald. J. J. Smith, who came to her assistance in her days of bitter adversity. It was he who obtained her release on bail in 1814 from the King's Bench Prison, where she was confined for debt, and who assisted her to escape to Calais.

This will be the first of Nelson's swords to be sold at auction and it undoubtedly will fetch a goodly sum. Nelson's logbook, sold under the hammer last summer, realized, it may be remembered, $25,000, but it is hardly expected that the sword will fetch as large a sum.

This weapon, which is five inches shorter than the regulation length for a naval service sword, is believed to have superseded a still more historic one used by Lord Nelson, which is now in the United Services Museum in Whitehall. The sword originally belonged to Admiral George Walpole, a famous sea fighter of Queen Anne's day, and was worn by him when in command of H.M.S. Lion during the action with the French in Vardo Bay in the Mediterranean in 1711, in which — like Nelson after him—he lost his right arm.

Admiral Walpole gave his sword to his grand-nephew and godson, Captain Maurice Suckling, who valued it highly and gave it to Lord Nelson, with injunctions never to part with it while he lived. Nelson wore this sword during his historic boarding of the two Spanish frigates, San Nicholas and San Josef, off Cape St. Vincent on February 14, 1797, and it also hung by his side when he made the historic but futile attack on Santa Cruz in the following July, in the course of which his right elbow was so completely shattered by grapeshot as to necessitate the amputation of his right arm.

It is supposed that Nelson found this sword awkward to handle with his left arm and that he had the weapon which is now to be sold made (and purposely made shorter than the regulation length) to replace it.

Since being presented by Lady Hamilton to Ald. Smith, the weapon has had strange vicissitudes.

By Ald. Smith it was given, probably in 1830, to one John Kinsley, described as a "constable," who helped to pack up Nelson's personal possessions when, after Lady Hamilton's death, they were handed over to the great sea-fighter's family. Kinsley, who later fell on evil days, pawned the sword in 1847. A year or two later it was bought by a saloonkeeper named Goldsmith, of Bushey, in Herefordshire. Goldsmith eventually committed suicide, and after his death the historic sword was sold by his widow to the late E. B. Tremarne, also of Bushey, whose widow, in turn, has now instructed Messrs. Sothebys to sell it. In the meantime, the weapon has been shown at a number of exhibitions.

The exact date of the auction is not yet fixed. At the same time there will be sold a lock of Nelson's hair, the fragment cut from his epaulette by the musket ball which killed him, and the figurehead of the sumptuous funeral-car which carried the remains of the great sea-fighter to their last resting place in St. Paul's Cathedral. This figurehead, which is the work of a renowned Italian sculptor of that day, consists of a female figure holding in her right hand a laurel crown.

How to Eat Asparagus.

"Rest one elbow," he says, "on the cloth and wrap one leg around the leg of the table so as to prevent overbalancing. Grip the asparagus and rub its neck in the melted butter. Before it has time to make up its mind which way it will wobble swing the asparagus off its feet and waggle it in the air to test its pliability. Then open your mouth and make a feint at biting your stalk in the small of the back.

"Ten to one the asparagus will try to dodge by doubling up. You get him as his head comes down, and there you are.

"Never in the excitement of the struggle be tempted into biting the asparagus below the belt. It's not playing the game, and, besides, it gives the stalk a fine opportunity to whip around with a left hook to the ear."

His Majesty's Fault.

In the reign of Francis I. of France quickness of wit was often more promptly rewarded than actual merit. The monk, Regnier Mainus, did not lack merit, but he owed his first advancement nevertheless to a clever retort.

Francis, who was very fond of the game of tennis, was playing a match one day with Mainus. The monk finally ended the hard fought game with a brilliant stroke.

The king was somewhat out of humor on account of his defeat. "Remarkable," he exclaimed sarcastically, "to think that such a stroke should be made by a mere monk!"

"But, sire," replied the monk, who was as quick with his wit as he was with his racket, "it is your majesty's own fault that the stroke was not made by an abbot."

A week later Mainus received his appointment as abbot of Beaulieu.—Youth's Companion.

Reis and the Telephone.

While Bell invented the telephone and Edison, Berliner, Marconi and many others have improved it, the true inventor and discoverer of the principles of telephony was a German scientist to whom too little credit has been given—Philip Reis. In 1861 Reis exhibited a partially articulate electric telegraph at Frankfort and showed that variations in an electric current caused by a vibrating membrane could reproduce the necessary vibrations. Reis transmitted musical sounds and even words. Elisha Gray, whose application for a patent on the telephone was filed in Washington only a few hours after Professor Bell's application, improved Reis' telephone, but it is said that neither Reis nor Gray reaped any financial reward from their inventions.—New York World.

Mount Etna Gives Ice as Well as Fire.

Mount Etna can be kind as well as cruel. For half the year the great mountain is covered with snow, and supplies of coolness are drawn from this source in summer by the half baked inhabitants of the plains below. A curious discovery arising out of the extreme heat of 1828 was made in that year. A search being made on the slopes of the mountain for an additional supply of snow, it was found that a huge field of ice had been blanketed by lava in some remote age and thus prevented from melting. It was suggested by an eminent geologist of the time that the ice had been formed from a mass of drift snow, afterward covered by an enormous thickness of lava, the heat of which was kept from the snow by an intervening layer of volcanic sand.

Showers of Stars.

There are no showers of stars. Professor H. A. Newton of Yale college computed the orbits of a vanished comet and that of a meteor stream around the sun, when, behold, the track—the ellipse in space of the stream—was the same, once traversed by the comet. The nucleus of the comet had disintegrated into separate particles. I have seen many hundreds of meteors. The smallest was just visible in a microscope, and the largest, in the world's fair in Portland, weighed twenty-two tons. Meteors are particles usually made of stone or iron, and some are nickel and other metals. But if a star should fall the entire earth would be destroyed in one second of time.—Edgar Lucien Larkin in New York American.

Escaping Much.

"I dictate my novels to a stenographer," stated the eminent novelist. "She types 'em and sends 'em to the publisher. It's a great thing for me."

"Saves you much labor, eh?"

"It isn't that. I don't have to read the books; that's what tickles me."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"What is light?" queried the teacher of the juvenile class.

"Nearly everything we buy from our grocer, papa says," replied the small boy at the foot.—Chicago News.

20 YEARS SEARCH IS SUCCESSFUL

HALIFAX MAN GAINS TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS AND ENDS TROUBLE.

"When a man has had stomach trouble for years so bad he couldn't eat anything without suffering agony and then finds a medicine that fixes him up in a few weeks time so nothing hurts him. I think it's time for him to talk for the benefit of others. Well, that is what Tanlac has done for me and more, for I am twenty-five pounds heavier than I was when I began taking it and am feeling just like a man made over."

The above statement was recently made by Frank Walsh, a stationery engineer living at 62 West Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia, and although remarkable is by no means unusual, as many thousands in all parts of the American continent have testified to having used the medicine with the same wonderful results.

"For about five years," he continued, "I suffered almost continually with my stomach. I had no appetite and it seemed that everything I would eat disagreed with me. There was a feeling like a lump of lead in the pit of my stomach and I would bloat up so with sour gas that I could scarcely get my breath. I would have terrible cramping pains and vomiting spells after meals and would be in misery for hours. Some night I could hardly close my eyes to sleep, my stomach hurt me so, and I have had to get out of bed and walk the floor for hours tryng to get relief and a little rest. I have gone for weeks at a time with such an awful pain in the pit of my stomach that I could hardly stand it, and I could hardly retain enough of what I could eat to keep soul and body together. I was constipated all the time and had splitting headaches, and was so weak and played out that I had to lay off from work two and three days at a time.

"It would be almost impossible to tell just how bad I did suffer before I got Tanlac. Why, I simply dreaded to eat and had fallen off nearly thirty pounds in weight, but Tanlac has changed things completely around for me. I have been taking it now for a little more than thirty days and can eat just anything without having a sign of indigestion and I doubt if there's a man in Halifax with a better appetite. I haven't felt so well in years and haven't an ache or pain of any kind. I don't have any more of that tired, no account feeling and have been putting in full time every day since right soon after I began taking Tanlac. After Tanlac has done so much for me I would go out of my way to tell others about it, there's nothing too good to say for such a medicine."

MUST MAKE FARM LIFE

of a proper educational system for rural districts, where up to now children have not been trained in nature or agricultural subjects. "Just imagine sending a city girl to Guelph for five or six weeks, and then expecting her to satisfactorily teach agriculture in rural schools. Why such expectation is absurd!" Then, the speaker, declared, we have no training leading up to the Agricultural College at Guelph, because rural leaders have not agricultural knowledge themselves. To remedy this state of affairs she spoke strongly for consolidated schools, rural teachers versed in agriculture and pastors trained to a conception of the needs of rural life.

Mothers' Duty.

Mrs. Brodie here asserted that the home interests of a mother extends also into industrial and commercial life in cities and towns. Mothers should see to it that conditions are right in offices and factories to which their children drift in so many cases. "It is heart-breaking" she declared, "to see in Toronto girls of 14, 16, 17 years of age working with no other training but that of a common school and a knowledge of stenography. Those girls will be mothers of the next generation, and should have been trained, morally, socially, domestically for that state of life. We women now have our franchise, and are equally responsible with the men; we have the power to put the right men into power to advance our interests and those of our children, and so we can no longer say we have not the responsibility for whatever conditions exist. I ask you women to organise, accept that responsibility which is yours, for I want to see the initiative of farm women developed. As to labor-saving devices and electric energy, farm life, the speaker concluded, must be profitable to attain that end.

Confidence in Drury

In proposing the toast to the Government of Ontario, Mr. R. B. Rogers expressed confidence that the Drury administration will be a safe one —a policy which will commend itself to the great mass of the people, in developing Ontario into the best province in the Dominion and elsewhere He bespoke for the new U. F. O.-Labor Government opportunity to show what it can accomplish before judgment is passed.

The Premier

In rising to respond Premier Drury was accorded quite an ovation, the crowd cheering and cheering to the echo. Since his election, he said, he had been speaking mostly to city and town people, and this night offered him exceptional pleasure in affording opportunity of talking to men and women of his own sort. Appreciating the importance of provincial government, he felt he had behind him, not only the confidence of Ontario's Cabinet and Legislature, but also of the mass of the men and women in his province. He was afraid that town and city populations had in the past forgotten that rural peoples were entitled to their rights, but during the last six years a great revival in this respect had arisen, and rural communities found that it was time to take action—and farmers, although they move slowly, move surely andwith the intent to stick.

Talking of the late elections, the honorable gentleman admitted that the results had astonished the farmers themselves, who had hoped for at the most a balance of voting power and not the reigns of Government. Speaking of Labor coalition, he said he found that there was not such a great gap after all between the aims of Farmers and Labor— both stand for the same ideal of service, government and equal justice; and could and are working harmoniously together.

Hinting that he did not intend interferring in federal affairs, still he was optimistic that the Legislature would show the people of this Dominion generally that the farms can produce men capable of governing successfully, and as a province should be governed, after which exemplification he felt confident that people would give farmers in the whole Dominion opportunity in the federal government. The Premier strongly criticized the soldiers settlement scheme as not meeting the ends in view, and pointed out that its cost of $800,000 would have settled 87 men on Ontario farms at a purchase price of $10,000 each. A farmers' government could do better than that.

CHARLES E. MOORE,
President of the West Peterborough Liberal-Conservative Association, who proposed the toast to Agriculture at the U. F. O. meeting last night.

Turning to his Cabinet, the Premier believed it to be composed of a good body of men, all of whom have a stake in the province, nine members of the Government owning between them upwards of 3,000 acres of land and forty children. And, he declared, a government should be composed of men vitally interested in the welfare of their country. As to the initial difficulties experienced by his U. F. O.-Labor party, he expressed confidence when Legislature meets, there will be disclosed a greater and more gen than yet admitted, because that policy has appealed to all fair-minded men.

Schools and Electricity.

The honorable gentlemen here reviewed briefly the Goverment's policy for improved rural schools and for electric conveniences in the farm house. But, he added, in pursuing that policy, while justice for all will be conserved, he felt assured that rural communities would be the last to seek class legislation in their own individual welfare to the exclusion of the interests of cities and towns. But, he said, it is important that we recognize that the farms are the cradle of civilization, and a Government would fall short of its duty were it not to exert itself to make rural life attractive and profitable. Rural schools must be developed to meet rural requirements; this has never yet been done, and it is time we reached the root of the problem by thorough investigation He was inclined to think radical changes are coming in this respect to the uplift of rural communities. Hydro-Electric service for rural districts the Premier characterized as a stupendous problem to convey electricity to farm homes at a price which will pay. This problem however, wil be faced he declared as there is no place where hydro-electric would give greater results than on the farm. The Honorable gentleman at this juncture warned his hearers that when farms are supplied with electricity some other things will have to go short, but in the interest of both rural and city communities alike The Premier not explaining his meaning in this connection. the bold statement made most of his city audience sit up with a jerk. He was really referring to his oft-repeated declaration that he would oppose the building of radial railways to points and through districts not suffering yet for lack of such service or likely to profit by the same.

Profitable Farming

Mr. Drury was quite assured that in the interests of the province at large the people as a whole desired to see farming profitable enough to give those who work them a fair share of the benefits accruing from their own production. He regretted that there are not enough men and women for the farms and aserted that to remedy this, farming must be made sufficiently profitable and attractive to induce girls and boys to stay on the farm and prepare for farm homes of their own.

Continuing, the Premier urged that to produce a full measure of desired results in rural life, the federal administration must take a hand, and to such end he advocated that farmers' organizations "keep their powder dry" so to speak. For the interests of all classes must be conserved—national assets applied to general development as they should be, and farm life made attractive, uplifting and profitable.

In conclusion Premier Drury declared his Government are working for the ideals of their forefathers that this Province of Ontario shall consist of a happy, contented and prosperous rural population which will redound to the upbuilding of equally prosperous and contented towns and cities. He wished every success for the great farm men's and farm women's movement, which he characterized as the biggest movement for a greater Canada than this country has seen launched the last fifty years.

F. G. Sandy, M.L.A.

Mr. F. G. Sandy, of Omemee, M. L. A., gave a somewhat humorous and satirical after-dinner speech, in the course of which he said that in these days of competition the strong minds of agriculture are going to hold their place in education and overcome the trend of public opinion in cities and towns that rural populations are not in an equal intellectual class with those of large centres.

T. Tooms, M.L.A.

Mr. Tooms gave a neat impromptu address and expressed Peterborough's pride in its honored guest, and confidence that under his government's administration both Peterborough city and county will prove progressive. He invited active co-operation of all classes with the government in furthering the interests of agriculture, and dwelt on the need of scientifically produced farm products for exhibition at Peterborough's annual fair. Mr. Tooms gave his oft-repeated views on political economy and democracy in the welfare of all alike, he spoke for a more equitable application of the world's increase in wealth, and he hoped for a universal reign of freedom, justice and equity. What Labor wants, Mr. Tooms said, is, amongst other rights, the protection against the danger of enforced unemployment and reduction in wages. He advocated the elimination of great fortunes from the control of a few, that the nation's wealth be applied to social improvements and to fastering of health and education for the people. In conclusion, he hoped to see all industrial and agricultural problems solved in the welfare of all concerned, and for government in a spirit of honesty and common sense.

Drury, the Corner Stone.

Mr. Sam Stamples, M.L.A. for East Durham, and probably the youngest member in the Legislature, was pleased to see the occasion graced by the presence of so many ladies; the Peterborough industrial exhibition represented in the person of that board's directorate, Mr. Roland Denne, who is closely connected with agriculture; and professional, industrial and commercial interests also fittingly represented at this reception to the Premier. The speaker felt that this is a get-together age, when it is very necessary that all should gather at such a function as this, and get acquainted with each other and with each other's community conditions. He had no reason to regret the choice of the Hon. E. C. Drury as Ontario's Premier—the corner-stone of the Farmer-Labor coalition. We feel, he declared, that in Mr. Drury we have a leader who is in common with ourselves. He (the speaker) could visualize future history as recording a Prime Minister of Canada as having been originally the first independent Farmers' Premier of the Province of Ontario. Mr. Staples had unbounded reliance on Mr. Drury as a Premier who will keep the present Farmer-Labor Government on a clean, honest, upright footing. "We ask your patience and co-operation," the young farmer member concluded, "when we hope to win the confidence of all and to demonstrate that this Province has a government composed of honest, dependable, God-fearing men representing the people in its Legislature in a manner worthy of the Anglo-Saxon race."

Agricultural Interests.

Mr. Charles E. Moore, of Smith, proposed the toast to agriculture and in doing so assured the Premier that farmers would not pester him for shorter hours.

In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Manning Doherty, Mr. G. A. Putman, superintendent of Farmers' Institutes, responded. He referred to farmers as the backbone of the province, and asserted that the Minister is honestly working for a betterment of farm and rural conditions generally. Mr. Putman also believed that Mr. Drury's Cabinet will fit well and work together admirably. He was glad to see farmers had organized so that the business of farming is going to receive the close attention and supervision of men directly concerned in agricultural and dairy products. Talking of Farmers' Institutes, the speaker declared that in order to derive commensurate benefit from the efforts of the agricultural department it is necessary that groups of farmers study out their own problems in their own communities and then ask the department of agriculture to send to them speakers and literature in keeping with their needs.

In conclusion, Mr. Putman contended that farming cannot experience efficiency if part of its working forces is not utilised: and he hoped for the greatest possible benefits and advance being realized through consultation of and united action by both farm men and farm women. He heartily endorsed Mrs. Brodie's policy for the education and health promotion of rural people generally.

The proceedings here closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

RECIPE TO CLEAR A PIMPLY SKIN

PIMPLES ARE IMPURITIES SEEKING AN OUTLET THROUGH SKIN PORES.

Pimples, sores and boils usually result from toxins, poisons and impurities which are generated in the bowels and then absorbed into the blood through the very ducts which should absorb only nourishment to sustain the body.

It is the function of the kidneys to filter impurities from the blood and cast them out in the form of urine, but in many instances the bowles create more toxins and impurities than the kidneys can eliminate, then the blood uses the skin pores as the next best means of getting rid of these impurities which often break out all over the skin in the form of pimples.

The surest way to clear the skin of these eruptions, says a noted authority, is to get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of hot water each morning before breakfast for one week. This will prevent the formation of toxins in the bowels. It also stimulates the kidneys to normal activity, thus coaxing them to filter the blood of impurities and clearing the skin of pimples.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent drink which usually makes pimples disappear: cleanses the blood and is excellent for the kidneys as well.

Relief awaits you. "St. Jacobs Oil" is just as good for sciatica, neuralgia, lumbago, backache, sprains.

MR. HATTON IS SATISFIED

To Drop Private Practice if Salary Is Raised.

"If the salary is sufficient to live on, I have no objection to dropping my private practice." These words were spoken by Crown Attorney Geo. Hatton in answer to a Review man's query as to his opinion on the statement emanating from Toronto to the effect that in the future Crown Attorneys would be paid salaries up to $7000 a year, but that they would not be permitted to keep up a private practice. Mr. Hatton further stated that this measure had been under contemplation time and again for a number of years, but it never amounted to anything in the end.

WAR MEMORIAL PLANS WERE DISCUSSED

AT MEETING OF MEMORIAL COMMITTEE OF I.O.D.E. IN TORONTO SATURDAY

The War Memorial Committee of the I. O. D. E. continued in session in Toronto, when a great deal of change of ideas presented by the delegates present from the eight Provinces of the Dominion was particularly interesting and helpful and a great deal of enthusiasm was shown in this, the greatest national undertaking in which the order has engaged.

The two parts of the memorial to which most time was devoted, were the scholarships in Canadian Universities, for which the sons and daughters of deceased and totally disabled soldiers and sailors are eligible, and the nine post-graduate scholarships in the departments of history and economics in the British Universities.

Candidates for the latter will be selected annually from among the graduates of the different Canadian Universities by Provincial committees appointed for that purpose. These are open to both men and women and in addition to literary and scholastic attainments, consideration will be given to worth of character, physical strength and powers of leadership.

The next meeting of the War Memorial Committee will be held on the occasion of the annual meeting of the National Chapter of the I. O. D. E., in the last week of May at Calgary, Alta.

MOTHER AND CHILDREN

Lost Lives When Coal Oil Lamp Exploded

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Feb. 24.—Mrs. Robert Davidson, aged 28, and her two children, Gordon, aged two years, and Margaret, eight months, are dead as the result of a prairie tragedy. The explosion of a coal oil lamp set fire to their residence on a farm eighteen miles south of Elrose, Sask. Mr. Davidson, who had gone to the barn to do the morning chores, found the children smothered to death and his wife so badly burned that she died a few hours later.

NEW STATION ON C.P.R.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Lethbridge, Feb. 24.—Announcement has been made at the local Canadian Pacific Railway general office here that the name of the late Pete Robertson, V.C., of Lethbridge, was being perpetuated by the company by making it the name of a new stop on the main line. About nine miles west of Calgary and one mile east of Keith, a magnificent returned soldiers' tubercular sanitarium is being erected and new stop of Robertson is being created there for the convenience of the public.

NO SUCCESSOR LIKELY

To be Appointed to Succeed Hon. A K. MacLean, Resigned

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 24.—It is generally understood in Goverament circles that a successor to Hon. A. K. Maclean, whose resignation as member of the Cabinet without portfolio was announced last night, will not be appointed. Mr. Maclean declined the acceptance of the public works' portfolio on account of the acceptance entailing a bye-election.

It is also believed that the Government is prepared to carry out a policy of reduction in portfolios. The amalgamation of the railways and canals department and public works is much to the fore at the present but no action is expected until the return of Hon. J. D. Reid. Hon. Mr. Rowell is Acting Minister of Public Works.

SOLVING FUEL PROBLEM

New Plant to Manufacture Briquettes to Be Erected.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Feb. 24.—Tenders are now being called by the Dominion Government for the construction of the new briquetting plant to be located at Hudson Bay mine, in the Bienfait district, near Estevan. The erection of the plant will be proceeded with as early as possible in the spring for the lignite utilization board. It is the intention of the board to have lignite briquettes on the market by August. The plant will cost in the neighborhood of $400,000.

DROP MILITARY TITLES.

Soldiers' Settlement Board Revert to Pre-War Conditions.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 24.— If you are carrying a military title of any sort around with you, drop it and come back to civilian terms. That is the purport of an announcement that has been made by the local management of the Soldier Settlement Board, so far as its own staff is concerned. Hereafter, there will be no such names as "captain" or "lieutenant," or even "colonel." around the offices of the Board in Edmonton ,the male employes of which are all returned men.

COLLEGE PROFESSOR BLINDED

Apparatus Containing Sulphuric Acid Burns During Experiment

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Feb. 24.—While experimenting this morning at McGill University Professor O. Maas, lecturer in physical chemistry, was blinded when the apparatus containing sulphuric acid burst. Students rushed the professor to a shower bath and bathed his eyes and at hospital it was said this timely measure might save his eye sight.

BREAK IN UNION RANKS

Threatens to Defer Settlement of Railway Wage Dispute.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 24.—Threats of a break-in the affiliated railroad employees organizations militated today against the immediate solution of the questions before the representatives of two million railroad workers conferring here on President Wilson's proposal for a settlement of their wage demands.

Because of a wide divergence of the views held by the committee called to Washington to consider the White House policy, the executives of the organisations admitted that they did not know whether they could hold the strength they had gained. It was agreed ten days ago that the organisations should affiliate to consider the proposal.

FORTUNE IN FOXES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 24.—Six aristocrats of the fox world reached Vancouver from Prince Edward Island en route to Japan and they are receiving the best of attention and the uttmost consideration. There is a reason. The vulpine travellers are of the famous silver fox variety and each is said to be worth $5,000 alive.

FARMERS IN THE WEST CLEAN UP FORTUNES

FIVE AND SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS RECEIPTS IN LEDUC DISTRICT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Alta., Feb. 24.—Five or six thousand dollars a day is a fairly good income. It represents the revenue which farmers in the Leduc district derive from the marketing of grain, livestock and general farm produce on days when weather, roads and railway car accommodation are especially favorable. Taken the season through it will be seen that the total value of the district's farm production looks like the financial statement of the Standard Oil Company in a palmly year. Over 750,000 bushels of excellent grain has already been sold in Leduc since threshing was begun last fall. About 660,000 bushels have been shipped with the balance in the elevators. Owing to a protracted freight car shortage the grain movement has been slow for the most part of the winter and only recently outgoing shipments were speeded up sufficiently to permit hauling from the farms to reach capacity.

BIG SALES OF WHISKEY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 24.—When a block in which was located a drug store was ravaged by fire in Riverside, Calgary, a temperance worker rushed in and rescued the liquor prescription file, later turning it over to Rev. H. H. Bingham, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Calgary Mr. Bingham told Premier Charles Stewart and other members of the Cabinet that the man who examined the file of prescriptions said they showed that the drug store had been selling from $14,000 to $16,000 worth of liquor a month.

VETERANS ORGANIZE INDOOR BALL TEAM

PLAYERS FOR THE LEAGUE TO BE SELECTED THURSDAY EVENING

At a meeting held last night the G.W.V.A. organized an indoor baseball club and the following officers were elected:

Comrade Rush— Secretary-treasurer.

Comrade Walter Perks—Captain.

Executive Committee—Comrades Dark, Guerin and Clancy.

A match was played with a team from the machine-gun company, which resulted in the gunners being defeated by a score of 10 to 7.

A meeting will be held at 7.30 o'clock Thursday evening in the armories when the team to represent the G.W.V.A. in the city league will be chosen. All prospective players are asked to be present.

Organization of the city league will be completed at a meeting to be held Tuesday at 8 p.m. when the schedule of games will also be drawn up. All organizations who can do so are invited to enter teams.

BOWLING AT THE Y. M. C. A.

The Wellfare Club of Barries, Limited, meets tomorrow night at the Y.M.C.A., and a big time is promised for all.

Tonight the George Street Church bowling team clashes with Murray Street team in what promises to be an exciting game. One of the George Street supporters was heard to declare at the "Y" this morning that George Street had won, but the score would not be known until after the game. Murray Street are every bit as confident as that.

MAYOR McINTYRE

Reference was made by some of those being introduced to the success of Hon. Mr. Raney in East Wellington, an event which probably accounted for part of the Premier's big smile, and he was heard laughingly to refer to East Wellington as the Attorney-General's "adopted county." A large party of dairymen who had been in session during the afternoon were late arrivals for the reception, but they expressed great satisfaction in the fact that they were in time to receive a hearty hand shake from the Premier.

There was disappointment over the absence of Hon. Mr. Manning Doherty, but the Premier explained that at the present time Mr. Doherty was particularly busy preparing for the coming session and felt that he could not possibly leave that work. In consequence of this the joint deputation which was to wait on the Premier and Mr. Doherty was cancelled and it is understood that a deputation will be sent up to Toronto to see Mr. Doherty personally in the near future.

The Mayor's Welcome.

The Mayor's address of welcome was as follows:

"We wish, on behalf of the citizens, to give you a cordial welcome to Peterborough, on your first visit to this city since you have been called to your high post in the government of the Province.

"You will later meet and be welcomed by the Farmers' Club of this district, at whose invitation you have come to the city, but we are pleased that we have been given an opportunity to greet you and bid you welcome for the whole community. We are gratified to have visitors come to Peterborough, and become acquainted with our city, and especially to receive distinguished men who hold positions of responsibility and honor in the public life of the country.

"We had hoped that you would be able to remain long enough to see some of the points of interest in the city. Peterborough is the centre of an excellent agricultural and dairying district, and has within its borders some of the largest and most important manufacturing industries of the Province. We feel sure that a visit to some of these would be of interest to you, and we will be pleased to have you see them. The lift-lock on the Trent waterway in Peterborough is one of the greatest engineering works on the continent. It is one of the only two locks of the kind in America, the other being farther north on the same waterway, and was constructed under the engineering supervision of the president of the Peterborough branch of the United Farmers of Ontario. This cannot be seen in operation at this season, but we hope that you will find time to come again to Peterborough in the summer season when the waterway is open and the lock in operation, and when at the same time you may see the parks and other summer attractions of the city.

"We are sorry that your stay on your present visit will be so short, but we hope that it will be most pleasant, and that we will soon have the privilege of again welcoming you to Peterborough."

DETROIT CHURCH WILL BE CENTRE FOR COMMUNITY

DEDICATION OF MODERN EDIFICE TO SERVE PROTESTANT SECTION OF CITY

Detroit, Feb. 24.— St. Mark's Community Church, following its dedication Sunday by Bishop T. S. Henderson, of Michigan Methodist Episcopal diocese, was thrown open to the public today. As its name implies, the new edifice is intended to be a church of and for the people, ministering to their well-being in both a spiritual and material sense.

Situated at Jefferson and Garfield avenues, the new building possesses many interesting and unique features including a roof garden of generous size overlooking Water Works Park and on which are located tennis courts and a large promenade.

Four Stories and Roof Garden

Following the destruction by fire of the old Burns Methodist Church Bishop Henderson conceived the plan for the more modern edifice to serve the entire Protestant section of the community. The building is 165 by 150 feet with four full stories besides the roof garden. The auditorium is square, finished in oak, with galleries on three sides, and a seating capacity of sixteen hundred. It will be possible to throw all the Sunday School rooms on one floor, open to the auditorium giving a total seating capacity of more than 2,500. There are five separate Sunday schools of different grades each, with its own individual assembly and class rooms.

The commodious rooms for social purposes include a gymnasium 60 feet wide and 75 feet in length with a gallery for spectators and moving picture arrangements. There is also a quiet game room for billiards, chess and similar activities, a bowling room with two alleys and a scout room for the boy and girl scouts.

Outstanding Features.

The second, third and fourth floors are devoted to Sunday school rooms and church offices, together with social rooms for both sexes. A feature of the second floor is a small dining-room specially planned for the use of church women serving the larger suppers.

The roof garden is easily the outstanding feature of the building. It overlooks the Detroit River, and on a clear day Lake St. Clair is plainly visible. Here will be located the tennis courts with a splendid pr around three sides.

"This biulding we hope to ma centre of social and religious the community," said Rev. W. Lenthen, the pastor, whose labor has been largely respons the completion of this project.

"The men and women with me in control of St. M behind me, when I say that to be a community church, though our work has been der the auspices of the M Episcopal denomination, we w building to be used by all, ive of creed."

THE BIRTH OF A NATION AT THE ALLEN THEATRE

FAMOUS PICTURE PROVES AS STRONG A DRAWING CARD AS EVER

The favorite among all the moving pictures ever shown, "The Birth of a Nation," is the attraction at the Allen Theatre for the first two nights of this week and the attendance last night proved that the film is as strong an attraction as ever. The house was literally packed, the patrons standing in a long line before the box office before they were able to secure tickets.

There seems to be a wonderful charm about this romantic story of the civil war. Patrons of the movies never seem to see enough of the production, but will go again and again to see it at every opportunity. It is a story with a thrill, a sermon in a play, a history in the form of a drama. The eminent fairness in the treatment of all parties in the story is perhaps one secret of the photoplay's popularity.

The picture will be presented again tonight.

A Fashion Garrick Killed.

Women of England in the eighteenth century wore large hats. Samuel Rogers once traveled to Ranelagh in the same coach with a woman who was compelled to sit on a stool on the floor of the coach on account of the inconvenient height of her headdress. Hannah More, who was all for simplicity in costume, writes in her diary that she has seen women wearing on their heads "an acre and a half of shrubbery, besides slopes, grass plats, tulip beds, clumps of peonies, kitchen gardens and greenhouses." The credit of killing this fashion is given to Garrick. He appeared one night on the stage with a mass of vegetables on his head and a carrot suspended from each side, to the shame and confusion of many fair members of his audience.

Artillery.

Until the time of Charles XII. of Sweden the artillery was not considered a part of the army. The men serving in it were not soldiers, but regarded as mechanics. The officers had no army rank. Charles XII. gave artillery officers a rank and regularly organized the artillery into companies. The battle of Pavia demonstrated the superiority of the gun in the hands of the Spanish infantry. The musket carried a two ounce ball and sometimes brought down at one fire two or three mailed knights. The French sent a flag of truce to remonstrate against the use of such barbarous weapons.

Not the First.

Pat was servant of a farmer, and in his charge was a donkey, which was kept to amuse his employer's children. The donkey was following the farmer's wife round the yard one day, and the farmer, turning to Pat, said:

"I think that donkey is taking a liking to my wife."

Habits of the Cuckoo.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that the cuckoo neglects her egg after she has deposited it in the nest of another bird, declared Oliver G. Pike, in a lecture at the Camera club. The cuckoo kept a watchful eye upon her treasure and should any accident befall it she laid another egg in another nest. Mr. Pike said he believed, although it was impossible to prove it, that the cuckoo laid its eggs in the nest of a bird of the same species as that by which it had itself been reared. Thus a cuckoo reared by a sedge warbler laid its egg in turn in a sedge warbler's nest. So wonderful was the spell which the young cuckoo exercised over other birds that he had seen birds other than its foster parents pause in their flight to feed it, giving it the food which was intended for their own young, and once he saw a young cuckoo fed by birds of five different species in succession.—London Spectator.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

Music Hath Charms.

Dohnanyi, the famous pianist, tells a story of two Scotchmen who lived in the same flat. Each had a piano, upon which he strummed in his own room, and one day a friend suggested that they should run the two pianos into the same room so that they could play music written for two pianos.

The two men thought it was a good idea, and accordingly the pianos were both placed in the same room. They practiced diligently at a sonata for two pianos, but with little success for some time, the difficulty being that one had generally finished his movement two or three bars before the other.

At last, however, they succeeded in finishing one movement exactly at the same moment, and one said, "Aweel, Donald, now that we've been so successful with the first movement, suppose we try the second?"

Donald looked at him in profound astonishment. "Eh, but, Angus," he exclaimed, "that was the second movement that I was playing!"—London Tit-Bits.

American Catacombs and Mummies.

Recent publicity has been given to the wonders of the cliff villages of the Gila canyon in New Mexico, where the lofty pumice or tufa walls of the box canyon are honeycombed with the excavated dwellings of a nation of dwarfs, whose mummies here and there found, preserved by the stone dust for centuries, are clad in woven clothes and ornamented with gay feathers at neck and waist. The remains of an adult man of this people measured only twenty-three inches in height, and the doors and windows of their "homes in the rock" are hardly passable by a half grown girl. Like the dwarf temples of Yucatan—of which Le Plongeon wrote so entertainingly—hovel, mansion, fortress and temple, seem like toys made with infinite pains for the children of a remote past; indeed, an antiquity fixed by the best authorities at least as far back as 6,000 years ago.—National Magazine.

Glorification of Futility.

When General Ben Butler was practicing law in the courts of the District of Columbia he was famous for the striking ideas he evolved and the effective methods he employed in order to get the interests of his clients before the jury in a favorable light.

In one case, in which he had a rather poor show of winning, the time came for him to cross examine a fellow lawyer, who had given testimony extremely favorable to the other side. Everybody listened intently for Butler's onslaught. It was expected that he would go after the witness with gloves off.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, with an air of confiding familiarity, "I would as soon think of shooting skyrockets into the infernal regions for purposes of illumination as to cross examine this witness in the hope of extracting the truth."—Popular Magazine.

An old Cingalese woman who lived in an ordinary native hut by herself died and was buried. On the following day a large iguana (a species of lizard which attains great size) entered the compound of a gentleman living close by and attacked his poultry. Hearing the noise and commotion, he came out and on ascertaining the cause got his gun and shot the iguana. No sooner had he done this than there arose a great uproar from the relatives of the old woman, who declared that he had killed her, because her spirit had passed into the lizard, in proof of which they pointed, triumphantly to the fact that it had never before been seen in the vicinity and only appeared after her death. Rupees finally appeased the outraged feelings of the old woman's descendants.—Java Times.

Lee at Vera Cruz.

Robert E. Lee, as captain of engineers, arranged the American batteries when the United States forces landed at Vera Cruz in 1847. Lee's brother, a naval lieutenant, served one of the guns, and here are Lee's first impressions of war, "Whenever I turned my eyes reverted to him, and I stood by his gun whenever I was not wanted elsewhere. Oh, I felt awfully, and am at a loss what I should have done had he been cut down before me. * * * He preserved his usual cheerfulness, and I could see his white teeth through all the smoke and din of the fire."—Chicago News.

Trade Secret.

"Where do you get the plots for your stories?"

"I have never had but one plot," declared the popular author, "and I swiped that from Romeo and Juliet. All you have to do is to change the scenery and the dialect."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Insisted on Her Rights.

Lawyer—You say you told the servant to get out of the house the minute you found it was on fire, and she refused to go? Mrs. Burns—Yes, she said she must have a month's notice before she'd leave."—National Food Magazine.

Spats.

"I should like to see some spats," said the precise gentleman.

An Even Break.

Mrs. Hiram Offen—Your recommendations are rather poor, I must say. Maid—Well, mum, you weren't recommended very highly to me, aytber.—Boston Transcript.

Quaint Old Welsh Custom.

One of the quaintest of all Welsh customs is the unsheathing of the sword of Taliesin that takes place every year on the shores of Llyn Geirionydd, near Trefriw, north Wales. A short distance from the lake is a large, flat topped bowlder, supposed to have been Taliesin's pulpit. On this rock the old bard (who is said to have flourished about 540 A. D.) performed his weird religious rites, and ever since the rock has been known as the "Court of Taliesin." Once a year, in August, a group of bards assemble at the "court"—the chief bard standing on the rock and the others on a circle of white stones surrounding it. Here the rites are performed solemnly and quaintly in the presence of a large crowd. The naked sword is returned to its sheath when the chief bard has ascertained from the people that there is peace in the land. The sword remained unsheathed during the three years of the Boer war. The ancient ceremony is followed by witty and humorous bardic addresses, recitations and songs.

Mansfield's Manner.

"Richard Mansfield possessed a dominance that never failed him, I believe. The strange thing about this is that he didn't need it. He had 'fascination' enough without it.

"That fine, dry old manager and good man, A. M. Palmer, and I were once visiting Mansfield at Southampton, and late at night Mr. Palmer would come into my room, and we would talk an hour or so. It was always about Mansfield; that was always the way if you were near him; it was inevitable that you could think or speak of little else. One night I said:

"'I think you understand him as well as any man could.'

"'Understand him?' The old man laughed in his quiet way. 'There's only one man on earth who understands Richard Mansfield. That's Richard Mansfield.' Then, after a pause, he added with sudden vehemence, 'And he doesn't!'"—Booth Tarkington in Bellman.

Hatching Eggs in Rice.

Certain of the Chinese in the interior districts adjacent to Amoy employ a somewhat unusual method for hatching both hens' and ducks' eggs. The breeder first takes a quantity of unhusked rice and roasts it, cooling it down by fanning or allowing the wind to blow through until it is lukewarm. He then spreads a three inch layer of the rice in a wooden tub and places about 100 eggs thereon; another layer of rice, this second and subsequent layers being but two inches in thickness, is spread over the eggs. Each tub has six layers of rice and five layers of eggs, so that there are 500 eggs in each tub. The rice is heated once every twenty-four hours, the eggs being taken out at such times. The chicks and ducklings are produced in twenty to thirty days.—London Globe.

Slaves in Abyssinia.

In the Gemira country of Abyssinia the inhabitants are pagans. They appear to believe in a divinity inhabiting the sky and also in secondary genii dwelling on earth. Slavery is not officially recognized, but exists in fact, though with some extenuation in form. The slave is not free to change his master. He is put in chains if suspected of an intention of escaping. He is beaten if he does not work or march at the will of his master, and he receives no pay. On the other hand, if he can be "presented" he cannot be openly sold and must be designated gabare ("subject"), not baria ("slave"). Even these differences disappear in distant provinces and in times of disorder. Those who will not submit live as fugitives in the forests.

Discusses Intricate Questions.

Few citizens have even heard of the American Mathematical society, to say nothing of the fact that its delvings in the science of figures have been of value to European savants. And yet the society has been in existence for many years, has a membership of 716, including sixty-six life members, publishes essays and textbooks on mathematics and has a library of 4,902 volumes. The society discusses with ease such complex problems as the restricted problem of three bodies, the fourth dimension, the Fredholm determinant, covariant curves of the plane rational quintic and cyclic systems of osculating circles of curves on a surface. The last subject does not refer to kissing.—Washington Star.

Refreshing Candor.

For commercial candor and unconscious telling of the truth it is hard to beat some of the circulars received here from various European resorts. Often they are translated literally from the foreign languages into English, and the results are a delight. One of these advertisements of a Hungarian summer resort tells us that it charges "Moderate prices, except during the height of the season!"

Apartment House Ethics.

"Lady? She ain't no lady!" declared the chatelaine of the fourth floor front.

"No?"

"No. She'll borrow your card table and then not invite you to the party. That ain't etiquette in my circle."—Judge.

A Fighting Chance.

Miss Passee—Oh, Mr. Plunks, are you married or unmarried? Mr. Plunks—Married, generally. But if you would call every day you might strike me some time when I wasn't.—Judge.

Responsibility alone drives man to toil and brings out his best gifts.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

TOUCH OF HUMOR SAVES MANY A BALL PLAYER

FROM CRITICISM AFTER HE HAS BEEN GUILTY OF AN ERROR.

A bit of quick thinking, in offering an alibi in advance, often saves a player from being the target for much criticism, providing the alibi contains a bit of humor. The baseball fan can enjoy a bit of repartee about as well as any person, and the player who can present an immediate alibi that smacks of humor, is almost certain to get away with any error that he might commit.

I see reports where the New York club was quoted as intending sending Catcher Truck Hannah back to the minors. I don't see how they can get waivers on the big fellow, if such is the intention of the club, and I have my doubts. Hannah, while not a flashy catcher, is a dependable receiver, a glutton for work, and a catcher who uses good judgment back of the plate. Of course the fans cannot hear the conversation around the plate, between catcher, batter and umpire. If they could they would enjoy many a laugh at the expense of one of the trio, and would get a different impression of certain players than perhaps generally exists.

Truck Hannah always has been an object of interest to me when catching. Aside from always doing a pretty good job of receiving, he never failed to have a line of conversation that would make a bigger hit on a vaudeville circuit than some of the stuff used by some monologue artists. Hannah keeps up a continual chatter from the the time the game starts. Of course, his conversation is largely directed at the batter, in the hope that his line of talk will take the mind of the batter from his work, the making of base hits.

He seeks to keep the latter from concentrating, and from the many strikes slipped over by the New York pitchers I would say there was merit in his system.

Hannah's conversation is never objectionable. He usually has the batter laughing at some of his talk rather than sore. Truck always claimed a batter who was sore was more dangerous than the batsman who was laughing. Hannah, however did not always confine his conversation to his opponents. Often it was emitted in his own behalf. I shall never forget the acrobatic stunts he put on one day trying to field a couple of bunts. His first attempt caused the crowd to roast him, and his second offence would have probably drawn more criticism had he not yelled at the top of his voice, as he was doing a lofty tumble:

"For God's sake, who soaped this infield?"

In the same game an opposing batter [illegible] high fly to the left of the plate at the [illegible] grounds. A bad wind was blowing, making the judgment of [illegible] difficult. While the [illegible] in the air, Hannah had the crowd in an uproar by his remarks. It had been a rather tough day for Truck, but he took it all good naturedly, and decided to beat the fans to the punch. Here are a few of the remarks he made as he circled under the ball:

"It certainly is awful high. Better catchers than me have missed fly balls. I will be satisfied if it doesn't hit me on the top of the head."

And it just missed so doing. The ball fell untouched, but no one voiced an objection as Truck had them laughing. Yes, indeed, it pays to have a bit of humor in one's system.

OTONABEE BOWLERS WILL PLAY OFF TIE

TEAMS FROM SIXTH AND EIGHTH LINES TO MEET SATURDAY NIGHT

Frequent features at the Water street bowling alleys will be matches between country clubs. A match has been scheduled for next Saturday night between the Sixth Line and Eighth Line of Otonabee. This game should be of particular interest as up to the present these teams have met twice and the result has been a game to the credit of each team. Therefore they both go into this contest determined on a victory, and a very interesting game is sure to result.

A picture which attracts everybody's attention at the Tate gallery by its position, its size and its striking beauty is that of a lady riding on a white horse through an archway into a courtyard. She is dressed in a green velvet riding habit of the time of Charles II., with a long red feather in her gray hat. On her left stands a page in an old gold velvet suit, with a dog by his side. This picture has a remarkable history, as well as numerous titles. The catalogue calls it "Equestrian Portrait," but it is also known as "Nell Gwynne," the name given it by Millais, and also sometimes as "Diana Vernon." The fact is that Sir Edwin Landseer left this picture unfinished. He painted the horse and its trappings, intending it for an equestrian portrait of Queen Victoria. But he died and left the picture unfinished, and it was sent to Sir John Millais, who painted his own daughter in this old riding costume, together with the page, the dog and the background. The picture was begun in 1870 and finished twelve years later.—London Citizen.

No Place For Ladies.

A famous foreign newspaper correspondent, a German, was stopping at a seaside hotel where the dining room helpers, following the New England custom, were nearly all college girls, working during vacation in order to keep themselves at school the rest of the year.

The spectacled young person who presided over the table where the German newspaper man ate was undoubtedly of excellent breeding, but she never seemed to remember whether the eggs were to be fried on one side or scrambled on both.

Finally, one evening after he had been served with a meal entirely different from the one he had ordered, the foreigner lost his temper and spoke rather sharply to the young woman.

"But I do not vant a lady," said the German plaintively. "I vant a waiter!"—Saturday Evening Post.

The Ax in the Glacier.

Zurbiggen, one of the celebrated mountain climbers of the world, in scaling a peak of Les Angiaises, near Chamonix, accidentally let his ice ax fall from near the summit of the peak. It fell some thousands of feet. In the normal course of things it was buried in snow and swallowed up in the glacier, being covered deeper and deeper each year, and at the same time being carried slowly downward as the ice flowed on. Seven or eight years afterward Hon. C. G. Bruce and Harkbir, a sepoy chief, in descending a peak in the Alps just as night was falling and a great crevasse barred the way, being unable to find the bridge over it, cut a path down to the bottom, where Harkbir stepped on an ax which had "M. Z.," Zurbiggen's initials, on the handle. There could be no mistake as to the identity of the ax, as Harkbir had seen it and used it before.—Christian Herald.

Energy in the Sun.

At the distance of the earth from it (93,000,000 miles), the heat energy yearly expended by the sun is as great in amount as would be produced by the burning of sixty-six globes of the best anthracite coal, each as heavy as the earth, or 5,346 such globes, each equal in weight to the moon. But the greater part of this energy is, as far as we can see, expended upon empty space because, except where a planetary body is interposed in the path of the rays, there is nothing for them to act upon. Only about two-thousand-millionth of the sun's radiant energy is intercepted by the earth and only about one two-hundred-and-twenty-five-millionth by all the planets together. This makes the sun look like a gigantic spendthrift, but if he did not radiate in every direction he would not be seen from distant space; he would not be a star among the stars, and who can say that what he expends to make himself known and to maintain his rank in the universe, is not as well spent as the gratuities that he flings to his planets.—Garrett P. Serviss in Spokane Review.

How to Win.

This is an age of specialization, my boy, and the only men who succeed in a big way are those who pick out some particular line of work and live with it until they get to know more about it than most other fellows. Concentration, consistent and persistent effort in one direction is the surest road to success. You'll never win in a big way—except accidentally—if you scatter your energies. The best steam engine in the world would race itself to ruin without its governor. Keep your mind on your job, specialize in your particular business and try to know as much about it as the man who created it, and, barring misfortune, you'll make more out of that knowledge than you will out of any chance success outside of your business.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Personal Property.

A Cleveland attorney took the Mediterranean trip a month ago. It was his first time across the water, and he stated on his return that he would have had a perfectly glorious time but for the silly questions asked him by customs officials.

It was on the pier at New York that his woes came to a climax. "Open your trunk, please," commanded the custom house officer. "Have you anything in there but personal property?" he continued.

"For heaven's sake! Don't you know what personal property is?" The officer looked up in amazement.

"I thought I did," answered the attorney, "and I can assure you that there is no real estate in my trunk."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Pepys' Library.

Pepys' library since 1724 has been in the possession of Magdalene college, Cambridge. Pepys directed in his will that his collection of books and manuscripts should be transferred on the death of his nephew, John Jackson, to either Trinity college or Magdalene college, Cambridge, and required that the college which received the books should submit to an annual visitation from the other, the purpose of which should be to ascertain whether the trust was being worthily fulfilled. "Could I be sure," Pepys wrote, "of a constant succession of heirs from my said nephew qualified like himself for the use of such a library, I should not entertain a thought of its ever being alienated from them."

Potato Juice Cure.

Potato juice as a remedy for sprains, lumbago, gout, rheumatism and bruises is recommended by Dr. Heaton C. Howard of London in an article in the London Lancet. He cites numerous cases in his own practice in which the pain has been relieved quickly, sometimes by the first application, and the fluid that has exuded into the joint or the membranes has been absorbed within a few days.

Potato juice is used as an ointment, a liniment or a plaster. The raw potatoes are squeezed in a hydraulic press. The starch and nitrogenous matter are removed and the juice boiled down until it is made five times as strong as when fresh. Glycerin is added to preserve it.

Sargent and His Pictures.

When Sargent has finished a picture he is heartily glad to see the last of it. The story goes that a royal visitor to his studio said, after looking over the pictures, "I wonder you can bear to part with them." "Sir," answered Sargent, "having finished a picture, I am like a hen which has laid an egg. 'Come and take it away, come and take it away!' I exclaim. Its removal enables me to start another."—Sheffield

Seventeen Year Locusts.

The song of the cicada is the noisiest in the insect world. The seventeen-year cicada has been called the Rip Van Winkle of the insect world. From its tiny eggs there issues a creature with soft white body and mole-like front legs. It burries to the ground and disappears beneath its surface sometimes to a depth of twenty feet. For seventeen years it digs its way around in absolute darkness and then comes to the surface to join in a marriage revelry of a few brief weeks. It is a full fledged creature of the air, though encased still in grave clothes of parchment, but it soon splits these up the back, pulls itself out, dries its powerful wings and flies away with the whirr of an aeroplane to live but a few brief weeks.—National Geographical Society Bulletin.

Advice From Mark Twain.

There is a gem in a letter from Mark Twain to Will M. Clemens, who wanted some advice:

"How can I advise another man wisely out of such a capital as a life filled with mistakes? Advise him how to avoid the like? No, for opportunities to make the same mistakes do not happen to any two men. Your own experiences may possibly teach you, but another man's can't. I do not know anything for a person to do but just peg along, doing the things that offer and regretting them the next day. It is my way and everybody's."—New York Mail.

Built From the Coliseum.

Many of the important palaces of Rome are made from stone taken from the ruins of the Coliseum, which, in spite of the ravages of two earthquakes, remained intact until the eighth century. The Barberini, Farnese, and Cancellaria were all built from the walls of this edifice, but the spoliation is not so unworthy when we realize the stone had fallen from repeated earthquakes, thus suggesting its transportation.

"Yes," replied the manager. "At first I was going to stop it. But it isn't a very good orchestra. And the way it plays German music would be enough to break the heart of any German who happened to hear it."

Nature Slips a Cog.

Corruption will never want a pretense.—Cato.

Straight Talk a Virtue.

Everybody respects the man who talks without circumlocution and who means what he says, whose tongue is not twisted and who goes right to the mark, never seeking to mislead or to misrepresent. Straight talk is a virtue that is practiced all too little. Imagine what a different world this would be if there were no other kind in business, in domestic affairs, in society, in diplomacy—between employers and workers, politicians and people, government and governed and in the professional and the business world! How large a part of many men's occupations would be gone if there was never anything but perfectly straight talk between man and man!—Christian Herald.

Funeral Festivals.

The Greeks and the Romans never prescribed chilling silence at funerals. On the contrary, they regarded them as festivals and entertainments and chose these occurrences for the productions of their great plays. Every comedy of Plautus was first produced at a funeral celebration.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms! Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

LIGHT FIRE LOSSES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Brandon, Feb. 24.—The fire loss for Brandon during the year 1919 was only $9,246, according to a report on the Fire Department submitted to the City Council.

I KNOW IT IS TRUE

About [illegible] years ago a farmer of Dummer Township, well past fifty, was laid up with rheumatism. He was cured and has remained so, by taking Gallagher's Kidney Remedy. If you could only see the splendid herbs—Buchu Leaves, Mandrake Root, Juniper Berries, and many others—all put in a big boiler, steeped, and the tea drawn off, you would say with me that it would be good for one's whole system, whether needing a Kidney Remedy or not. A little [illegible] at night to keep the stomach, liver and bowels active, and Kidney Remedy before meals to keep the kidney's right and help the stomach, and there you are on the road to good health.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

DOWLER—TAYLOR

On Thursday, Feb. 19th., at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Taylor, 580 Bolivar Street, Mr. Francis H. Dowler of Lindsay was married to Miss Emma J. Taylor of Peterborough. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. F. E. Malott of Trinity Church.

Miss Margaret Sullivan, of Lakefield, was visiting friends in Peterborough for the past few days.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sullivan were visiting Miss Margaret Sullivan in Lakefield recently. They were snowbound in that village for three days.

Mr. Verrion Wall, a former member of the Examiner staff and later of the Ottawa Citizen, leaves today to accept a position on the Broader Cities Star, Windsor.

Mrs. E. M. Turner and daughter Dorothy, are visiting friends in Oshawa.

Last evening the Young People's Guild of Knox Church entertained the old people of the Protestant Home to an enjoyable program given by the members of the Guild. The old people were very appreciative and a pleasant evening was spent by all.

NO SMALLPOX IN B. C.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 24.—There is no danger from smallpox in British Columbia and rumors to the contrary are wrong, declares Dr Henry Young, superintendent of the Provincial Board of Health.

Double Murder and suicide but—

..... but for the Grace of God.

HE was intercepted, reasoned with, pleaded with. After two days and two nights spent in prayer and meditation, through the manifestation of the Holy Spirit he was turned from his intense and terrible passion to a magnificent attitude of forgiveness.

THE instrument through which husband and wife were reconciled—and a ghastly tragedy prevented,—was a Salvation Army Officer.

SUCH a change of heart wrought by the Spirit is not rare in the world-wide experience of the Salvation Army.

WILL GIVE LECTURES AT CRESSMAN'S STORE

MARGARET JOSEPHINE BLAIR WILL SPEAK FOR BENEFIT OF CUSTOMERS

Cressman and Company are promising an innovation in their store on March 1st, when Margaret Josephine Blair, a globe-trotting lecturer, will be here for one week. She is a lecturer of well-known ability, and in the course of her lectures has travelled more than 50,000 miles, addressing gatherings in all the largest cities in America. This should be of interest to Peterborough shoppers, particularly when it is pointed out that she is neither selling anything nor is any charge being made for her lectures. It is, therefore evident that the only object which Cressman and Company could have had in mind when engaging Madame Blair to come to Peterborough was the entertainment of their customers.

Newspapers speak well of her lectures in all the cities she has visited, and describe them as both educating and interestingly humorous. The subjects which she will speak on while in Peterborough are "Dancing for the Health," "Dressing for Beauty," "The Use of the Dining-Room," "The House We Live in," and "The Skin That Covers Me." She will also conduct a question box.

TEACHERS' PAY IN THE WEST

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Saskatoon, Feb. 24.—The School Board of this city has granted the minimum salary of $1200 for grade teachers. Revision of the schedule effected, calls for a maximum increase of $490 and a minimum increase of $272, over the salary schedule of 1919. The teachers' associations have accepted the schedule.

CHANCE OF A LIFETIME AT TRINITY CHURCH

SPECIAL SERVICES TO CELEBRATE THE FIFTH SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY

The unique occurrence of a Sunday on the 29th of February will be celebrated at Trinity Church by services of a special character. It is desired that every member of every family connected with the church should be at these services. It will be once in a life time on the 29th of February, for a great many special arrangements are being made to have the services attractive and helpful for both young and old. Parents are requested to plan to bring even the youngest of their children. The Sunday school service also will be of unusual interest. It will be Missionary Sunday and the offering will be for that fund.

An open session of the men's organizations will be held at three o'clock in the church at which the pastor and Mr. Joseph Wearing will speak.

LABOR DELEGATES ARE GUESTS AT THE GRAND

"The Right to Happiness," now being shown in Peterborough for the first time at the Grand Opera House, is a film of unusual interest and full of useful lessons to all classes. While there was a good attendance last night it was by no means the attendance which the picture deserves, but it is expected that by the time that those who saw it last night have spread their story it will be showing to overcrowded houses. The workers blame the capitalists and the capitalists blame the workers, but this picture endeavors to show that in most cases both are to blame. It opposes the greed of the man who thinks of nought but profit, but at the same time it portrays the uselessness as a remedy for these things, of Bolshevism, and suggests that beneath the unrest throughout the continent is working the hand of Bolshevism guided and financed from Russia, the home of Bolshevists.

Environment also plays a star part in the picture. The twin daughters of a rich American in Russia become separated during the massacre of 1898, one being found by her father and brought up in a life of luxury and the other being found by some fleeing Russian peasants and brought up in the greatest poverty and with a hatred for the "upper classes." The American returns to his native land after his loss, and sets about to amass a fortune regardless of everything else in the world. His one soft spot is his love for his daughter, upon whom he lavishes every luxury possible. His partner is more humane and is always pleading for better consideration for the employes of the factory, but to all these pleadings a deaf ear is turned until finally the partner leaves him in despair and starts a factory of his own, run on model conditions.

There is a space of nineteen years and the great war has just been brought to a close, leaving Russia in a state of chaos, out of which comes Bolshevism. These Bolshevists send missionaries of their cause all over the world and among them the American's lost daughter is sent to America. Conditions are so bad in the American's factory that she is able to preach the doctrine of Bolshevism to them and one day they go out on strike and march to the employer's house determined to force their terms upon him. In the midst of the tumult his daughter arrives at the house and an attempt is made by some of the Bolshevist leaders to take her life as a means of getting at her father. Her unknown sister disagrees with this method and when the attempt is made she steps in the way and receives the bullet herself.

Discovering all, the employer is struck with remorse and promises that conditions will be altered at the factory. The Bolshevist element come out in their true colors and urge the workmen to accept no terms but the workmen choose Americanism in preference to Bolshevism and rout their Russian leaders.

The delegates to the Trades Council marched from the Labor Hall to the theatre in a body and were seated in two rows across the theatre. Coming out after the show they were heard to express their great admiration for the picture and its moral. They were of the opinion that it exemplified the true spirit of Labor which is justice for all and which had no room in its creed for either capitalistic greed or Bolshevism.

AT KING EDWARD SCHOOL

At Home Held by the Home and School Club Members.

The King Edward Home and School Club was "at home" on Friday evening last to the Queen Mary Home and School Club. A large number of parents and teachers spent a very jolly evening in the pleasant kindergarten room of King Edward School. A most amusing program was provided by the King Edward staff, after which the ladies served refreshments.

The south end is working up an excellent club.

Y.W.C.A.

Can you swim? If not, come to the Y.W.C.A. swimming pools and learn. There are classes for "your mothers and your sisters and your aunts and your cousins," and classes for you. Can you dive? This is the place to learn how to do it. What do you know about life saving? Join the class at the Y.W.C.A.

In these times every girl should keep herself physically fit. Swimming is considered one of the best exercises there is for keeping in good condition, and the opportunity for taking this exercise is yours. The pool will be open Monday afternoon and evening next for swimmers, while the first lessons will be given on Tuesday. Register now for the classes next week, or call at the association for information.

Two-Party Line Telephone Service

NECESSARY curtailment of new construction during the war, followed by the unprecedented development since the armistice, have resulted in a universal shortage of telephone material.

In order to utilize our supply of equipment to the best advantage, to reduce delay in installations to a minimum, and to avoid refusing service to anyone, we ask those intending to order telephones to consider the advantages of two-party line service.

With the central energy system in use here the operator can ring either of the telephones on a two-party line without disturbing the other. The cost to the user is substantially lower than for individual line service.

The rate for two-party line service is, for Business telephones, $26.40, and for Residence, $22.00 per annum.

We will be glad to furnish full information to anyone interested.

FRENCH RAILWAY IS COMPLETELY TIED UP BY STRIKERS

DECISION TO CALL OUT MEN RENDERED AT MEETING LAST NIGHT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 25.—Following the decision to call a strike reached by the delegates of the railroad unions at a meeting last night, the Paris-Lyon and Mediterranean Railway was almost completely tied up this morning. All shops were idle and it is expected by this evening the claims of the strike leaders that not a wheel would be turning throughout the system would be realized.

Washington, Feb. 25.—Bainbridge Colby, of New York, who was one of the leaders in the Progressive Party under Theodore Roosevelt, will succeed Robert Lansing as Secretary of State.

GOVERNMENT MAY ABOLISH BOARD OF COMMERCE

HAS BEEN STORM CENTRE SINCE BEGINNING AND ACCOMPLISHED LITTLE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 25.—There a a rumor in circulation today that lacks confirmation in official circles that the Government has under consideration the question of the abolition of the Board of Commerce. Since its inception the Board has been the storm centre and the resignation of Chairman Robson, it is said, has brought matters to a head. The Board in its numerous hearings has met with the strongest opposition from manufacturers, including the textile men and the dairy interests throughout the country, who have fought the rulings of the Board. It is claimed by critics that the Board's rulings have not been successful in reducing the cost of living.

EX-PRESIDENT TAKES STAND IN OWN DEFENSE

M. CAILLAUX EXPLAINS TO SENATE ABOUT HIS DEALINGS WITH ITALY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 25.—Joseph Caillaux, former Premier, explaining his activities in Italy on the resumption today of his trial before the Senate sitting as a High Court, of the charge of having had treasonable dealings with the enemy, said he foresaw in 191 the economic conditions that would prevail after the war. He declared he had sought an economic [illegible] within the Entente [illegible] and France's interests should be safe guarded at the Peace Conference. At no time, M. Caillaux asserted, was there any question of politics or a peace of compromise.

ONCE A REPUBLICAN; IS NOW A DEMOCRAT

(Special Correspondence.)

Washington, Feb. 25.— Mr. Colby the new Secretary of State was a Republican until the famous Bull Moose Bolt at the Chicago Convention in 1912. He had been actively identified with Theodore Roosevelt's candidacy for the Republican nominations for President that year. When Col. Roosevelt bolted the convention, Mr. Colby helped to found the Progressive Party and continued an active leader in 1914, two years later. After that he identified himself with the Democratic Party. Mr. Colby is fifty-one years of age and has been engaged in the practice of law in New York for twenty-eight years. The selection of Mr. Colby came as a surprise, most officials assuming that Frank L. Polk would be the choice of the President. The new Secretary was appointed a member of the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation in July 1917, but retired more than a year ago.

INCREASE IN SALARIES OF CITY OFFICIALS RECOMMENDED BY COM.

Council's Finance Committee Agree on Their Budget Ready for Council's Final Estimates From Which to Strike Tax Rates for 19.0.

Ald. J. J. Turner, chairman of Council's Finance Committee, suggested the amounts to his committee last night, which, after a few slight amendments, were agreed on and will be forwarded to the Council proper for ratification.

Mayor A. A. McIntyre	$1,000.00	$1,000.00
S. R. Armstrong, city clerk and industrial commissioner	2,500.00	3,000.00
Treasurer Frank Adams	1,700.00	2,000.00
Collector W. G. Green	2,000.00	2,250.00
Assessor Henry	1,800.00	2,000.00
City Engineer Parsons	2,500.00	3,200.00
Street Commissioner H. Evans	1,500.00	1,800.00
Sanitary Inspector C. Stapleton	1,100.00	1,600.00
Relief Officer Miller	1,250.00	1,250.00
Plumbing Inspector Thompson	960.00	1,000.00
Janitor R. Wilson	900.00	1,000.00
Assistant Assessor R. Ringer	900.00	1,000.00
Assistant City Clerk Curtis	1,100.00	1,200.00
Miss Johnston	540.00	675.00
Miss Burgess	750.00	800.00
Miss Hennesy		550.00
Miss Gladman	450.00	550.00
Miss Jackson	600.00	640.00
Health Office Dr. McPherson	1,200.00	2,000.00
City Solicitor Widdifield	1,000.00	1,100.00
Auditor F. R. J. Hall	400.00	600.00
Judge Huycke	200.00	300.00
W. F. Johnston	100.00	300.00
James Finnie	75.00	75.00
B. Morrow	75.00	75.00

Ald. Crowe, who while not a member of the Finance Committee, was present as an interested representative of the people, remarked that "it is a shame to offer girls such salaries as proposed. If you want to be generous be generous to those who are getting small wages."

Ald. Crowe will probably oppose in Council some of the increases above scheduled.

In regard to Mr. Armstrong's salary it must be understood that he serves in the dual capacity of clerk and industrial commissioner, in both of which he has rendered and is giving this city exemplory service. Belleville, the other day, appointed an industrial commissioner, at a fixed salary for three years of $3,600, $4,000 and $4,200, while Mr. Armstrong is only offered $3,000 a year for filling two offices, and filling them to entire satisfaction. In fact as industrial commissioner Mr. Armstrong has been responsible in a large measure for the location here of several new industries of late.

Grants Asked For.

On motion of Ald. Hamilton and Morrison the requests for grants to the L.O.L., the Exhibition Board, the Civic Development Commission and the Playgrounds Association were laid over until the appropriations for this year are made for grants.

The district Loyal Orange Lodge is asking $400 toward the 12th of July celebration here this year, the Civic Development Commission is asking $1500 and the Peterborough Exhibition Board hopes for $5,000, the Playgrounds Association asked last evening for $1,000.

In regard to the Playgrounds Association's request, a deputation from this organisation will be invited to meet the Finance Committee and state their case.

M. O. H.'s Salary.

Ald. Hamilton and Morrison moved that the salary of the Medical Health Office, Dr. McPherson, be fixed at $2,000 a year, dating from January 1st last. This carried.

Refunds License.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Morrison committee will recommend that Louis Yeotes be refunded $100 paid by him for an upper flat bowling alley license taken out last year. Mr. Yeotes only used the bowling alley in question three weeks, the floor not being strong enough and he turned the flat into a billiard room, paying $360 license fee for the same.

For Children's Hospital.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Hamilton, committee will recommend $25 for the Sick Children's Hospital in Toronto.

For Library Board.

The Public Library Board's demand for 1920 amounts to $6,600, $600 more than last year. On motion of Ald. Phelan and Morrison this will be paid in monthly instalments.

$450 For Hospital.

Committee acceded to the Nicholls Hospital trust's request for $456 a month this year toward the maintenance of the hospital. The trust hopes this will be the last year financial support will be asked from Council.

COUNCIL'S FINANCE COM. RECOMMENDS $1000 GRANT FOR G.W.V.A. CONVENTION

Six Hundred Picked Delegates to Visit Peterborough Next Month—Biggest of all Similar Conventions.

The City Council's Finance Committee concluded last night to recommend a grant of $1000 to the local branch of the G. W. V. A., with which to assist in entertaining delegates to the Veterans' Convention, to be held here March 17-20 next.

This was the motion of Ald. Morrison and the Mayor. The committee will also recommend that Council's reception committee join with a committee of local veterans to arrange for and carry out all details in connection with this community's entertainment of the 600 to 650 visitors anticipated.

Peterborough City is really committed to entertain on this occasion in keeping with this community's importance, for ex-Mayor Duncan and present Mayor McIntyre dropped in to the G. W. V. A. convention at Windsor last year and invited the convention here this March. Those gentlemen happened to be in Detroit at that time, and took the opportunity of slipping across the bridge to Windsor for the express purpose of assuring the veterans then in convention that if they were to convene in Peterborough this year they would be treated handsomely, and deservedly so.

Last evening Messrs. S. Whatley, R. E. Layfield and R. Muir were a deputation from the local veterans' association in support of the $1,000 they asked and hoped for.

Mr. Muir pointed out that in all cities where the Veterans had convened they had been treated royally and generously. Peterborough, he said had always munificently supported the local branch's needs, and he anticipated that this occasion would prove no exception to past experience. Peterborough veterans were the first to thoroughly organize in the Dominion of Canada; they are the most model body of ex-soldiers in

SEES OBSTACLES IN WAY OF TRADE WITH RUSSIANS

SOVIET GOVERNMENT MUST ACKNOWLEDGE THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE PROPERTY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Copenhagen, Feb. 25.—Harold Scavanius, Danish Minister to Petrograd in an interview today says that it is possible now to say that negotiations between James O'Grady, the British representative, and Maxim Litvinoff of the Soviet Government, will result in the resumption of normal relations with Soviet Russia, but it must be hoped that further detailed negotiations will be entrusted to men with a practical insight into Russian affairs. "I cannot think that serious business men will trade with Russia on the sole basis of negotiations between men representing political theories only," he said. "Business men must insist upon the Soviet Government's acknowledgement of the right of private property, otherwise any connection commercially or financially is an impossibility."

VALUE OF CO-OPERATION

Not only are the members of the Board of Trade interested in the official ticket of nominees for the annual election of the Council on March 2nd., but also in the address of Mr. W. R. Breyfogle on "Organization," to be given tomorrow evening.

The question of continuing the Thursday evening meetings, which have proved so beneficial to the development of Peterborough in the past, will be openly discussed, and views will be generally exchanged on the question of broadening and strengthening cooperation in the Board.

Mr. Breyfogle in organized study, forethought and determination to cary things through, and as these happen to be fundamental to a successful Board of Trade, the members are to have the opportunity of general discussion.

The Council of the Board realizes that the value of cooperation is appreciated more than ever, but wants expressions of opinion before making specific recommendations in the annual reports of March 9th.

Thursday's meeting is likely to be the star session of the Council in point of attendance and interest. Members only are to attend.

ATTEMPT LIFE OF REGENT

Prince Alexander and Premier of Serbia are Both Wounded

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 25. — An attempt has been made to assassinate Prince Regent Alexander of Serbia and Premier Protiten, according to a Trieste despatch forwarded by the Central News' Rome correspondent. Both the Prince Regent and the Premier were wounded, the despatch declares.

ANOTHER HIGHWAY TO BE TAKEN OVER

HAMILTON, GUELPH, OWEN SOUNR ROAD WILL BE PROVINCIAL HIGHWAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 25.—One of the first addition roads to be taken over as a Provincial highway will be the Hamilton-Guelph-Owen Sound Highway, according to assurances given by Hon. F. C. Biggs to a deputation from the municipalities concerned at the Parliament buildings this morning. The speakers, who included T. Hannigan, Guelph, urged the inclusion of the district concerned in the Provincial highway system as soon as possible. The Minister's reply was regarded as very favorable.

SMALLPOX SITUATION IN CITY DAILY GROWING MORE SERIOUS

Medical Health Officer Says New Cases are Being Reported and Advises the Citizens to be Vaccinated, Flu is on the Decline

The smallpox situation in the city of Peterborough is getting more serious every day. New cases are being reported at the rate of one a day, the M.O.H. stated this morning. Yesterday the Grand Trunk train from Orillia came into Peterborough with a smallpox case on board. The victim was taken off the train and sent to the Isolation Hospital. It appears that smallpox is prevalent not only in Peterborough but in the surrounding parts of Central Ontario. Prevention is better than cure in this disease and once again the M.O.H. urges all to get vaccinated without delay if they have not already done so.

Influenza appears to be on the wane in this city although there are still a number of mild cases. An Isolation Hospital for this disease was opened to take care of the overflow from the other hospitals, but so far it has not done a rushing business. Up to the present only one patient has been admitted. Colds, grippe and such ailments are reported to be numerous just at present, but the people, with visions of last year's epidemic, are taking no chances and in most cases the slightest cold is receiving medical attention without delay and it is to this fact that the decline in "flu" cases is laid.

SENSATIONAL CHARGES HAVE BEEN LAUNCHED AGAINST JACK DEMPSEY

San Francisco, Cal., Feb. 25.—Jack Dempsey, world's heavyweight boxing champion, and his manager, Jack Kearns, will be indicted by the Federal Grand Jury, which will file its report Friday. The Grand Jury voted to return these indictments. Whether there will be other indictments in the case was not stated.

Dempsey and Kearns are to be charged with having made false statements and otherwise perjuring themselves in furnishing information to the Draft Board in San Francisco that placed Dempsey in the deferred class when he was called as a soldier.

INdictment Returnable Friady

That the Department of Justice was spre of its ground in the investigation of the Dempsey case was made known when E. E. Orr, Agent of the Department, said the Federal Grand Jury would return an indictment, Friday being the last day of the jury's sitting.

Sensational charges against Dempsey were intimated by Orr, in connection with alleged letters of Dempsey to Mrs. Dempsey and to other friends in Wells Nev., where Orr went a few weeks ago to uncover information on the status of Dempsey during the war period.

Some Incriminating Letters.

That the Government, since Orr's visit to Wells, has been in possession of thirty-five letters upon which the charges against Dempsey and Kearns are based was admitted by E. W Blanford, chief for this district of the Department of Justice. Blanford refused to make known the contents of the letters, saying the Government would not show its hand before the trial.

E. E. Orr also refused to comment on the letters, except to concede that the Govern[illegible] would lean largely on the letters in the [illegible] which he admitted would take place

Government Guards Secret

"Naturally Dempsey cannot remember what he wrote a year and a half ago," said Orr, "and naturally he would like to know what is in those letters. But the Government does not intend to give them out." United States Prosecuting Attorney Adams refused to comment on the case in any way.

The charges against Dempsey and Kearns are based on an alleged conspiracy on the part of the two to secure Dempsey's exemption from military service on the ground of dependents.

Wife Supports Dempsey.

It is said on this ground Dempsey was placed in class 4 of the draft while the Government Prosecutor asserts that Dempsey did not have dependents, and intimates that Dempsey not only did not support his divorced wife, Maxine Dempsey, a dance hall girl of Wells, Nev., during the period mentioned in the charges, but that she supported him

The position of the Government in this particular arose from the famous letter of Mrs. Dempsey to the Chronicle, in which she stated Dempsey did not support her during the war and alleged that she signed exemption papers under threat.

LONDON JOURNALS AT ODDS OVER THE RUSSIAN PROBLEM

TIMES AND OTHER PAPERS CONDEMN AGREEMENT LABOR ORGAN REJOICES

London, Feb. 25.—The announcement of the allied policy toward Russia has evoked mixed comment from the London press. The Times, which is a strong opponent of Bolshevism, bitterly accuses Premier Lloyd George with having for more than a year "sought for his own purposes to throw weak, ignorant and reluctant Europe into the venal arms of her Bolshevik seducer."

The Daily News says the new policy bears all the marks of compromise, while the Chronicle says yesterday's decision embodies a big step forward but is masked under evasive expressions. The Labor organ, the Herald, exults over the decision, saying the action should have been taken a year ago.

Three bottles of whisky were found in the club bag of a Toronto man in London and he was fined $200.

ITALIAN WORKERS DECLARE SOVIET ADMINISTRATION

SEIZE MUNICIPAL BUILDING IN ONE TOWN AND RESIST MILITARY FORCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 25.—Workers at Pieve-Di-Soligo, Italy, have seized the municipal buildings and proclaimed a Soviet Government, according to a Rome dispatch to the Central News, which says fighting has taken place between the workers and the Carabineers in which many were wounded. A general strike in sympathy with striking metal workers has been declared by the Labor Chamber at Naples, while disorders have also occurred at Vittorio and Montebelluna.

ASQUITH ELECTED, BY BIG PLURALITY OVER LABOR MAN

EX-PREMIER POLLED ABOUT AS MANY VOTES AS TWO OPPONENTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 25.—Former Premier Herbert H. Asquith was elected to Parliament from Paisley constituency in the recent byelection. Announcement of the result was made this afternoon.

Mr. Asquith polled 14,694 votes against 11,840 for J. M. Biggar, Labor candidate, and 3778 for J. A. D. Mackean, Coalition.

Meets Mixed Reception

The announcement of the result met with mixed reception from a crowd of 10,000 persons gathered about the county building at Paisley, there being cheering and hooting. Mr. Asquith appeared on the balcony of the building, but did not attempt to speak because of the great din. When he left he was pelted with meal and an attempt was made to halt his motor car with a rope, Ultimately he burst through the obstructions amid a babel of cheers and hisses.

JUDGE ROBSON RESIGNS OFFICIAL POSITION

TO RETIRE FROM BOARD OF COMMERCE BECAUSE OF FRICTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 25.—The resignation of Chairman Judge Robson from the Board of Commerce is before the Cabinet, but has not been accepted as yet. It is expected that it will be accepted at today's meeting of the Cabinet Council. It was stated that the action taken by the Chairman was not due to any lack of support by the Government, but is due to internal friction.

$211.00 FOR ASHES FROM INCINERATOR

ARTHUR STENSON, HIGHEST BIDDER— MORE LAND FOR PROTESTANT HOME

The Council's Property Committee received last night the following tenders for the ashes from the incinerator:

M. M. Stevens	$156.00
Arthur Stenson	211.00

The tender of Arthur Stenson was accepted.

Land for Protestant Home.

Flora H. Davidson, superintendent of the Protestant Home, wrote on behalf of the board of managers, asking Council to grant a piece of land 50 x 900 feet north of the Home on which to build a house for the caretaker: This lot is a triangular one.

Messrs. J. A. Aylmer, E. F. Mason and Henry Rush were present in support of this request. This land, of which the directors ask a grant, is situated on the old Hilliard property, acquired by the city during ex-Mayor H. Rush's regime.

The city originally conveyed six acres for a Protestant Home at a value of $1200, and the Home board paid $172 to the House of Providence as the Roman Catholics' proportionate share of the city's appropriation for Home purposes.

On motion of the Mayor and Ald. Crowe, the Protestant Home's request was granted on the same conditions as those contained in the bylaw for the present site of the Home.

There were present Chairman Ald. Jones, Mayor McIntyre, Ald. Crowe and Whitehouse.

ALLAN B. MANN FOR PARLIAMENT.

ONE SIGNIFICANT FEATURE of the U. F. O. movement is the fact that so many young men are actively interested in it. At the banquet Monday night this fact was in evidence. It was young men who took part in the program. Allan B, Mann of Smith and C. E. Moore of the same township were among the speakers, Mr. Mann being given the post of honor in proposing the toast to the farm women of Ontario.

Mr. Mann has already been slated as the candidate of the U. F. O. in the next Dominion election. He has been a Liberal all his life, but probably like so many former worshippers at that shrine, sees no hope in continuing the allegiance. Anyway he seems an integral part of the new party now. He is a bright young man with a host of friends, and is recognized as one of the most progressive and prosperous farmers in Peterborough county, excelling especially in the breeding of high class stock. His farm, out near Bridgenorth, which has been in possession of the Mann family for over one hundred years, or since the Crown deed was issued, is one of the show places of the county.

Long before the U. F. O. party was organized Mr. Mann was identified with agricultural propaganda, having for years been active in the Farmers' Institute as secretary, a position which he still holds in the successor to that institution, the Board of Agriculture.

WAGES AND THE TARIFF.

ANALYZING THE RELATION of wages to the tariff Dr. F. W. Taussig, of the Department of Economics in Columbia University, and until recently chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, in a special article in the Atlantic Monthly, considers the effect upon the United States of free trade, and what he says applies with equal force to Canada. Dr. Taussig, who is a Democrat, who was appointed chairman of the Tariff Commission by President Wilson, and who, before the war might properly have been classed as an out-and-out free trader, has modified his views considerably and now states that there are conditions under which protection is desirable. While he repudiates the doctrine of universal ruin to American industries from free trade, he says:

"None the less, the change would be absolutely large There would be shutdowns, attempts to meet the situation by lowering wages, strikes, slow transfer of laborers to other regions and other industries, business failures empty mills and villages, a trying readjustment of prices and probably of the general scale of money wages, hard times, and uncertain employment."

Again, he says: "So great are the difficulties of an abrupt shift from one industrial policy to another—the real ones, not the imaginary ones of universal collapse and perpetual ruin—that no country, it can safely be predicted, will ever adopt such a ruthless procedure. If a change takes place, it will be by slow and gradual steps; and the first steps will be for a short start in a new direction, not at the moment of much consequence. Meanwhile, the bulk of the established industries will be safeguarded. And within the range of the industries thus protected it will remain true that wages can be kept high only so long as the protection is maintained."

THE STONE PILE FOR CRIMINALS.

SOME YEARS AGO they sent men to the penitentiary at Kingston with the avowed purpose of making them honest citizens. What was the favorite method adopted to attain this worthy object?

They put the criminal population to work in those days, the manufacture of boots and shoes being carried on extensively. Some manufacturers, who had a "pull" with the political party in power, hired the inmates of the prison at a nominal wage, barely sufficient to pay the State for their scanty maintenance, and put them to work on his shoe contracts. Men sent to prison for cheating their fellows were instructed in the principles of honest dealing by being taught to manufacture boots and shoes the soles of which consisted largely of paper. The products of that prison labor have still painful memories for any man who ever had to wear the articles turned out. The system was one of the easiest party grafts ever maintained in this country.

It was Organized Labor that put a stop to this system. Workingmen at liberty, who were charged with the duty of supporting themselves and their families, objected to this competition of prison labor and the method of employing the convicts was finally abandoned.

Then another expert in the treatment of those convicted of crime evolved the most lugubrious plan of all. It would never do to keep the criminals in actual idleness, so work for work's sake was invented. The men in confinement are required to break stone, but no practical use is ever made of this product of the prison yard. The convicts are simply engaged in unproductive toil and the course of training confirms them in the belief that labor is a sentence imposed upon mankind as a punishment for human sins.

When the late Sir Oliver Mowat was Minister of Justice he introduced still more drastic measures for the punishment of criminals. He believed in the good old Celtic creed that the man who sinned should be made to suffer to the limit. In no other way was there the slightest chance to effect his reformation. One line of suffering imposed by Sir Oliver was the prohibition of the use of tobacco in all penal institutions.

W. S. Hughes, Dominion superintendent, has just come to the front with suggestions for changes in the treatment of prisoners. He would permit the use of tobacco and would abolish the stone pile at Kingston, that atrocity that more than anything else tends to destroy the last vestige of self-respect the convicted man may have. Mr. Hughes believes that the men should be put at productive work at small wages, that allowed the married men to be used for the support of their families, and that paid single men to be kept to their credit, and upon their release to be used for giving them a new start in life.

The idea is sound, but when Mr. Hughes speaks of "small wages," he is likely to revive the old agitation that resulted in the abolition of prison-made, paper-soled shoes. He will fall foul of Organized Labor if he insists upon this point. There is no possible reason that can be urged to show why free labor should be made to suffer for the offences of men who violate the law. If a prison factory is maintained, it should be conducted on the same general lines as those followed by the private manufacturer. The State cannot be expected to maintain convicts in idleness. It is not fair, either, for the State to make the innocent women and children or other dependents of the convicted men suffer with him by depriving them of his services. Wages paid such men while in prison should be equal to the amount he was capable of earning while at liberty, and he should be required to earn it, too, just as the free workingmen is.

THE ENTRANCE EXAMINATION.

THE HOCKEY PLAYER, we are assured by the sporting writers, plays best on his home ice. The baseball player is always expected to give a better account of himself on the home diamond, and the race horse, trotter, pacer or runner, acquits himself with greater distinction when performing on a track with which he is familiar. Any man, or woman either, invariably appears most to advantage while in the midst of home surroundings, and their mental condition is certainly more normal.

But the rural school pupil, when comes the first great test in his academic career, writing at the Entrance examination, is taken from the school and the surroundings with which he is familiar, and required to appear among strangers in the town or city. Who can wonder if under such conditions a large percentage of such children, unaccustomed as they are to novelty or a change of scene of any kind, go to pieces under the new conditions and fail to do themselves or their teachers justice?

The school laws of Ontario are to be remodelled by the new Government. Changes will be made in the regulations governing the Entrance examination. Mrs. R. B. Brodie, in her address in this city Monday night said that the school was really part of the home, and as such was an institution in which every mother should interest herself. Members of the U. F. W. O. have already put themselves on record and will ask the Government to arrange for the holding of Entrance examinations in the schools that the candidates have attended and that the record made by such candidates during the year be taken into consideration.

This at first sight may appear a cumbersome and expensive plan. But why cannot the rural school inspector be vested with authority to decree what pupils are ready for the High schools, no man being in a position to know better or to render so unbiased a decision?

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson IX (XXII) Feb. 29.

PETER WRITES ABOUT CHRISTIAN LIVING.

The Golden Text.—"He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also to walk even as he walked."—I. John 2:6.

The Lesson Text, I Peter 2:1-5, 11, 12, 19-25.

The Time.—Probably about A.D. 64.

The Place.—Babylon. I Peter 5:13. Some commentators interpret this to mean Rome.

Lesson Text Illumined.

1. Putting away therefore all wickedness. As sons of God and born anew. Because the time of the trial which yet remains is brief. Malice and trickery and hypocrisy and slander are especially proscribed, these vices being regarded as the survivals of the old, bad life on which the sons of God have turned their backs.

2. As newborn babes. In Peter's view Christians are always babes, and that, too, recently born, cf., ch. 1:3, 23; not that those addressed were recent converts, but that they have experienced a complete change of life and character and are therefore tender. If the Epistle was addressed to the Pauline churches in Asia Minor, few of them had given up heathenism for Christianity for more than a dozen years. They were therefore young in the faith. In respect to eternity, "the beginning of the new life must always seem a thing of yesterday" (von Soden). The spiritual milk. The adjective logikon, from logos, "word," describes the milk and is used elsewhere in the New Testament only in Rom. 12:1. It is therefore rendered as in the margin of the A.R., "belonging to the reason." The gospel "word" is thus conceived of by Peter as reasonable and rational. That ye may grow. Salvation is thus conceived of as a growth. Cf. Phil. 2:12, "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling"; Eph. 4:11-15.

3. If ye have tasted. Cf. Ps. 34:8. "Taste and see that Jehovah is good." That the Lord is gracious. "How sweet the Lord is" (Vulgate)!

4. Unto whom. Though commencing a new subject, Peter connects it with the previous clause by means of a relative pronoun, as in his custom. Cf. ch. 1:8, 10. A living stone Christ is here conceived of as the head corner stone of a spiritual building, instinct with life; "an animated stone," but more, one which lives spiritually and eternally, and in or which if one is to be built he must be holy. Rejected indeed of men. Cf. Ps. 118:22. Precious. A favorite expression of Peter. Cf. v. 7: also ch. 1:7, 19.

5. Ye also, as living stones, are built up. That is, fitted into the elect and precious chief corner stone. Peter here keeps in view the corporate idea of the Christian life: the house or temple is the community, as in Eph. 2:21, 22, not the individual soul as in I Cor. 3:16; 6:19" (Bigg). To be a holy priesthood. True believers are at once both temple and priesthood. Jesus similarly spoke of himself as both the door of the fold and the shepherd. John 10:9, 11. To offer up spiritual sacrifice. Namely, ourselves, through unfeigned love and faith and thanksgiving and service. Acceptable to God. Because of Christ's own perfect oblation of himself.

11. Beloved. Peter now begins to give directions as to how to treat those who are not Christians. In general he bids his readers to live blameless lives before those who will ever be on the watch to criticise them. As sojourners and pilgrims. Living in a foreign country, without the rights of citizenship as "Uitlanders," having no permanent homes; visitors, not settlers. The true home of the Christian is heaven; his citizenship is there not here. Phil. 3:20. Abstain from fleshly lusts. For, though only sojourners and strangers, they owe a duty to the lawless heathen among whom they dwell. Which war against the soul. Reference is therefore to all those inclinations to selfindulgence and self-seeking.

12. Behavior. Manner of living, conduct. Cf. 1:15. Seemly. That is, such as commends itself to men's moral judgment. The Gentiles. Non-Christians here. The Jews of course had used this term of non-Jews. They speak against you as evildoers. Impeaching their motives and slandering them without cause. Early Christians were accused of cannibalism as well as incest. The modern missionary knows what this means; likewise, the Jews, and all others who have suffered the effects of ignorant hate! Glorify God in the day of visitation. Referring to the Second Coming as a day of Judgement. Cf. Luke 19:44, "time of visitation"; and Isa. 10:3, "the day of visitation"; or, the day when Jehovah appears to right the oppressed and punish the oppressors.

19. Acceptable. Before God. If for conscience toward God. Or, born of a sense of duty. Endureth griefs. Torture, imprisonment, slavery, and all such kinds of cruelty. Aristotle taught that justice, in the proper sense of the word, does not exist between a man and his chattels, his children or slaves.

20. For what glory is it? What cause is there for pride? To be patient when justly punished is no merit. But if. This and similar passages were once used by Christian ministers in justification of slavery.

21. Hereunto were ye called. To patient endurance and passivity under trial. Cf. Matt. 5:39. Because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example. Not, because as Christ, the Messiah, and as the Son of God, he could take no other course, but as "an example." "Put up thy sword," therefore, spoken to Peter at the time of his arrest, was not said because he was Peter's Saviour, but because he was leaving Peter "an example"!

22. Who did no sin. Cf. Isa. 53:9. Peter had already taught the sinlessness of Christ. Cf. ch. 1:19.

23. When he was reviled, reviled not again. A principle not restricted to times of peace. Cf. Matt. 5:39 ff.

24, 25. Verses 24 and 25 remind us of Isa. 53:5, 6, 11, 12. The tree. The cross; on which a criminal slave was usually executed. Might live unto righteousness. This was one of the supreme purposes of Christ's death. Now. Since their conversion. Unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls. Christ was both.—Prof. Geo. L. Robinson, PhD., D.D.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

George Washington was inaugurated first President of the United States April 30, 1789, in New York City, which at that time was the federal Capital. During the ceremonies the chancellor administered the oath with great deliberation and emphasis, after which Washington bowed down, seized the Bible, kissed it, and exclaimed with closed eyes and much devotion, "I swear, so help me God."

Thereupon the chancellor declared, "It is dine," and turning to the crowd exclaimed: "Long live George Washington, President of the United States!" The last named declaration on the part of the chancellor was in imitation of monarchical custom. The error of this practice was, however, soon exposed and abandoned, but at the time the crowd thought of nothing but the exciting solemnity of the scene, and many who demonstratively waved their hats were too overcome by emotion to join in the huzzas.

On taking the oath Washington is said to have laid his hand upon the page of the Bible containing the fiftieth chapter of Genesis, opposite to which were two illustrations of the text, one being a picture of "The Blessing of Zebulon," and the other of "The Prophecy of Issachar."

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

THE NEGRO OFFERS PARALLEL PROBLEM

(Wall Street Journal.)

With no intention of comparing the supersensitive Irishman to the negro, but to draw an instructive international parallel, it is necessary to supplement the merely business comment made in these columns, on the attempt to raise money for Irish propaganda by means of receipts for subscriptions improperly and deceptively called "bonds." That our immense present strength in the world protects us from British resentment of what is nevertheless an offence against international good feeling goes without question.

But let us imagine a close parallel. Let us suppose the negroes of the former slave states, intelligently and unscrupulously led, resented the failure to enforce the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. Let us suppose that they formed a party for agitation, at home and abroad. Let us further assume that they kept the loyal white minority in constant costly uncertainty and alarm. Let us suppose that they called this party of agitation a "republic," and sent representatives to stir up feeling in England against the American Government.

Substituting, purely for supposition, of course, "negro" for "nationalist," these delegates in England would be substantially in the same position as De Valera and his following now occupy in the United States. There would be exactly the same appeal to sympathy, because, to offset the Irish in America, there are colored races presumably in sympathy with our negroes, greatly outnumbering them even as our Irish are said to outnumber the present inhabitants of Ireland.

Exactly as the Irish agitator here pleads that the Ulsterman, a convinced supporter of British rule, should be ignored because of a voting minority, so the negro agitator in Britain might demand that the white minority of the population of the former Confederate states should also be ignored in the process of what he would undoubtedly call, like De Valera, "self-determination."

It would be absurd also to tell the Englishman that he was unable to understand a purely domestic problem, like that our American negro presents. Not only could he retort in kind about our meddling in Ireland; he could also tell us, with considerable truth, that he had been successfully governing colored races before we were weaned. He would only need to point to the all-pervading red on the map of the world to prove his case.

Under British law no such negro bond issue could even be offered to the public. Under British good faith such an issue would not be tolerated even if it were legal. Fortunately we are in no danger. But there is an old parable about a mote and a beam which we might more frequently apply in our international affairs.

MEN GETTING SIX TO SEVEN HUNDRED DOLLARS A YEAR FOR WORK ON FARMS

With House, Garden, Milk and Other Inducements Thrown in, Official Report Says.

The folowing is a summary of the reports made by Agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Fall wheat, which entered the Winter in excelling shape continues to be well protected by snow.

The bad condition of the roads recently have prevented much marketing of live stock. Norfolk states that there is also a tendency to hold on to cattle on account of the depressed prices, and adds that there is a reduction in the number of hogs being kept.

According to the Elgin representative there is a scarcity of water on a number of farms, as some wells and springs having gone dry, for which the steadily cold winter is blamed

Wintry weather also appears to be telling upon milk production, which is hardly sufficient for the demands of factorymen and town milk dealers Port Arthur states that milk is retailing locally at 20 cents a quart.

Norfolk reports that eggs are increasing in supply, and that grocers in that county are paying 60 cents a dozen.

Oats and other course grains have advanced in price, and are hard to secure at that.

Hay in Northern Ontario is commanding as high as $36 a ton. In the older portions of the province prices range from $20 to $22 in the barn to $24 to $30 a ton delivered.

Ensilage has proved to be of excellent feeding quality this season and is holding out well.

Farmers in the Port Arthur district are showing enterprise. Several new clover hullers have been brought in lately, and the yield of red clover seed is turning out well. At a meeting of the Marketing Asociation of the district held recently the prices of seed potatoes were set as follows: No. 1: $3.55 a bag; and No. 2: $3.20 a bag F. O. B. at point of shipment

Some farmers are seeking men for Spring work, but so far the response has been slow. Brant states that some reliable married men are getting from $600 to $700 a year with house, garden, milk, etc., end that some well qualified single man are getting nearly the equivalent of that.

When a man is financially embarrassed he is apt to feel that he has friends who only feel sorry for him.

Some men fail to reach the allotted three score and ten years because they attempt to crowd two days into one.

Occasionally a man earns a living without getting it, but more often he manages to get a living without earning it.

When a girl tells a young man she thinks of him every day it is time for him to say something or give the other fellow a chance.

After a man has served as township clerk for about six weeks he imagines himself qualified to take over the recording angel's job.

Women live longer than men, it is said, but according to the census enumerator they never live so many years.

One of the queer things about a man is the way he thinks it is impossible for any woman not to admire him.

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

The name "Bayer" identifies the only genuine Aspirin,—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada. Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally. Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

WILL HOLD DOG DERBY RACES AT HUDSON BAY

ENTRIES FOR RACES PROMISE BEST EVENT OF KIND YET HELD

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas., Man., Feb. 24.—Alaska malmutes, collies, greyhounds, sheep dogs and northern huskies are the species of animals entered in the Hudson Bay Dog Derby classic which will be held here on March 17. The race is run from The Pas to Sturgeon Landing and return, a distance of 106 miles, for a purse of $1,000 and the Derby Cup. The teams will be sent away from scratch after dark on Tuesday, March 16, finishing it is expected 12 hours later on the Saskatchewan River. It is a no-stop race and the first over the finishing line will be declared the winner.

Previous races have been run in blizzards, making the trails blind and the going very rough, tiring the dogs and cutting down the time to 15 hours. With anything like fair weather conditions this time may be bettered by 3 to 4 hours. The entry of Walter Gerne, the Alaska musher with his string of malamutes, has made it difficult to select the favorite. Eliminating Gerne from consideration experienced dog men believe Larry McKay, of Grand Rapids, looms up the most promising. McKay finished second in last year's derby. He drives a wild Barren Lands wolf team, nervous and fierce with enough fleetness of foot to outdistance anything in the race if they can be controlled and kept to the trail.

The Hayes and Campbell brothers are well drilled in derby fixtures and like the other large number of entries they are keeping to the bush, training their teams and laying low for surprises. So far the entry list comprises the following well-known mushers: Larry McKay Joe St. Goddard, Jack and Bill Hayes, Gabriel and Bateese Campbell, Chas. Dysart, Bill Grayson, Vernon Walker, Walter Broosk, J. Bjorkman, Jack Quickley, Billy Rusick, Walter Ross, Chas. Partridge, Billy Lundy, Adam Ballentine, Sam Pranteau, Harry Sanderson, Johnny Turner and Silas Partridge.

FREE SEED WHEAT.

Will Be Distributed Among Farmers Who Lost Crop.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Saskatoon, Feb. 24.—Representing the Provincial Department of Agriculture, eight agents were sent out on Sunday from Regina in connection with the Government's program of relief in the dried-out areas. They will address meetings in various districts and will interview a number of farmers. Orders will be taken for seed wheat, feed oats, flour, coal and hay. The Government has purchased 20,000 bushels of pure seed oats from the Dominion seed purchasing commission to be distributed to those making application to the agents.

MUST PROTECT WILD LIFE.

Or Useful Animals Will Soon Become Extinct.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Feb. 24.—"As a matter of fact, unless steps are taken immediately to give reasonable protection to beneficial wild life, it is only a matter of time before most species will be exterminated. The buffalo in its wild state is now extinct, and the antelope and the elk are the next candidates for oblivion, unless drastic measures are not soon taken to save them." That is the prediction of Chief Game Guadian Fred Bradshaw in the course of an appeal to the young people of the Province to protect Saskatchewan's wild life from destruction.

BUILD ROAD THIS YEAR.

Work on the Line to Nipegon Will Be Continued.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Port Arthur, Feb. 24.—The road to Nipegon will be continued this summer. This statement was made by J. F. Whitson, road commissioner for Ontario, in a letter to the president of the Port Arthur Board of Trade. Mr. Whitson further says the the bridge across the McKenzie River will be commenced in the early spring. He does not say how much is going to be done this year, but promises all that conditions will permit. Grading and gravelling the road from Dorion to Loon will also be continued.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat which clogs Kidneys, then the Back hurts.

Most folks forget that the kidneys like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless: inexpensive: makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

SOILS AND COMPOSTS

Best Suited for Pot Plants, Hot Beds, Seed Sowing, Etc.

Well-rotted, Tough, Fibrous Sod the best Basis—How to Prepare It—Substitute Potting Soil — Bone Meal a Valuable Fertilizer.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

SECURING suitable soil or compost for all features of floriculture or horticulture is a very important matter if the best results are to be obtained.

The best basis for all ordinary potting soils is well-rotted, tough, fibrous sod, taken from loamy or light clay loam soils. Sod from an old pasture field, or from the roadside, from where the grass has been kept fed or cut down constantly, will give the closest growing sod, with lots of fibrous roots attached. These fibrous roots are one of the very necessary essentials in potting soils to keep the soil open and friable. The sod should not be cut from heavy clay soils, or where noxious weeds, especially "couch," "spear" or "twitch" grass is growing. The sod should not be cut from near pine or cedar trees as the turpentine in the leaves or pinnae of these trees is very detrimental to plant life. It is also best not to cut the sod from very swamp soil. Well-rotted barnyard manure such as from an old hot bed, or cow manure, are both good fertiliers to use for a soil compost. Horse manure alone is not a good fertilizer for a compost. About one-third horse manure and the balance cow manure will be suitable. Late in autumn or early spring is the best time to prepare the soil compost, autumn preferred.

How to Prepare.—The sod should be cut about four inches thick, and about eight to ten inches square. It should be stacked out of doors in an out-of-the-way part of the garden or grounds. A space six or eight feet long by five or six feet wide would be a good supply for a small greenhouse, or for a few hot beds for a year or two. Start by placing one layer of sod packed close together with the grass side downward over the space selected. Then add a second and third layer on top of the first layer. About four or five inches in depth of either of the fertilizers mentioned should now be spread evenly over the third layer of sod. Another three layers of sod should then be placed on top of the fertilizer as before. Then another layer of the fertilizer as before, and so on until the pile is four or five feet in height. About two inches in depth of soil should be placed on top of the pile to finish off with. Place some wire netting or brushwood (not pine or cedar) all over the top of the pile to keep off chickens or animals. Keep the pile quite level while building, and draw it in slightly narrower toward the top. It should be flat on the top when finished. It may be necessary to give the pile one or two good soakings with water after it is finished, or during dry weather in summer, to hasten decomposition. In six to eight months it should be ready for use and will keep in good condition for about two years.

Preparing for Use.—When ready for use, trim or slice down, with a sharp spade, the quantity required from top to bottom of the pile so as to secure the proper proportions of soil and fertilizer. For potting purposes this should be put through a coarse sieve having a ⅜-inch mesh. All the decayed fibrous part and the fertilizer, should be worked through the sieve. The partly decayed fibrous or organic matter that will not pass through the sieve readily should be chopped or pulled finely to pieces and put into the soil, if at all decomposed.

Tempering or Mixing Soils.—If the soil is of a heavy clay loamy nature about one part sand should be mixed at the time of using, with eight or nine parts of the sod compost for repotting purposes, for plants such as geraniums, roses, chrysanthemums and similar plants. If the soil the sod is taken from is of a light loamy nature, a very little sand, if any, will be required.

For Begonias, Coleus, Callas (Arum Lilies), Gloxinia, Salvia, Ferns and similar plants one part of leaf soil, (rotted leaves) or black soil from the bush (decayed leaves), may be added to the compost and sand before mentioned. Black leaf soil from the bush alone does not make a good potting soil for but very few plants, it should be mixed with other soil as stated.

Substitute Potting Soil.—A good substitute potting soil or compost may be made by mixing about seven or eight parts of good, light, loamy garden soil, or loamy sub-soil taken from underneath sod, with one part sand and one part leaf soil as before mentioned, mixed well together. One part of dry cow manure, which can be secured from the fields where cows have pastured, or one part of pulverized sheep manure should be added as a fertilizer for this substitute potting soil. The pulverized prepared sheep manure can be purchased at almost all large seed stores at the rate of about $3 per 100 pounds. Or about one pound of fine bone meal or bone flour to each bushel of soil may be used as a substitute fertilizer to those named. Sheep and cow manure are two of the best fertilizers to use in connection with all horticultural work, whether incorporated in potting composts as stated, or used out of doors as liquid solutions for flower borders or the vegetable garden during summer, if the ground is not rich enough in fertilizers. Seepage from the barnyard diluted one-half with water makes a good liquid fertilizer for outdoor use where the soil is poor.—Wm. Hunt, O. A. College, Guelph.

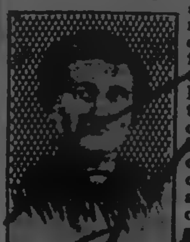
IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and awful pains—and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done such good work for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. LIZZIE COURTNEY, 108 8th Ave., West, Oskaloosa, Iowa.



Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as did Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published. Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life should give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

MILLION CHILDREN ARE CLAD IN RAGS

The art of making two flowers bloom where only one bloomed before isn't half so hard as that of making two garments exist where only one existed before; yet even this can be accomplished, according to reports recently received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

Cloth of any kind, either cotton or wool, is particularly impossible to obtain in Eastern Europe, except at prohibitive prices. A round million little Jewish children in these unhappy lands are clad in the rags that they have worn all through the war, their wasted little bodies showing through great tatters. Some of these children are still sleeping on the streets, since there are at present neither orphanages nor funds for all.

Miss Harriet B. Lowenstein, of New York, sent to Europe as a commissioner of the Joint Distribution Committee of American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers, was able to purchase more than a carload of pajamas from the salvage department of the American army in France. These were sent to Eastern Europe, and in the workrooms opened there were made over into clothing for children.

Each pair of pajamas made at least two Russian blouse suits for little boys it was reported. The larger pieces left over in the cutting were used for the clothe that the children of Eastern Europe bind around their feet in lieu of shoes.

Fifteen men playing poker in Detroit were held up by three bandits, who relieved them of $1,200.

CANADIAN MILLING INDUSTRY

The Canadian milling industry has, since 1914, made progressive strides and flour exports between that year and 1919 increased nearly five times. Today this business has an annual capacity of slightly more than 35,000,000 barrels a year and new mills are being continually added. In 1890 Canada exported 115,099 barrels of flour valued at $521,383. By 1910 this had increased to 3,064,128 barrels valued at about $15,000,000. In the fiscal year of 1919, 9,196,806 barrels were milled at a value of $99,836,696.

Great Britain has been by far, Canada's best customer for flour, her imports from the Dominion of this commodity, for the last fiscal year, being equal to about 60 per cent. of the total, or $56,000,000 out of nearly $100,000,000.

Exports by countries for the last year were as follows:—Great Britain $56,270,225; United States $99,794; British South Africa $17,309; Newfoundland $24,147,527; British West Indies $6,329,527; Other countries $34,147,750.

The Trade returns for the present fiscal year show that, as yet, the exports of flour are holding their own, though the European countries are again engaged in grain growing and milling. In the last available period of five months 4,928,164 barrels of flour were exported, as compared with 4,461,313 in the same period in 1918. Of these 3,012,405 barrels went to the United Kingdom; 38,423 to British Guiana; 146,596 to the British West Indies, 297,845 to France; 100,182 to Greece; 55,735 to Italy; 73,109 to Newfoundland; and 223,084 barrels to other countries. Great Britain took a little more than 1,000,000 more barrels than she did during the same period in 1918, and 1,700,000 more than in 1917. Other departments of the milling industry loom large also, as the following figures show: oatmeal $4,032,647; cereals $4,247,249; bran, etc., $1,592,212.

Whilst on account of the change of conditions in Europe, the export trade may fall off considerably, the Canadian milling industry by reason of the activity produced during the war, is in a very strong position and should be able to hold its own in the period of competition which is undoubtedly ahead. The "Nit" Nott Got.

John Nott could not knit, so he invented a knitter which would knit and which Nott called the "Nott knitter." But the "Nott knitter" could not knit a knot, and Nott therefore had to tie the knots which the "Nott knitter" could not knit. But one day Nott, while not tying knots for the "Nott knitter," invented an attachment for the "Nott knitter" which could knit knots and which he called the "Nott knotter." And when the "Nott knotter" was attached to the "Nott knitter" the "Nott knotter" would knit the knots which the "Nott knitter" could not knit. And not a knitter could knit knots like the knots that Nott knit with the "Nott knotter" for the "Nott knitter."

Then Nott fell in love with a knitter who knitted knots with the "Nott knotter" for the "Nott knitter," and he asked her not to knit knots any longer, but be a Nott forever. But the knitter said "Nit."—Ladies' Home Journal.

The Earth's Interior.

That the interior of the earth is intensely hot is proved by the increase in temperature observed in deep mines and in even deeper borings. It is proved also by the emission of lava, which is nothing more than molten rock, from the craters of volcanoes. But the scientists, who maintain that the earth's interior is not fluid but of the consistency of steel, are probably correct just the same. Matter, when under great pressure, may be rigid even at enormously high temperature. The interior rocks of the earth may be heated to several thousand degrees and still be solid. When pushed up to the surface by volcanic action and relieved from pressure these solid, though superheated, rocks would become immediately liquefied. The practical deep well borers, who find that their drills are softened by the heat of the lower strata, have not got the laugh on the theoretic savants.—Philadelphia Record.

Old Time Gas Charges.

The price of gas in the early part of the last century is shown by a schedule of charges issued by the Liverpool Gaslight company in the year 1817. Instead of so much per cubic foot being levied, each individual burner was charged for, and the price varied according to the hour at which the light was to be extinguished. Thus for using one No. 1 Argand burner up till 8 p. m. £3 per annum had to be paid. For the right to keep it alight until 9 £3 18s. was the figure, while those roistering blades who sat up till 10, 11 or 12 had to disburse £4 10s., £5 12s. and £6 8s. respectively. Imagine the gas bill at a house where ten or twelve burners are flaring away until the small hours if such a method of taxation were in force nowadays!—Liverpool Post.

EAT

WHAT YOU WILL—WHEN YOU WILL—STUART'S DYSPEPSIA TABLETS HELP DIGEST THE MEAL.

Good food in itself is harmless. The usual reason stomach troubles arise is due to faulty digestion brought about by overwork, sickness, overeating, late hours, etc.

The best way to correct faulty stomach troubles due to digestive mistakes is to do what nature wants. All that nature usually needs in such cases is a little assistance to do this work. That is why doctors tell you to diet. Nature is then compelled to aid herself. You do not then overwork her when she is already exhausted.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into your stomach just like food. They help digest food, and thus when the next meal is eaten, the system is better prepared to do its work without assistance.

By following this practice many have corrected their stomach troubles, and have conquered the old "bugbear" of indigestion.

Always take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after meals or just before bed time. By doing this you will be acting wisely and playing safe.

Go to your druggist anywhere and buy a box now. Price, 50 cents.

USED BARBED WIRE FOR MAKING FARM TOOLS

PEASANTS WERE UNABLE TO LOOSEN THE EARTH TRAMPED BY SOLDIERS

Lack of even the crudest agricultural implements was one of the serious problems which confronted the refugee peasant of Ukrania when he crept back to his war-devastated lands. How he solved the problem was interestingly explained by Jacob Bashein, who has just returned from abroad following months of activity in the stricken region as head of Relief Unit No. 14 of the Joint Distribution Committee. The Committee is the sole agency handling the funds collected by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee and other Jewish organizations for war sufferers.

Not only was the country swept clean of its grain fields, herds of cattle and farming implements, said Mr. Bashein, but there were no materials available for manufacturing any sort of implements. In the heaps of coiled and rusted barbed wire scattered over the country when wire entanglements were abandoned, the farmer saw the raw products from which to make himself a tool for farming.

With stones he laboriously battered the barbs from the wire and, notwithstanding the fact that even his toil-hardened hands were often painfully bruised and bleeding, he managed to weave a sort of spade-like implement with which he helped to loosen the bare, brown earth.

"This incident," said Mr. Bashein, "is especially significant as indicating the deplorable need of farming tools when it is remembered that the Ukraine once was considered the granary of Russia.

"But with all the weary toil of weaving and hammering with bleeding hands the tough wire into an implement that might serve, the peasant's effort to cultivate the land was futile. The ground, trampled hard and bare by the feet of countless troops proved too unyielding for the poor instrument fashioned at such cost by the refugee."

FIVE MEALS DAILY FOR NEBRASKAN, 125

HE ALSO SMOKES 18 HOURS, MOURNS LOSS OF WHISKEY

Westville, Neb., Feb. 25 — Tom Morris the Westville's candidate for honor of being the oldest man in America, John Shell, the Kentucky mountaineer, is said to be 131. Well Tom Morris is only 125, but he is 125 no guesswork about it. He has the oldest family Bible, containing the record of his birth, Jan. 15, 1794. And he has other records and proofs.

The old man is not in good health. Blindness came on a couple of years ago. Deafness is approaching. He has been lame for 100 years. He eats five meals every day and smokes his pipe about 16 to 18 hours every day. Before the state went dry he took a drink of whiskey whenever he could get it and he complains bitterly that a thirst he spent more than a century in working up can not be appeased.

For 100 years he has been a shoemaker. He mended shoes in Scotland in 1810, when he was 16 years old. When he came to America in 1871 he brought his tools along with him. His name was Charles Mytton. Now C. Mytton is taking care of the old man.

SUE FOR POKER DEBT.

Judge Says He Will Strain a Point to Force Payment.

Toronto, Feb. 25.—"Poker!" said Judge Morson in the Division Court in the suit of George Wright Co. of the Walker House against Samuel Gluklick to recover $50 on a note made in favor of A. G. Gray, dated February 24, 1919. Gray is at present serving three years in Kingston Penitentiary for the theft of some $12,000 from the Walker House, which Gray lost at poker. "You won't pay your poker debts," said the judge. "A man who won't pay his poker debts ought to be ashamed of himself. You take money when you win, but won't pay when you lose."

As the plaintiff was not in court the judge adjourned the case for a week.

Counsel for plaintiff told the court his client didn't know the note was for a gambling debt when he took it. The defendant pleaded that the note being given for a gambling debt could not be collected.

RAILWAY RATES TO GO UP

Companies Guaranteed Return of 5½ Per Cent. on Capital.

Washington, Feb. 25. — The railroads of the country, shortly after they pass into private control March 1, will ask for and will be granted increases in freight rates amounting to about 20 per cent., and possibly even more. Under the terms of the Cummins-Esch bill, which passed the Senate, and now goes to the President for his signature, the railroads are guaranteed rates which will produce a return of 5½ per cent. on their capital stock. Passenger fares also may be jumped up.

LOCAL BOWLERS TO PLAY ROSEDALE TEAM

FIRST GAME WILL BE PLAYED HERE ABOUT MARCH 12

An invitation has been received by the local bowlers from Mr. C. H. Keyes, captain of the Rosedale Bowling Club for two games, one to be played in Toronto and the other to be played in Peterborough. This invitation has been accepted and it is expected that the first game will be played in Toronto on or about Mar. 12 and the return game in Peterborough a week later. These two clubs met a year ago and each won three home games so that two interesting games are expected. The bowling in Toronto will take place at Orr's alleys and in Peterborough at the Water street alleys.

Cuba is the newest market for British Columbia timber. The steamer Mont Cervin, which last week brought 5,000 tons of sugar here, is now loading two million feet of dressed lumber for Havana.

LINDSAY LOOKING FOR LOCAL CO-OPERATION

ASKS PETERBOROUGH TO ASSIST IN GETTING POLICE FINES FOR MUNICIPALITIES

Lindsay town council is seeking the co-operation of Peterborough and other Ontario cities and towns in passing a resolution in regard to the disposal of fines collected in police courts. The council points out that the Legislature has assumed the right of appointing police magistrates and of fixing their salaries; it arranges the cost of providing and maintaining a court room and other official conveniences, and this cost is then imposed on the municipality. The police magistrate, the police constables and all the police equipment are requisitioned on behalf of the Province. On the other hand, all fines for breaches of certain statutes are claimed by the Ontario Government as belonging to the province.

In view of this, Lindsay desires that a similar resolution to the following, or one stronger, should be put in the hands of the member for the riding. The resolution reads:

"That the policy pursued by the Government officials and their action in imposing practically all the costs of the administering of justice on the local municipality and retaining all the incidental income, is manifestly unfair, unjust and vexatious, and in the interest of British fair play and the equitable administration of justice, the relative responsibility of municipalities should be adequately recognized in the allocation of fines collected."

COUNCIL'S FINANCE

the county, and if the association falls down on its promises regarding the coming convention, it will be a black eye not only for the veterans, but to the city, which through its past and present Mayors is committed to generously co-operate in assuring a successful event.

Mr. Whatley declared that this convention will be the largest of its kind ever held in Canada. Accommodation has to be found for a maximum of 650 delegates downward to a minimum of 560 visitors. The program will include a civic welcome, a civic banquet, and a treat to the Grand Opera House.

Windsor last year, said Mr. Whatley, gave $1,000 towards the Veterans' convention in that city, besides which each delegate was presented with a souvenir. Since that time Ontario branches of the G.W.V.A. have grown in number from 157 to 273, an increase of 130 branches. So the coming convention is sure to grow in the number of delegates proportionately. Mr. Whatley here pointde out that the convention will mean the circulation of much money in Peterborough, as each delegate will pay his own way, and $3 a day from each of the visitors would mean an expenditure of $6000 for four days, a very conservative estimate indeed. Then each delegate will come from an important centre, and this community will surely wish that they should return saying they were treated royally, and advertising this city as having gone over the top of any precedent for hospitality.

Of Community Interest.

Mr. R. E. Layfield pointed out that Peterborough's community are strong partners, through civic invitation, with local veterans in responsibility for the nature of the coming event, and Council cannot very well back out. Peterborough has been widely advertised as having the finest G. W. V. A. rooms in Canada, and as being a desirable convention city, on the strength of which the convention in question has been invited to come here and see what Peterborough City is capable of in the way of hospitality and entertainment generosity.

Mr. Layfield asked the committee to get away from their "returned soldier idea" in this connection and to look upon the coming convention as of city advantage calling for community work and co-operation. The veterans can establish their claim to the finest convention rooms in the country. The Council can, if they will, prove that Peterborough is one of the most desirable cities in Canada in which to convene. Hundreds of picked delegates, the finest men in the organization, are coming here next month, and the impressions they carry back with them will advertise Peterborough broadcast, adversely or advantageously, as their treatment warrants. This will be a grand opportunity, Mr. Layfield added, to make a record for Peterborough as a royal, hospitable convention city, as a result of which conventions from far and year will meet here from year to year, to community advantage. In conclusion, Mr. Layfield explained that the G. W. V. A. is well fixed for organization work, is a financial success, and expect themselves to spend from $300 to $500 on the convention.

LIGHTNING RODS FOR THE FARMER'S BARN

UNIQUE BILL BEFORE LEGISLATURE—FIRE MARSHAL SEEKS EXTENSIVE POWERS

Toronto, Feb. 25.—George F. Lewis, deputy fire marshal for Ontario, sprang a surprise on the convention of the Mutual Fire Underwriters' Association of Ontario yesterday when he gave details of a bill to be named "The lightning rod act," and which is to be presented at the forthcoming meeting of the Legislature by the Hon. Peter Smith, if he can be persuaded to father it through the House.

According to Mr. Lewis, the proposed bill is unique, the very first of its kind in the world, and if passed will help to cut down farm fires to a minimum in a very short time.

Fire Marshal's Powers.

The new act will give the fire marshal very wide powers. It will enable him to require any farm building, valued at $2,000, or containing that value in food, to have a lightning rod and any buildings adjacent to said barn also to be provided with rods. The act will also apply to grain elevators, flour storage warehouses, mills, spires and smoke shafts over 60 feet high. The penalty for non-compliance with the provisions of the act will be $20 per day for each day the rod is not in its proper place and the fine will be recoverable on conviction before a magistrate.

To make the measure complete the act provides that the materials used in the erection of lightning rods shall only be made under a license issued by the fire marshal. The erectors and sellers of rods will also require a license from the marshal and anyone selling or erecting a lightning rod without a license is subjected to a fine of $200 or six months in prison. All the fees collected for the licenses will be paid to the Provincial treasurer, but the act asks that they be transferred to the fire marshal for the appointment of inspectors to carry out the provisions of the act.

Although the act will apply to only new structures, the estimate is made that quite $8,000 per annum will be collectable in fees. Should a farmer make alterations or additions to an old barn, the act treats that old building as a new structure and a rod will be necessary.

For federal income tax purposes it was decided at New York that gambling losses may be credited against winnings, but a net gambling loss may not be credited against total losses.

The first Universal production featuring Edith Roberts which has appeared since "Lasca," in which this star created much favorable comment, will be shown at the Empire Theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The picture, called "The Triflers," was screened from a story by Joseph Franklin Poland, one of the best known and most prolific picture play writers in the country. Christy Cabanne was the director.

While not intending to point a moral, the new offering shows the folly of holding in contempt the small things in our possession and striving for the things that are out of our sphere. A wholesome comedy drama is the result.

Miss Roberts appears as Janet Randall, a shop girl, whose obsession is to become a member of society's elite in her home city. She temporarily spurns the love of her admirer, a motorcycle cop, and ingratiates herself with a young society man, posing as his wife in order to free the young chap from an affair with a chorus girl.

In the society man's house, Janet is scorned by his aristocratic friends. She has her lesson, a dawith it, disillusionment as to what composes true happiness. She is more than glad to go back to her motorcycle cop, portrayed by David Butler.

"The Triflers" is rich in comedy and dramatic situations. The cast contains many well known Universal players.

In a garage fire at Philadelphia 70 autos were burned. Loss, $200,000.

: : AT THE GRAND : :

The most dangerous offenders of all are the men and women who are convinced in their own minds that they are right, and who have the approval of a slumberous conscience for what hey do. Such never weary in their wrong-doing, but persevere with all the ardor of the fanatic. It is the man who has no faith in his own criminal code who is generally the first to weaken.

To the former class belong Sonia, the misguided agitator, whose creed was born and nurtured in the slums of Russian cities and who plays the part of the labor agitator in the picture, "The Right To Happiness," which will be shown for the last time at the Grand tonight. She charged herself with what she honestly regarded as a holy mission to save her fellow creatures from poverty. She honestly believed that she was doing the Lord's work. Her aims were right but her methods were wrong. Force may triumph for a time, but in the end it fails. It was only when the shadows of death began to fall that real light came to the young agitator, a death that she brought on herself to save the life of another who turns out to be her own twin sister.

The photo play affords an interesting study in human nature. It shows to what extent character is formed by environment. Here were two twin sisters, separated in early life and reared the one in poverty, the other in luxury. The first grew up into an avowed enemy of the more fortunate; the other into an idle society trifler, but who proves herself of the right material when the opportunity offers to help the unfortunate. Outwardly, the twin sisters have been different, but really their natures were as similar as their features. Training could not trample out the virtues which were theirs by heredity. The death bed scene proves that in the main they were still as much alike as when they played together in infancy.

The picture is a graphic story of the struggle between Capital and Labor. The moral is obvious. If force failed in the case of one party to the conflict, it was equally ineffective with the other.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

AUSTRALIAN TENNIS.

Players Outclass All Comers From Continent of Europe.

The result of the Davis Cup matches completed at Sydney recently, proved conclusively that the Australians are still the best tennis players in the Eastern Hemisphere and likely to remain so for some time to come. The veteran Brookes is about through as a singles contender, but was good enough to turn in an overwhelming victory over England's best in the doubles, paired with Gerald Patterson. The latter outclassed every one who took the court with him, and bids fair to remain Australia's big ace for a number of years to come.

The younger element was well represented on the Australian team by J. O. Anderson, the Sydney champion and recently a conqueror of Brookes himself. He bowed to the superior experience of A. R. F. Kingscote, but defeated A. H. Lowe in the closest match of the series. With Hawkes and other youngsters coming on fast, Australia seems well supplied for the immediate future.

The challenge round of the year's Davis Cup competition was another demonstration of the antiquated condition of English and Continental lawn tennis. Those who represent the top rank in European tennis circles seem content to stick to the old driving game with which S. H. Smith, J. C. Parke and others used to do such deadly execution. The Australians, however, have instinctively adopted the American style of play with impressive results.

Kingscote is the only member of the challenging team who has a truly modern game, and he was responsible for England's only victory. Lowe and Beamish are both old-timers who have never developed the possibilities of the new service, and volleying attack. Yet they are the survivors of a series which included entries from France, Belgium and South Africa, and must therefore be considered, as a team, the best that Europe can produce. This dependence on veteran indicates also that practically no efforts are being made in the old countries to encourage youthful talent, a condition of which Brookes recently complained bitterly.

In the United States, they claim with glee that they have the best tennis players in the world. While the British were fighting to save the world, the Americans played tennis, and are consequently in better condition.

Judging by the record of Brookes and Patterson in America last summer, the U.S.N.L.T.A. was right in making no effort to regain the Davis Cup while athletics abroad were still strongly affected by war conditions it would seem that a team composed only of W. M. Johnston and W. T. Tilden.2d., would easily defeat any foreign opposition, including that of the Australians themselves. Both of these men won from Brookes and Patterson individually in the national championship and a special international series, while in the latter they also teamed up for the first time in their lives and took the measure of the doubles title-holders. In five meetings, therefore, representing the equivalent of a Davis Cup match, these two made a clean sweep. While such youngsters as Anderson might increase the strength of the Australian side, it is not likely that they would have offered serious opposition to the leading Americans this year. By another winter, however, there may be a different story to tell.

Purifies Relatives After Death.

A letter from Rev. John Roscoe, dated October and November, 1919, announces that the Mackie Ethnological Expedition is now at work among the Bahima, an important pastoral tribe of Ankole, a district to the west of Ugand, says the London Times.

The king and the native prime minister are doing all they can to help the expedition, and the principal chiefs are friendly. The Prime Minister has men at work collecting native medicines, some of which are extensively used and may prove a value to science.

The subjects hitherto investigated include the clans and their totems, relationship, rules of marriage, government, life in the cattle kraals, the distribution of cattle and the customs of burial and mourning in the royal family and in the families of chiefs.

Interesting information has been obtained as to the customs of adoption and inheritance.

After a death the head of a clan comes and purifies her brother and all the property before he can inherit. Succession is in the male line, but there are customs pointing to an earlier practice of descent in the female line. The king's sister is bound to marry a prince from a neighboring pastoral tribe, who comes to live with his wife near the King of Ankole; yet the prince's brother, the king of the neighboring country, may never approach or see the King of Ankole.

Unnecessary Alarm.

It lay in the path, an unexploded eighteen c.m.shell. For days no one dared remove it. And then the C. O. ambled by. "Get this blamed thing away!" he shouted. "But, no, sergeant, see that a fence is put around it. A dud can work the very devil!" Fifteen minutes before supper time the sergeant directed a hungry corporal to take two men and stakes and wire, and in five minutes they were all at the scene of action. "Now, lads, five minutes for the job and five minutes to get back," said the corporal. "Grab two stakes each and hold 'em up. Gosh! We've nothing to use for a hammer. Well, here goes!" and heaving the heavy dud in his mighty hands, he tenderly drove each stake. "Right oh!" He replaced the dud in its imprint, saw the wire carefully fastened and slipped his men back to their supper on time.

PEENNANT RACE FOR COMING SEASON IS MAIN ATTRACTION FOR FANS TODAY

New York, Feb. 25.— Now that the American league factions have laid down their war clubs and the much battered Dove of Peace is roosting serenely over baseball once again, the fan is turning his undivided attention toward the coming pennant races.

The squabbles of the magnates have never been much of a "dish" for the fan. As a rule, he doesn't care a tinker's rap whether the "mags" pull each other's noses or not. He's fed up with that kind of baseball gossip. Hence, the coming of peace was welcome.

With the spring training season almost here, however, fandom is eagerly devouring all of the "advance dope." Preparations being made for the coming season by each of the sixteen big league clubs, indicates that the magnates in general expect strong opposition in the pathway of any pennant aspirations they may have.

No Player Market

The winter of 1919-20, one of the longest in baseball history in the way of trades and sales aside from the record-breaking Ruth deal, shows plainly enough that the various clubs are freezing tight to every worth while player In fact, there has been

Looking over the entrants in the coming pennant races the fan is very apt to turn his attention first of all to the 1919 pennant winners The National League and world's champion Cincinnati Reds will present practically the same lineup that took the field against the White Sox last fall. Pat Moran proved to the world at large and the White Sox in particular that he has a ball club with a terrific punch. During the pennant race he proved to John McGraw and the pennant hungry Giants that the Reds have class. But can the Reds come back? Will Moran's pitchers be able to set the pace they travelled last year and will his batters hammer the old apple with the same regularity? Answer these questions and you'll have the chances of the Reds [illegible] down and ready to stick into [illegible].

Reds Good as Ever.

From this angle the Reds look as good as ever. Barring unforseen accidents to players and unexpected strength in opposing clubs, it appears that the Moranmen have a good chance to repeat. The Giants, unless some radical changes are made in their line-up, will not look much like contenders when the bell rings. McGraws ancient infield has outlived its usefulness. Zimmerman, Doyle, and several other Giant players have let the procession pass them. And McGraw will find it difficult to fill their shoes even at that.

The Cubs should look up if Mitchell's pitching staff can do what will be expected of it. Yet the Cubs are not blessed with youth. Merkle Herzog, Deal and Paskert are about at the end of their strings and the other regulars aside from the battery men are of the most part mediocre players. Vaughn and Alexander will no doubt, be depended upon to do the brunt of the pitching. If Tyler's rheumatic arm—the result of bad teeth, the doctors told him— can be coaxed back into shape, he will be a big help. At this mid-February writing, however, the Cubs look better than New York.

Pirates Bear Watching

Pittsburgh will bear watching too George Gibson inherited a ball club that is just about 100 per cent better looking than it was when Hugo Bezdek took held, and the Pirates are younger on the average than some of their rivals.

Branch Rickey says that the Cards can win a pennant now. He cites Cincinnati's achievement as proof of what may be expected of his sweet looking young talent. This, with his regulars, may be molded into a fast-going combination. But it's all up to Rickey.

Uncle Wilbert Robinson's Brooklyn Dodgers can not be overlooked this year. Your Uncle Wilbert is on to every player of worth that Brooklyn has been able to pick up for the last three or four years, and when the season opens rivals of the Dodgers will find them well balanced and playing baseball together as though they had been born that way. Robby has a pretty good pitching staff and his team, as a whole can hit.

The Phillies and Braves, once again, are not particularly brilliant prospects. Yet one can never forget what George Stallings' 1914 Braves acomplished. And it will be well to remember that Gravy Cravath is a hustler and a fighter, and he is popular with his players. That will help the Phillies a lot.

Chicago Well Fixed

The White Sox, with Cicotte, Williams and Dickie Kerr as pitching mainstays, and Ray Schalk, to hold them up, will be pretty well fixed — IF. The "if" has to do with Cicotte in particular, and with several Sox veterans who have threatened retirement— chiefly Risberg and Gandil. Should the Sox be forced to start the season with their infield combination broken up, their chances would sell away below par. Kid Gleason and Eddie Collins, will need all of their baseball wits as manager and captain of the South Siders to keep such clubs as Cleveland and New York from running all over them.

The Cleveland Indians look mighty good. So do the Yanks and the Browns. Detroit must always be figured as the club that will make trouble for all comers in search of first division berths, and Clark Griffith may surprise everybody by putting a team of true first division caliber into the field. The Athletics are a big question mark. The Red Sox are dark horses, though none too dark when one recalls the names of such players as Mays, Ruth, Roth and others who no longer wear the Boston livery.

No club in the American League however looms up as strong as do the Reds in the National in early "doping" on paper. Chicago may expect much stronger opposition from three different sources than was encountered last season. Gleason will find Cleveland. New York and St Louis tough nuts to crack.

BOWLING AT THE "Y"

In last night's bowling at the Y.M.C.A. George St. suffered somewhat by the absences of two of their bowlers, while Murray St. were handicapped by having played hockey during the previous hour. However, the games were good and Murray St. won two as a result of their efforts.

The games were late in starting and inspite of two dummy scores George St. won the first game. But the Baptists found themselves early in the second and secured the last two to their credit. Scores:

CANADA TO BE IMPORTANT FUR MARKET

(1) Coaxing Silver Fox Pups with tempting morsels at a P. E. I. Ranch. (2) Canadian Wolves.

Canada is now exporting to other countries according to Dominion Government figures, $14,000,000 worth of furs and skins in the course of a year, and a number are brought back into the country purchased by Canadian dealers at foreign sales and resold to Canadians. The value of furs and skins exported during the fiscal year 1918-1919 was $13,737,621. Of these $9,743,464 worth went to the United States, $3,763,955 to Great Britain, and $230,202 to other countries. Some extent of the values to which these exports have risen can be obtained from the fact that the value of the export of furs and skins in 1917 was but $5,837,353. During the month of March 1919, the value of these exports was $2,080,704 as compared with $1,420,168 in the corresponding month in 1918. It has been estimated that eighty per cent. of the silver foxes of the world come from Canada.

For nearly four centuries Canada has been one of the largest and most productive fields of the fur trade, and it is impossible to estimate the number or the value of the costly pelts taken from the traps of the Dominion in this period. Yet, until quite recently, the fur trade was hardly organized on a business basis, and beyond the trapping and taking of the furs the various phases of the industry passed out of Canadian hands. Traders bought from the trappers and then the raw materials went to the large foreign markets.

There has gradually dawned a realization of the money lost in this way, however, and in future Canada will market her own furs and Montreal become one of the most important fur markets of the globe. For years London, St. Louis and New York have been the selling centres to which Canadian furs have travelled and St. Louis had the world's premier fur mart. The auction at Montreal will be conducted by a large company capitalized at $5,000,000 and will be largely co-operative in nature. It is the intention to hold three auctions a year, the first about next March.

The opening of a Canadian fur market is a natural development of artificial breeding and fur ranching. This industry is fairly general throughout Canada, and in Prince Edward Island the industry which has been in operation for more than thirty years, has assumed very important proportions. In 1914 there were in the island no less than 250 fox ranches with nearly 4,600 foxes.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representative will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

MRS. COULTHARD'S RINK WON GIBSON TROPHY

EXCITING FINAL OF CONTEST TODAY WITH MARGIN OF ONE SHOT

The final game for the Gibson trophy took place this morning and proved to be a very exciting event. Particular interest in the competition was taken by the men, who were loud in their praises of the ladies' curling ability. The rink skipped by Mrs. W. H. Hill had practically won the game right from the start, obtaining an early lead of three points, but towards the last Mrs. Coulthard's rink began to rally, and the last end opened with the score standing at 7-6 in favor of Mrs. Hill's rink. Mrs. Hill threw the game away in the last shot by forcing Mrs. Coulthard's stone into the ring and tying the score. It was then necessary to play an extra end, and great excitement prevailed upon both sides, with a consequent poorer exhibition of curling. When Mrs. Coulthard had made her last shot and there remained only Mrs. Hill's shot to play, the Coulthard rink was one point up, but the field was practically clear for Mrs. Hill to reverse the score, and the shot was reckoned among the gentlemen spectators as "easy." In the excitement of the game, however, Mrs. Hill was unable to make the winning point, and the cup went to Mrs. Coulthard's rink.

The scoring was as follows:

Mrs. Groat, Mrs. Hemper, Miss R. [illegible], Mrs. Hill (skip) 7.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., left for Ottawa today to attend the opening of the session of Parliament tomorrow.

The address at the Lenten service at St. Luke's tonight at 7.30 will be illustrated with lantern slides. The service will be followed at 8.15 by choir practice. All members are urgently requested to be present.

Messrs. F. G. Sandy, M.P.P., Mr. M. J. Hogan and C. McNevin were in Peterborough last evening attending a banquet tendered Premier Drury.—Lindsay Post.

Mr. J. H. Devlin, of Toronto, was a visitor to the city yesterday.

Mr. F. E. Walden, organist and choirmaster of Knox Church, has returned from Toronto where he attended the concert given by the Mendelssohn Choir and the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Miss Beulah Hayes, soprano, Miss Madge Miller, contralto, Mr. Alfred C. Green, tenor, Mr. Leonard S. Akridge, bass, and Miss Mary Glen pianist and accompanist, have arrived in the city for the Third Conservatory Lyceum concert, and are registered at the Empress.

HUSBAND FOLLOWS WIFE TO GRAVE ONE DAY LATER

MR. AND MRS STANLEY BYERS ARE BOTH DEAD OF "FLU"

Mrs. Grace Byers died yesterday afternoon at 183 Lock Street, after a short illness from influenza and her husband, Mr. Stanley Byers, succumbed to the same malady this afternoon, leaving parentless one little child, Muriel aged 18 months.

It was with sincere regret that the many friends of Mrs. Byers, nee Grace Cox, learned of her demise, yesterday afternoon, and a deep sadness was cast over the community today when it became known that her husband followed her into the valley of death, with influenza. Mrs. Byers was taken ill about two weeks ago her husband being afflicted with the same disease some days later. At first, her condition was considered not at all critical, but she gradually became weaker until in spite of all that loving care and medical science could do, she succumbed to the dread malady. A bright young personality and highly esteemed by her many friends for her stirling qualities of character, she will be sadly missed.

Mr. Byers, whose condition was not thought to be so serious became considerably weaker yesterday, and he gradually declined until death came at three o'clock today. The young couple were both well and favorably known in Peterborough, Mr. Byers having been associated with the Canadian General for years past and was previous to his death employed as a pattern maker. His fellow employees with whom he mingled each day and by whom he was loved and respected, will feel keenly the loss of a cheerful co-worker.

Mrs. Byers is survived by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cox and one sister, Ethel, at home. Mr. Byers, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Byers, of Frank Street, Byersville leaves to mourn his loss besides his parents, three sisters, Misses Pearl Lillian and Ruby, and one brother Garnet, all of this city.

The double funeral will take place on Friday at two o'clock from 183 Lock Street and will proceed to Little Lake Cemetery, where interment will take place.

EX-SOLDIERS' POLL TAX

If Discharge Papers Lost, a Way Opened for Remission of Tax.

The Council's Finance Committee agreed last night that soldiers who have unfortunately lost their discharge papers (which cannot be duplicated), shall have their poll tax refunded on making statutory declaration as to the loss of their papers.

The city agreed some time ago to remit or refund the poll tax of all soldiers who could produce their discharge papers (but no otherwise). Hence G.W.V.A. Secretary Whatley's request for above action last night. Mr. Whatley had one specific case in mind, that of a soldier who had to pay his poll tax, having lost his discharge papers: but he could give documentary evidence, however, that he is entitled to wear a service button.

War memorial certificates were presented by the French Government to nearest of kin of 4,738 New York and Brooklyn soldiers killed in the war.

NATIVE RUSSIAN TELLS AUDIENCE AT ST. PAUL'S JUST WHY HIS NATION FELL

L. Joffe, Converted Jewish Rabbi—Explains the Social and Political Conditions in His Former Home Land.

Mr. L. Joffe, the converted Jewish Rabbi, who has been lecturing in the city for the past few days, addressed a large gathering last night in the St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Sunday School room. A short service preceded his address and was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. Pogue, who in a few words introduced the speaker.

The subject of Mr. Joffe's address was "The Fall of Russia," and he ably described the conditions which existed in that country before the war and through the war up to the present time. In opening he defended the late Czar, who, he said, was not as black as he was painted. It was impossible for Canadian people who were so democratic themselves to understand the position of the Czar. When the Czar went out anywhere the route was lined for miles ahead with soldiers and the people only knew of him as some great spectre who had to be obeyed. Russia was the burning question of the day and the people of Canada could not afford to ignore the condition of affairs in Russia. This might be possible years ago but with the arrival of modern inventions the world was brought into closer touch and Russia's interests affected this country.

Mr. Joffe quoted a few lines from Shakespeare's "Julius Ceasar," and compared the condition of Russia after the fall of the Czar to that which existed in Rome after the death of Julius Caesar. Yesterday the word of Romanoff might had stood against his 185 millions of subjects, but now the same mighty Czar was but a pebble on the sea of life. His own people, the Russian Jews, had cried out against the atrocities committed during the Czar's regime and blamed him for them, but since his death there had been greater atrocities committed than were ever known before. Russia fell through graft and insincerity from the lowest policeman up to the highest official around the Czar. It was not the personality of the Czar which had brought about the downfall of the Russian Empire, but this system of graft which had got rooted into the Russian Government. In other words the country went away from God and fell in consequence. The same would happen to any country, however enlightened, which went away from God.

The Russian soldier had fought as bravely as any other soldier and at times he fought without arms and with the knowledge that behind him there was nothing but graft and intrigue. Thousands had died with the same ideals for which the British and French fought. Mr. Joffe went on to describe the rigid discipline and training of the Russian soldier and how he was led to look upon anything connected with the Czar with the greatest awe. It was this awe which kept him in the trenches and as long as the Czar existed he would have remained there, but once the Czar was removed his whole ideas became changed and he started for home. After the fall of the Czar Kerensky came into power and tried to turn the illiterate peasants into a thinking nation over night, a thing which could not be done. Orators rose up on every street corner, each with his own philosophy, and the poor uneducated Russian did not know which to believe. When the people of America welcomed what they termed, "Kerensky's Bloodless Revolution," he knew that it would not be so and that before it was over bloodshed would come. The Russian people had not yet reached a stage when they could govern themselves. Even in Canada in times of elections there was much "hot air", but here the people were educated to a certain extent and could be made to understand things, but in Russia not only were they uneducated, but every man had returned to his home with his rifle and loaded with ammunition. The whole populace was fully armed and their squabbles developed into real fights. The secret of the day was work but Kerensky, instead of telling the people to go back to work, had tried to pose as a great man. He tried to compromise and thus he fell. Idleness was the root of the trouble in Russia. If the people of Canada remained idle for six months they would starve, but this was practically what had happened in Russia. Here the speaker laid the blame for the depreciating value of the dollar in the continued strikes and said that as the dollar was merely a means of exchange, the only way to remedy matters was to produce more commodity to back the dollar. The workmen in Russia started striking and received 20 rubles where they formerly got 2. They could not see that this could go on indefinitely and continued to strike. Prices went up and then they somehow got the idea of striking for back pay. This meant that if a man had been in the employ of a firm for twenty years he was entitled to enough back pay so that he would be getting his present rate of pay for twenty years back. This would mean millions of rubles to some and indeed some of the workers came for their money with coal bags and wheel-barrows. Frightened of their lives the owners fled and the workers took over the factory and ran it to suit themselves, working just when they felt like it with disastrous results.

The term Bolshevist was not new but was derived as far back as 1905 when the Socialist party divided into two parts, the Bolshevists or Majority wanting complete socialism at once and the Menshivists or minority being satisfied to take things by degrees. The Bolshevists now wanted peace with the Allies because they were discovering that their plan of equality for all did not work out in practice.

In conclusion the speaker stated that this country might take its lesson from Russia as the same condition of affairs could be brought about in this country by continual strike etc. Capitalism was as necessary as labor and was a thing which should be improved and not abolished.

At the close of his address Mr Joffe invited the audience to ask questions and many took advantage of this invitation to learn more about Russia.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

NOBODY CAN TELL WHEN YOU DARKEN GRAY, FADED HAIR WITH SAGE TEA.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearanse, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, at very little cost. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.

PAID OFF ENTIRE STAFF.

Meaford Co. Then Re-employed All Willing to Work Ten Hours.

Meaford, Feb. 25.—Dissatisfaction among the employes of the Seamen Kent Co. here over the introduction of a ten-hour working day in the plant has led to the paying off of the entire staff. The company is now re-employing all men who agree to the ten-hour day, and is paying time and a quarter for the extra two hours.

HARD PAN STANDS A THOROUGH TEST

PRONOUNCED BY EXPERTS AS QUITE ADAPTABLE FOR NEW BRIDGE

The weight-carrying capacity of the hard pan Engineer Barber recommends as suitable on which to rest the new bridge's eastern main pier has been thoroughly tested and pronounced absolutely "safe."

The test was made in the presence of Chief Engineer Middlemess of the Ontario Railways Board, Engineer Lewis, of Toronto, and local engineer, and the hard pan stood up splendidly at a pressure of 21 tons to the square foot spread. All that is required for the bridge is a resistance of 6.8 tons to the square foot.

This particular hard pan, of which there is a depth of some 14 feet, has been pronounced by experts as "first class."

ADDRESS AND GIFT FOR MR. & MRS. DAVE DEYELL

FRIENDS AT MOUNT HOREB TAKE LEAVE OF POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE

(Special to The Review.)

Omemee, Feb. 25.—Neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Deyell gathered at the home of Mr. John Deyell, Mount Horeb, last night, to give the popular young couple a farewell party before they left for their new home near Omemee, where Mr. Deyell, Jr., has purchased a farm. There were some one hundred in attendance and an exceedingly good time spent by all. During the evening the following address was read and a handsome table presented to the young couple:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Deyell:

Friends may come and friends may go, but none will be more missed in this community than the two young friends we have gathered here this evening to honor. We deeply regret the occasion which calls us together, that of bidding good-bye, but we are pleased to know that you are not going so far from this locality but we will often hear of you and hold conversation with you. We take this opportunity of wishing you every success in your new home. We are gathered here to honor one who for a number of years has striven to honor the profession to which he belongs, and we are pleased to note that his ambitions are such as to desire to establish a home for himself. We know of no more honorable profession than that of tilling the soil, and also we know that the young gentleman whom we honor tonight will carry the same successful methods of farming to his new field of labor. For a number of years you have been one of ou foremost residents in the matter of community welfare and uplift, and your ever-present willingness to help along any good movement has been appreciated. We will miss you in farming circles, and we will greatly miss your genial presence in social circles. We young people will also miss the cheering and charming personality of Mrs. Deyell, and we trust and hope that your sojourn in our midst has been one of pleasure. We also hope that the future life of both of you may be a happy combination of health, wealth and happiness, and we would ask you to accept this gift as a memento of our esteem and good wishes.

Mr. Deyell made an appropriate reply, and short speeches were also made by Messrs. Herman Hart, Bruce McNevan, Mrs. R. Smith, Mr. Peter Hawkins and Mr. Garfield Hawkins.

The residents of Omemee welcome to the village Mr. and Mrs. Deyell, Mrs. Deyell having been an Omemee girl.

A Kansas City waitress casually reported an income of $5,300—$1,800 salary and $3,500 tips—on her tax form.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

The senior class and their lady friends held a very enjoyable sleigh-ride last night, making the trip around the city. Afterwards the party adjourned to the Y.M.C.A. and enjoyed a social evening. Refreshments were served and a pleasant time was spent in bowling.

OBITUARY

THE LATE FRED DUNKLEY.

The body of the late Private Fred Dunkley, of this city, who died yesterday at the Kingston Military Hospital as an indirect result of disabilities received while on war service, will reach the city on the 5:40 train from Kingston this afternoon, and the funeral will take place from his mother's residence, 525 Romaine street, to Little Lake Cemetery tomorrow afternoon The services will be conducted by Rev. D. Brown.

JOHN SAVIGNY.

A host of friends throughout the city and district will be shocked to learn of the death this morning of Mr. John Savigny, after an illness of short duration. He was well known, particularly in the city, and for over twenty-five years kept a grocery store on Water street, but retired from the business some time ago. He was the third son of the late George Savigny, a well-known resident of Otonabee and was born at that place fifty-four years ago.

He leaves to mourn his loss six brothers, George and James H., of Peterborough, William, of Windsor, Richard, of Toronto, Thomas, of Moosejaw, and Lawrence, of Pittsburg, Pa., and one sister, Mrs. R. S. Merrill, of this city.

The funeral will take place from the residence of his brother, James Savigny, 214 London street, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock to Little Lake Cemetery. Services at the house and graveside will be conducted by Rev. Robert Pogue, of St. Paul's Church.

Z. KNOTT.

One of the oldest and best known residents of Chemong Indian Village passed away yesterday afternoon in the person of Mr. Z. Knott. Mr. Knott was well known throughout the district, having been a lifelong resident of the village, and was born there seventy-three years ago. His illness was of very short duration. Being taken down with pneumonia barely a week ago, he gradually sank, until the end came yesterday. His wife predeceased him more than ten ears. There survive four sons, John, D'Arcy, Alexander and William, all residing in the village, and two daughters, Mrs. Jas. Taylor, of Chemong Indian Village, and Mrs. Williams, of the Rama Reserve.

The funeral took place this morning from his late residence in the village to Chemong cemetery and was attended by a large number of friends. The services were conducted by Rev. Mr. Bell of Chemong.

ARTHUR H. SYDERE,
Clerk of the Legislative Assembly
Toronto, February 6th, 1920.

JOHN McFARLANE

On Saturday evening, February 14, after a brief illness, John McFarlane, of Keene, at the early age of thirty eight, passed beyond to his eternal rest.

His death came as a great shock to the community of which he was a valued member, and to which his death will be a distinct loss. Of a quiet and kindly disposition, he made many friends who will long remember him; and in his own and his father's home, he has left lonely and aching hearts. To his sorrowing wife, to whom he had ever been a true and loving husband, to his children Malcolm and Gladys, to his parents and brother Walter, in whose hearts his place can never be filled, the sympathy of the entire community is extended.

On Monday afternoon, February 16 we laid him down to rest in Keene cemetery to await the resurrection

Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the Better Land,

MINERS OF NORTHERN MICHIGAN IN REVOLT AGAINST PROHIBITION

Armed Federal Officials Have Been Sent From Chicago With Instructions to Enforce Law at Any Cost.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—Major A. V. Dalrymple, supervisor of prohibition enforcement for the Central Division, left here with a band of armed Federal agents for Iron county, Mich., where, it was reported, there was a rebellion against prohibition.

Major Dalrymple declared that he was going to Iron county for "a showdown between the Federal Government and the violators of the Federal (Eighteenth) Amendment. He declared that he would arrest P. A. McDonough, Prosecuting Attorney of Iron county; two Deputy Sheriffs the Captain of Police and three "influential citizens" of the district wherein the alleged revolt occurred.

"I do not want bloodshed, but if the State authorities stand in the way I am going to shoot." he said just before he left Chicago.

Denial of a report of rebellion against prohibition enforcement in Iron county was made by Mr. McDonough. Speaking over the long distance telephone, Mr. McDonough declared that it was "as quiet as a graveyard" there, and that there was no rebellion. He asserted that he was "helping the Federal agents every way possible."

However, Maj. Dalrymple looks on the situation through other glasses. He declared that he had authority from the Government in Washington to make arrests, and that he would do so.

Must Be Showdown.

"This is a showdown between the Federal Government and the violators of the federal amendment," he said. "I am going to enforce prohibition. I do not want bloodshed, but if the State authorities stand in the way and they are backed by their political cohorts, I am going to shoot. I do not believe that the rowdyism displayed by the State officials, as reported to me, represents the feelings of the people of Michigan. These people showed by their vote some time before the amendment just what they thought of prohibition."

Maj. Dalrymple is proceeding on the theory that the arrest of Mr. McDonough and other Iron county officials is necessary. It was authoritatively stated that a request was made by federal agents here on United States Commissioner Hatch, in Marquette, for warrants to arrest these officials. The request was refused. It was arrested, on instructions by Myron H. Walker, United States District Attorney in Grand Rapids. Immediately H. M. Gaylor, assistant prohibition commissioner here, instructed Maj. Dalrymple to proceed under arms to Iron county and arrest the men without warrants and then to report to him.

Prosecutor Denies Revolt.

In his statement to the correspondent, Mr. Donough categorically denied the reports of trouble in Iron county.

"Everything is as quiet as a graveyard up here," he said. "There is no rebellion. I am helping the Federal agents every way possible. Iron county is one of the most patriotic counties in America. It is true that we have a lot of Italians and other foreigners here, but they are patriotic. They bought more than their share of Liberty bonds and War Savings Stamps. Their showing in the Red Cross and Salvation Army drives was very creditable.

"I have wired to the Governor and to the Attorney-General in Washington to send their own men to investigate conditions here. I think it will be found that the parties who started this report of a rum rebellion are a lot of cheap politicians who either are seeking notoriety or a 'stand in' with the present Administration.

"I am enforcing prohibition to the limit, and I defy any man to contradict that statement to my face. I will be the first man in Iron county to extend the hospitaly of Michigan to Major Dalrymple when he arrives here.

"Somebody has blundered badly somewhere along the line, however. I think that after all the smoke has passed away it will be found that this was a case of 'political cohorts' wandering from their tents."

TWO CLASSES OF BOLSHEVISTS NOTED BY TRAVELLER IN RUSSIA

Officers in the Army of Late Emperor Form New Aristocracy in That Country—Old Classes Have Been Succeeded by Others That are Worse.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Amsterdam, Feb. 26.Two distinct types of Bolshevists, described as "Salon Bolshevists" and "Bomb Bolshevists," wer noted by the staff correspondent of Handelsblad in his tour through Soviet Russia, from which he has just returned. The former, he says, are represented by former officers in the army of the late emperor, while the others include fanatical, sinister commissairs and all their followers. The Bolshevik army commanders, with whom he traveled in luxurious armored and non-armored express trains from the Polish front to Moscow, form a new aristocracy. Some times, he says, the impression one gets of the entire outfit is that of a "parlor car with third-class people in it." In cities, the communistic aristocracy live in luxury. In big towns like Smolensk, he declares, "army commissairs who already belong to the 'upper ten,' do not live in the town near their headquarters with their staff officers, but a long way off on a side track, in a beautiful car, every one in his own

PARLIAMENT OPENS IN NEW BUILDING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 26.—Parliament opened this afternoon in the new buildings worthy, as the Governor-General expressed it in his speech from the throne, of the people whose national life it will hence forth serve. The Government legislative program, outlined in the speech, comprises a bill to provide for the Dominion franchise, a bill respecting copyrights, bills providing for amendment of the Patent Act, of Loan and Trust Companies Acts, Indian Act and the Exchequer Court Act, and a bill to ratify the international labor convention.

Referring to the formal constitution of the League of Nations, the speech significantly states it is satisfactory to note that the status of Canada as a member of the League has thus been definitely fixed. In the European economic field, the Governor-General continued, clear vision was still impossible. The unsettled state of exchange, the lack of international credits and the inflation of paper currency, combined with the scarcity of raw materials and the demoralization of labor and transport, united to retard production and restrict the rebuilding of waste caused by the war.

The address in reply to the speech from the throne will be moved in the Senate by Senator William Proudfoot and seconded by Senator Chapais. In the House it will be moved by Hume Cronyn, London, and seconded by Alexander McGregor, of Picton.

PRESIDENT'S ANSWER IS IN HANDS OF ALLIES

SAID TO BE MODERATE IN TONE WITHOUT THREAT OF WITHDRAWAL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 26.—President Wilson's reply to the Allied Powers, says Pertinax, writing in the Echo de Paris, it most moderate in form and does not contain a menace to withdraw from European affairs but in substance stands by the Ardiatic plan of December9. Premiers Llyod George and Nitto will consider the note and the attitude they will take today, and it is to be presumed that if Premier Nitti allows them Lloyd George and M. Millerand will try again to bring Italian representatives and Jugo-Slavs together. Some persons hope that the Jugo-Slavs, not wishing a buffer state between them and Italy, as proposed in the December plan, which would deprive them of two hundred thousand Jugo-Slavs, will show themselves much more accommodating than in the past.

RADIAL EMPLOYES VOTE IN FAVOR OF STRIKE

BUT MAJORITY AGREE TO REFERENCE OF DISPUTE TO LABOR MINISTER.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. Catherines, Feb. 26.—A large majority of the N. S. & T. Railway employees are understood to have voted in favor of an immediate strike but at the request of the minority have decided to await the result of a memorial that is being sent today to Senator Robertson, Minister of Labor. The men are dissatisfied with the recent award of an arbitration board.

BOARD OF COMMERCE GIVES UP CONTRACT OF SUGAR PRICES

OBJECT IS TO TEST WHETHER REGULATION OF PROFITS IS POSSIBLE.

Ottawa, Feb. 26.—Control by the Canadian Board of Commerce of sugar prices, is abolished today for specified purpose of providing whether or not the control has been effective in keeping down excess profits The fied price of sixteen cents per pound at the refineries no longer obtains. The cost of production has undoubtedly increased since order was made fixing the price on January 8th and the Board feels that some concession should be made to the dealers.

The order of the Board, rescinding the control of sugar in Canada, is sigend by Commissioners W. F. O'Connor, B. C. and James Murdock The order goes on to say: "An agitation has arisen for the abolition of this Board, which agitation is based on the ground that its work is ineffective and the control of profits on commodities impossible and that various efforts of the Board have failed A canvass for a fund to secure the suppression or abolition of this Board or to impede its efforts, has been made throughout Canada by personal approach and by way of circular letter. This Board deems that it will be in the ultimate benefit of the public that a test or demonstration be now made as to whether or not the orders of this Board have been effective and especially as to whether or not profit control is possible or beneficial, and for the further purpose of discovering whether the demand made on behalf of the retailers of sugar, if acceded to, would have been taken advantage of. This Board in order to provide such a test of demonstration has decided to entirely cease control over the profits on sugar."

CITY'S RATE PROMISES TO REACH 35 MILLS MARK FOR THIS YEAR

Peterborough Exhibition Board Get a Grant of $3000 $1000 for the Playgrounds Association---Grant for City Development Not Yet Decided on.

According to present indications the tax rate this year will jump from last year's rate of 31 mills to 35.352 mills, exclusive of garbage tax. This is the result of what estimated expenditures are already before the City Council, together with conclusions reached by Finance Minister Ald. J. J. Turner and City Treasurer Frank Adams based on last year's expenditures, and on public needs for 1920, which cannot be got away from. While the figures in the Finance Minister's hands are pretty accurate, they were submitted to Council's committee of the whole last night merely in rough outline, and are subject to final revision by Council before actually passing on a definite rate.

Last year's estimates were $178,796 11, and the actual expenditures totalled $181,899.71. This year provision must be made for an expenditure of $205,405.46, according to present figures.

Tax Collection.

Last year's collector's roll has not yet been returned to Council. The date fixed for this return is December 15th each year, but Tax Collector Green was given an extension of time so as not to inflict a hardship on some perfectly good citizens who were and are experiencing temporary financial difficulties of their own. Last night Council passed an order on Tax Collector Green for the return of his 1919 roll by March 15th.

Grants.

On motion of Ald. Jones and Morrison the District Orange Lodge's request for a grant of $400 toward expenses connected with the coming 12th of July celebration in Peterborough was allowed.

Ald. Hamilton thought the Orangemen should run their own show

Ald. Crowe thought they are as much entitled to this $400 as the Vets to one of $1,000.

Ald. Hamilton: "The Veterans' grant is altogether a different thing."

The City Development Commission's application for a grant of $1,500 was laid aside for the time being.

Ald. Hamilton characterized this city development planning as too much of an experiment.

On motion of Ald. Phelan and Hamilton, this request was just received, and that means anything may happen.

Exhibition Grant.

The Peterborough Central Exhibition Board requested a grant of $5,000, and so far as the committee of the whole is concerned they will get $3,000.

Ald. Crowe wondered if it could not be so arranged that these grants from the city may apply to the ultimate purchase of the exhibition grounds. He did not know but that under existing conditions the Exhibition Board stand to lose the use of or provilege of purchasing the grounds without having a lean on the buildings erected by them.

Ald. Crowe was assured by Ald Turner that under lease from Mr Morrow, the board can buy these grounds in seven years.

Ald. Whitehouse was strong for a $5,000 grant. He said the exhibition fastered the city's growth, but the Board of Directors, a live and energetic body, had not been given a chance to develop the exhibition as the would for lack of adequate funds. A grant of $5,000, he declared, would be a big asset to the city and in time allow of the erection of proper buildings for local merchants' exhibits and for all purposes.

Ald. Phelan and Gordon moved for a $2,000 grant, but only themselves voted for the motion.

Ald. Truner and Jones moved for a $5,000 grant, which was lost on the following affirmate vote:

For—Ald. Jones, Turner, Whitehouse, Copping.

Ald. Hamilton and Crowe moved that the grant be $3,000, and Ald Hamilton, Crowe, Phelan and Gordon alone gave the resolution voting support.

The yeas and nays on Ald. Hamilton and Crowe's resolution for a $3,000 grant were here taken and the motion carried on the following division:

Yeas—Ald. Phelan, Hamilton, Gordon Morrison, Crowe—5.

Nays—Ald. Jones, Whitehouse, Copping and Turner—4.

Ald. Gainey was absent.

On motion of Ald. Crowe and Jones the Playgrounds Association was voted a grant of $1,000.

ASQUITH'S ELECTION ENGROSSES LONDON

BELIEVED THAT EX-PREMIER WILL BECOME LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, Feb. 26.—All political questions are, for the moment, completely eclipsed by former Premier Asquith's triumphant return to Parliament by a majority the size of which astonished everybody, including his own supporters. The result is universally recognized as a notable personal achievement. Politicians talked of nothing yesterday but the possibilities opened by his active resumption of the leadership of the Opposition, which, it is generally conceded, he will take over forthwith from Sir Donald MacLean, whose tenure has always been regarded as more or less temporary. It is understood Mr. Asquith will take his seat in the House next Monday. A number of papers interpret the election as a repudiation of the Coalition Government of certain Liberals from the Coalition organization.

STOYKO BOYEFF WAS HANGED AT KITCHENER

CONDEMNED MAN SLEPT WELL LAST NIGHT AND ATE HEARTY BREAKFAST

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Kitchener, Feb. 26.—Stoyko Boyeff, whose execution for the murder of John Sorokaty near Galt on May 25, 1919, was postponed for one month, was hanged in the court yard here this morning. The condemned man slept most of the night and ate a hearty breakfast. Early this morning he showed slight nervousness but at 7.30 walked to the gallows with the jail officials with a firm step. Death was pronounced instantaneous by the jail physicians after the trap was sprung. Boyeff made no confession. This is the first execution that has taken place in Kitchener for twenty-four years.

END SPECULATING IN SECURITIES HELD IN LONDON

IMPORTANT AGREEMENT HAS BEEN REACHED WITH BROKERS IN THIS COUNTRY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 26.—Securities estimated to total a billion and a quarter dollars will be affected by a recent agreement reached with the brokers on the Canadian Stock Exchange. The securities are Canadian securities, government, municipal and industrial, sold in London before the war. Now, owing to collapse in sterling, they are being bought in London and dumped on the Canadian market. The action taken, it is stated authoritatively here, is necessary if the price of Victory loans is to be established. Stocks bearing Dominion Government guarantee, it is asserted, have been bought on the London market at so low a price, owing to the decline in sterling, that they are being offered in Canada at prices to yield as high as 6.10 per cent.

Agreement Is Necessary.

Montreal, Feb. 26.—An official confirmation of the action to be taken to effect a desired improvement in the stock market situation, which was the result of conferences at Ottawa Montreal and Toronto, the outcome of which up to yesterday's publication in Toronto had been regarded as confidential, is given in the following statement by C. A. Bogart, president of the Canadian Bankers' Association:

"The present abnormal British exchange situation lends itself to speculation in Canada in securities held overseas, with the resultant aggravation of Canadian finances. At the request of the Government, in order to minimize and prevent this speculation the bankers will take measures to discourage such transactions until conditions improve, and in co-operation with brokers and dealers will use every legitimate means to accomplish the end in view."

C.G.E.'S ASSESSMENT IS FIXED BY CITY COUNCIL AT $150,000.00

To Cover a Period of Ten Years---If Bylaw Carried by the People, Company Will Start on Erection of $500000 New Buildings and Equipment Before July First.

Ald. Turner fathered a by-law in Council last night, to renew the C. G. E.'s fixed assessment of $150,000 for a period of ten years, excepting for school purposes and local improvement, which shall be assessed at full values. In consideration of this renewal of the old fixed assessment, the company is bound to, before July first next, commence and continue until fully completed, the erection of buildings and installation of equipment at a cost of not less than $500,000.

This by-law will be submitted to the electors on March 3 next, and if carried the renewal of fixed assess- 1921.

The company agrees to pay all costs connected with taking the votes of the electors on this by-law. This is due to the suggestion of Ald. Crowe

All on the municipal voters' list are entitled to vote on this measure. A two-third plurality of those who vote is required to carry the by-law.

Ald. Turner and Copping moved that the Board of Trade be asked to co-operate toward securing the carrying of this by-law if the proposition meets wtih their approval. This carried.

In regard to the above proposition, Ald. Craine said: "the day had come when the people should decide themselves on such questions as above, relieving the Council of all responsibility in matters of fixed assessment or other concessions to industries. In this case, he went on to say, it is a hardship to propose a fixed assessment for a company like the Canadian General Electric, which is declaring the dividends they do."

While opposed to the fixed assessment principle to encourage the growth of established industries and the acquisition of new ones by a municipality, Ald. Crowe did not offer any real opposition to this by-law now in the public's hands. "After they get these new buildings erected them away again, and perhaps at the expiration of ten years, assessment terms more advantageous to the city can be written against the Canadian General.

The bylaw passed carried.

NOTED DIVINE WILL BE HEARD AT ST. ANDREWS CHURCH FRIDAY NIGHT

LIEUT.-COL. THE VERY REVD. JOHN PRINGLE, D.D.,
Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, who speaks in St. Andrew's Church Friday, at 8 o'clock, at a union meeting of the three Presbyterian churches of this city.

Lieut. Col. Rev. John Pringle Moderator of the General Assembly, Will Deliver an Address.

The people of Peterborough will have an opportunity on Friday evening of hearing the man of the hour of the Presbyterian Church in Canada Lieut.-Col., the Rev. John Pringle, D. D., Moderator of the General Assembly. John Pringle is perhaps more widely known than any other Presbyterian minister in Canada, and he is as favorably as he is widely known He was the first missionary to the Yukon in the days of the gold rush and was idolized by the miners for his endurance, sincerity and good comradeship.

When war broke out he was the minister of a large church in Cape Breton, but it was inevitable that such a man should find a way to the front, and he went overseas in the early days of the war and did not return until after the armistice was signed. It is said of him that he addressed more soldiers than any other chaplain in the Canadian forces. Men gathered instinctively about John Pringle, the man who knew the human heart and trusted men—the man with winning eyes—the Padre with a good story and a great message. So they gathered about Pringle He was the unanimous choice of the General Assembly last year for the highest position in the gift of the church. His congregation has given him to the whole church for a time and Peterborough gets hom for one night, a week night—tomorrow night He will not likely say much about the money side of the Forward Movement but he will say something worth hearing, and say it in his own way.

The citizens of Peterborough are invited, and every seat in the church is at their disposal.

MR. BREYFOGLE AT BOARD OF TRADE TONIGHT

"Organization" will be Mr. W. R. Breyfogle's topic at the meeting to be held by the Board of Trade this evening, and it is anticipated that all the members, who possibly can, will attend. His subject is particularly pertinent to the advancement of Peterborough at the present time and the members are to have the opportunity of expressing opinions as to the different matters to be discussed.

March 9th. is the date set for the annual meeting, when the Board will be thirty-one years old, but only nine months of age as a reorganized body. Formerly its character was deliberative and commercial. Now it is a working, rather than a debating society, devoted not only to business, but to civic interests.

It has made greater progress in efficiency and prestige during the last nine months than in its previous history.

At tonight's session, views will also be expressed on the question of continuing the Thursday evening meetings and they are likely to be endorsed by all present as they have been very educational.

The Council has made arrangements for a supper to be served by one or more of the women's auxiliaries or patriotic societies to the members on the occasion of the annual meeting, Tuesday, March 9th., which will be held in in the Great War Veteran's Hall. The supper will be served at 6:30 p.m. and the General session meets at 8:30 o'clock.

A good attendance is expected.

THE PAY OF CITY EMPLOYES.

THERE IS NOT a fair-minded man in Peterborough who will deny the city employes the right to live or who will object to the increase in the salary schedule as proposed by the Finance Committee of the Council. But why this discrimination?

The talented young ladies employed as stenographers and in other clerical work in the various city offices should certainly receive as much compensation for their skilled services as is allowed, say the official dog catcher in season. The spread between their pay and that of the male employes is too great. One of the most proficient of these stenographers, one who has been longest in the public service, and for that reason is supposed to be entitled to the maximum rate, has been allowed only a trifle more than half of what is paid the lowest-priced male employe on the list.

The young lady who does the stenographic work, whose skill is a natural gift developed by careful training, and with whom absolute accuracy is essential, should, it would naturally be supposed, receive as much as the janitor who looks after the building or as the plumbing inspector, whose duties are comparatively light owing to the stagnation in the building trade. The high cost of living affects men and women alike, and this should be considered when the salary schedule is revised. It is not sufficient to say that the young ladies in question live at home and for that reason are not under the same expense as those who have to pay for board and lodging. No sound social fabric can be built on such a theory as that. There is no justice in requiring any parents in the city to help pay the salaries of the civic staff other than what may be taken from them in the way of legitimate taxes.

It was only to be supposed that Ald. Crowe, even if not a member of the Finance Committee, should object to the new schedule as it applies to the women on the payroll.. Part of the platform of Labor is insistence that women shall be paid as much as men for the same line of work, and that in which these young ladies are engaged will compare favorably with a good deal that is rendered by the men. Then let Ald. Crowe and his Labor colleagues hang together for fair play when this question of civic salaries comes before the Council for final action.

"THE WHY OF BOLSHEVISM."

IN AN ADDRESS delivered at a gathering of the employes of one of the largest industrial plants in the city Mr. Joseph Wearing dealt with the above topic in his usual interesting style and in a manner which shows his familiarity with all the leading social problems of the day. In a word, Mr. Wearing accounts for the present social unrest, otherwise known as Bolshevism, by attributing it to the jealousy of those who are less fortunate in the struggle for existence than some others.

It is in the American Declaration of Independence that that famous fiction is embalmed—that broad assertion that all men are born free and equal. Free, perhaps, but hardly into the other conditon. For some inscrutable reason Providence has been pleased to create men of different natural attainments, some to lead and others to hew the wood and to draw the water. As the path ways of these diverge, the dissatisfaction of the latter class with their lot is likely to increase. The victory in the battle of life, as in the conflicts between nations is not always to the fit and the strong. There is always the element of chance to be reckoned with, let philosophers say what they will. The theory that the man born in lowly circumstances, who has to fight his way from the beginning, is the one most likely to succeed, has long since been discarded by all practical students of human affairs. The man who starts life with money and influence behind him has the other beaten before the starting gun is fired. It is not always the case either, that the big positions in life are filled by the big men or by those most qualified, either by natural gifts or actual training, to fill them. So many of the actors in the drama of life are floundering through the wrong role. One cause for this industrial unrest of which so much is said these days is the fact that there are men holding the positions of captains of industry and managers of men who are rather more fitted for the strenuous task of driving mules.

Mr. Wearing in his address certainly located one cause of the present social discord when he referred to the treatment of the foreigners by the native-born Canadians. The stranger is brought here on the roseate representations of the immigration agent, who usually receives a per capita commission. On his arrival he is denied everything in the nature of a hospitable reception by those with whom he is in daily association. The very word "foreigner" has lost its original significance and has dwindled into a term of reproach. The growing children hold such aliens in fear if not in contempt, true to the teachings of their seniors. Even a bunch of school boys become panic stricken at the sound of speech in a foreign language.

There will never be a blending of the races. Canadianism in the fullest sense will never be achieved until this senseless rivalry is abandoned. Either keep the foreigner out of the country altogether or give him a fair chance to adopt Canadian customs after his arrival. He has left his native land to escape social and political tyranny. Who can blame him if, finding the same conditions here, he refuses to believe that his lot is any better?

This class distinction, fostered so often unwittingly by the man who mistakes jingoism for patriotism, has been the cause of dissention among the Canadians themselves. What is really at the bottom of all this misunderstanding between residents of the urban and rural communities? Unbridled speech for one thing. The city orator modestly admits that the city dweller is no better off, financially, socially, morally, or intellectually, than is the man on the farm. There is really nothing gained by parading this spirit of fraternity and repeatedly expressing a self-evident truth. There are no slums in the country. It is in the rural sections that the true community spirit is found. There is less of social rivalry. The people have time to think and to read. The man raised amid the flowers and the other works of Nature and who spends his working hours in the sunshine is a better man physically than his city brother penned up in factory or office while he labors, and who spends the rest of the day often in cramped quarters in which even the plumbing arrangements are at fault. The best system of morality, the highest type of intellectuality, are built, too, upon a solid physical foundation. The man whose ear is attuned by the carols of birds certainly has it on the city dweller whose favorite melodies are the jazz of the cabaret or the music of the dance hall.

"OUTLANDISH" CHARGES.

ALD. PHELAN says that the new price for gas, $2 per thousand feet, an increase of one hundred per cent. since that utility was taken over by the Hydro Commission, is outlandish. Probably the expression will ease the feelings of Ald. Phelan. It is to be hoped so, as no other form of relief is in sight.

Raising the rates has followed the acquisition of local public utilities by the Commission at Toronto. When the street car lines were under private control the company permitted the use of the cars to all postmen on actual duty for $35 a year. When the Hydro Commission got control the price for this service was raised to $50, which the Government refused to pay. Recently an attempt was made by the latter to renew the contract, but in the meantime the Hydro had boosted its rate to $60 a year, and negotiations were abandoned. Instead of a flat rate, the letter carriers are now allowed a limited number of tickets that are not sufficient to assure prompt service in the distribution of mail unless the postmen spend their own money for car fare.

A PROFESSOR'S JOKES.

(Ottawa Journal.)

AS SOMETHING of a joke comes to Ottawa newspaper men the despatch relating that Professor W. F. Osborne of the University of Manitoba, addressing the Montreal Canadian Club, denounced the press of Canada and declared that "the general run of people suspected its news was either suppressed or else tinctured for propaganda purposes, with the result that the people had lost their old-time confidence in the newwpapers." Just before making this address, Professor Osborne was in Ottawa taking an active part in the meetings of the National Council of Moral Education. At the close of the series, Professor Osborne paid a tribute to the excellent reports of the discussions that had appeared in the newspapers. The reporters, he said, had been fair and accurate, and had used admirable judgment in the preparation of their summaries.

But with still more interest is recalled the fact that Professor Osborne was partly successful, after much personal importuning of news editors, in getting "suppressed" the report of a paper read to the Council by Mr. Cudmore, the Dominion Statistician. Professor Osborne strenuously contended that Mr. Cudmore's facts about the exchange rate should not be made public. Was it the blunder of the Ottawa newspapers in acceding to Professor Osborne's request that led him to denounce the press of Canada as either suppressing or tincturing the news for propaganda purposes?

Professor Osborne told the Montreal Canadian Club that the Dominion Government was "fiddling and faddling about without doing anything." If Professor Osborne does not know any more about the Government than he does about the way in which Canadian newspapers are conducted, we are afraid his impressions are not of any real value. But perhaps Professor Osborne was only joshing the Montreal Canadian Club.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

PERHAPS NOT ALL, but at least some things come to the city employe who waits for a raise of salary.

What Makes Rent Of City Houses High

(New York Sun and Herald.)

It is lucky for the people of this city that the tax rate climbs only slightly when everything else goes up immoderately. And much credit is due the municipal government for keeping taxes from running away like wild horses in a period when everything else has been going a breakneck speed.

But Comptroller Craig should not be taken to say that he thinks because there is only an eighth point rise in the tax rate rents can be braked down to a standstill. In the first place, not the tax rate but the amount of taxes paid on given valuations, whatever the rate, is what hits the pocket of the real estate owner. In the second place, high taxes or low taxes, the excessive cost of living of an office building, an apartment house or any other renting structure must be met out of its earnings or service cannot be rendered and the property cannot escape bankruptcy.

It may be true for for an apartment house on a stable valuation of $1,000,000 the increased tax rate would mean only some $800 more of expenses. But you cannot get away from the fact, when coal costs two to three times what it cost before and when hundreds of tons a month are used in such a building, that there is an item of inceased expense amounting to thousands of dollars a year. You cannot get away from the fact, when engineers and firemen receive twice the pay they got before and when the work that was done before by half a dozen engineers and firemen now takes a dozen engineers and firemen, that there is another increased expense of thousands of dollars a year.

You cannot get away from the fact, when it takes twice the wages to run the elevators, twice the wages to do the cleaning, twice the wages to do any labor about the place—when it takes thousands of dollars a year, instead of hundreds, merely to cart away the ashes every morning—you cannot get away from the fact that these things account for many thousands more that must be paid and must come out of revenues.

You cannot get away from the fact, when it costs twice to three times what it cost before to put up a building, twice to three times what it cost before to paint it, twice to three times what it cost before to put in the plumbing, twice to three times what it cost before to put in the lighting equipment and fixtures, twice to three times what it cost before to keep up repairs, that there are not merely tens of thousands but hundreds of thousands more of outlay than before; and the tenants must pay those costs or the buildings will not be erected and cannot be maintained to house them properly.

Profiteering, as the term is generally accepted, is repulsive in the real estate or in any other business. No doubt there has been profiteering in this field as in others. In some instances it has been rotten. But in the majority of cases probably it has been only a necessary meeting of enormously increased expenses; for whether it is a landlord, a merchant, a manufacturer or a farmer, he cannot put two or three times as heavy costs of capital and of operation into his business as he put into it before without getting these costs out again as receipts—charges upon the consumers—or he and his business will go on the rocks.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Detective Sergeant Clarence L. Dalrymple, chief guard of the White House at Washington, is courtesy itself with all who would see the President, whether they are madcaps or magnates.

If a wild-eyed gentleman or lady enters the executive offices with a message for the President that must be delivered in person, he is invited to have a seat and "to wait just a moment and the secretary will see you." This is the cue for a Secret Service man, who proceeds to find out if an incoherent story accompanies the wild eyes. Usually this is so and the visitor is tendered a trip to the Washington Asylum Hospital where sanity is scientifically investigated.

The silky suaveness of Dalrymple has been acquired in 25 years' service as a White House policeman. During that time he has greeted thousands of distinguished visitors and known immediately each of the Presidents, McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson. His manifest courtesy is always remembered and celebrities have often commended him. He has a remarkable faculty for remembereing names and faces, a trait that is a real asset in his work.

He has also intercepted thousands of cranks, many of the dangerous types, bent on seeing the President.

"Cranks come in waves" he says "During the war a lot of people with disordered minds tried to get the President's ear in order to tell of a sure way to win the war.

"After the war was won a lot with crazy ideas on reconstruction tried to see him.

"The illness of the President has excited a lot of public curosity, and as a result there has been an avalanche of letters and visitors who would have sure cures, from thought healers down to those with simple home remedies."

LARGEST CITY IN THE WORLD

New York Holds That Honor Now According to the Census.

New York, Feb. 26.— Estimates on New York's census returns for 1920 give the city more than 7,000,000 inhabitants, according to census officials.

The population of the metropolitan district, which icludes suburbs not actually belonging to the city, is said to exceed 8,500,000.

These figures would make New York indisputably the biggest city in the world, London coming second with about 1,000,000 less both for the city proper and the London metropolitan area.

LADY ASTOR DELIVERS HER MAIDEN SPEECH

PUTS FORTH STRONG APPEAL FOR REFORM OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

London, Feb. 25.—Lady Astor made her maiden speech in Parliament last night during the course of a debate on the subject of liquor control.

Sir John Rees, Unionist for East Nottingham, in a brilliant and witty speech, urged the removal of the existing war restrictions on the liquor trade.

"I know that strong forces are arrayed against me," he said, "and that there is a rod in pickle for me. But I shall be prepared to kiss the rod."

Lady Astor followed Sir John, and, although at first showed nervousness, she was soon speaking with confidence and in a clear voice, which rang through the house to the large and friendly audience.

"I am aware," she said, "that this country does not desire prohibition. And I am not working for that. I am certain that the country is ripe for drastic drink reforms, and I want to see that the drink submarine does not torpedo the prime minister, and that he is master in his own house."

Cheers and laughter greeted this sally. Vigorously attacking Rees and his supporters and accusing them of constantly kicking during the past years against the drink control board she exclaimed amid cheers: "What did they do during the great war? Had they not a pretty record?"

Appeals for Reform.

Lady Astor concluded with a fervent appeal for reform, saying: "Drink promises everything, but gives nothing, and I beg the house not to look upon me as either a crank or a lunatic, because I am only trying to speak for thousands of women and children who cannot speak for themselves."

The Rees motion was talked out. In the course of the subsequent debate Lady Astor was warmly complimented by both Sir Donald Maclean and the Right Hon. Herbert A. Fisher, of the War Ministry, for her courageous and brilliant speech.

Mr. Fisher, in behalf of the Government, explained the impossibility of returning to conditions before the war, and said that the only alternative was a new bill which must be carefully considered by the House.

MANHOOD SUFFRAGE FOR THE DOMINION

SOME MEMBERS OR PARLIA- IN FAVOR OF UNIVERSAL FRANCHISE

Ottawa, Feb. 25.—In the opinion of members of Parliament reaching the city within the last couple of days to attend the opening ceremonies on Thursday, there is a hard fight ahead when the Government introduces the Franchise Act in the Commons.

At the present time nothing definite as to the contents or provisions of the bill has been made known, but Opposition members declare that any attempt to force a duplication of the work of the enumerators by using a Dominion voters' list instead of following the Provincial lists will be bitterly contested.

There is also the matter of any redistribution, if such is proposed, and the limitation as to who shall or shall not be eligible to vote in Dominion elections. Several members have declared that anything less than giving the vote to every Canadian man and woman over 27 years of age will not be satisfactory, so that, whatever may be the provisions of the act as it comes before Parliament, a long, wordly battle is almost assured.

MAY CLOSE PENITENTIARY

Govt. Will Then Sell Coal Mining Rights on Edmonton Property.

Ottawa, Feb. 25.—Closing of the Alberta Penitentiary at Edmonton, and transferral of its inmates to the prisons at Stony Mountain, Man., and Prince Albert, Sask., is regarded probable. Coal seams of great value are located on the property of the Edmonton Penitentiary. Mining operations have been carried on by Government with convict labor in the past, but if the institution is closed, the mining rights will likely be sold at a price which would bring a handsome return on the investment.

THE KARAKUL LAMB

Comes From the Region of Bokhara In Tukestan.

The furs known as Karakul, Persian Lamb and Astrakhan come to us from the regions about Bokhara, in Turkestan. Before the war almost all of them were dyed and treated at Leipzig where two houses alone received 750,000 skins, with a value of about $2,700,000 (at pre-war price) every year.

The race of sheep known as Karakul is native of Turkestan, and its special home is in the vast sandy desert plains of Bokhara. The oasis of Karakul is washed by the muddy waters of the River Zerafchane, which, swollen by the snows of the Altai Mountains, falls into Lake Karakul, but inundates a large area of sandy dunes on which many deep-rooted bushes grow. In crossing the deserts to the north, the wind is laden with salts of soda, potash and magnesia, and these in the dry season cover the ground with white crystals. Many of the bushes bear tender green shoots that are the favorite food of the sheep while their berries and twigs, dried upon the plant and then cut for forage, supply their diet in winter.

The lambs are born covered with an abundant fleece, down to their hoofs and as far as their eyes. This fleece is formed of black strands tightly curled against the skin. If the animal be killed within three days of its birth and skinned at once, the fleece remains unchanged, even humidity not affecting the curls. As it grows, however, the curls untwist, and after it once has been sheared the wool grows with scarcely a trace of curl. After five years the wool of the fleece is quite straight. After three years it becomes gray, and after seven a dirty white.

The lambs are born in February and killed the second or third day, except such as are kept for reproduction or for wool. The rule is that the fleece of a lamb sells for the highest price a sheep has brought in the past year. The skins of unborn lambs, taken from sheep that have died soon before the date on which they would have given them birth, bring the highest prices—twenty to thirty roubles.

Efforts were made before the war to acclimatize the Karakul sheep in Belgium and Northern Germany, and with some success.

How Wood Alcohol Poisons.

Whenever blindness or serious impairment of vision follows symptoms of intoxication, suspect wood alcohol as the cause. Such is the wise advice given by Dr. S. Dana Hubbard, superintendent of the Division of Industrial Hygiene, New York Board of Health, in the Medical Journal.

Dr. Hubbard points out that wood alcohol's effect on the human system is totally different from that of ethyl alcohol. The latter is quickly oxidized in the body, the former very slowly and only partially. It leads to the formation of formic acid, a virulent poison. It strangest manifestation is that it causes atrophy of the optic nerve, and therefore blindness.

There is no antidote for wood alcohol poisoning. If taken in time life can often be saved by inducing vomiting, washing out the stomach, purging with croton oil, stimulating the heart, inhalations of oxygen, cold affusions to the head, extreme heat to the body and extremities, moist heat over the kidneys, rectal enemata of hot coffee and narmal salt solution and injections of pilocarpine.

Some of the trade names under which wood alcohol is sold are Columbian spirits, cologne spirits, colonial spirits, standard wood spirits, union spirits, eagle spirits, green wood spirits, Hastings spirits, bloom and acetone alcohol, purified alcohol, methyl alcohol. Under the law all containers must bear conspicuously a skull and crossbones and a warning that the contents are poison.

Such alcohol is dangerous not only when taken internally, but when used externally, as for a rub down or massage.

"Nisi Prius."

People often ask the meaning of the legal expression "nisi prius." Literally interpreted it means "unless before," a name given to the sittings of a court for the trial of civil causes. Judges on circuit, besides trying prisoners, have the power to give decisions in causes of complaints between private parties and when so acting are called judges of "nisi prius." Formerly when the circuits were less frequent the sheriff was commanded "by writ" to bring the jury and witnesses from the county where the action arose to Westminster, Gloucester or Winchester on a certain day, but when the assizes became frequent a "nisi prius" clause was inserted in the writ containing these words: "Unless before that day our justices shall come to your county and take the assizes there." As it happened that the assizes always did take place before the date named in the writ the clause was practically useless and now remains only as a name for those civil causes to which until recently it referred.—Dundee Advertiser.

Blood and Thunder Drama.

One of the most successful productions at the "Old Vic" was a play—written without Dickens' permission—round "Oliver Twist" and banned by the lord chamberlain owing to the realistic way in which Bill Sikes murdered Nancy. His lordship's jurisdiction did not extend to what were then called the "minor theaters," so the play was for many years a standing dish at the "Vic" and thrilled the gallervites with fierce emotions, no matter how many times they had seen it. "Nancy was always dragged round the stage by her hair," writes John Hollingshead, "and after this effort Sikes always looked up defiantly at the gallery. He was always answered by one loud and fearful curse, yelled by the whole mass like a Handel festival chorus. When Sikes seemed to dash Nancy's brains out on the stage a thousand outraged voices, which sounded like ten thousand, filled the theater and deafened the audience below."—London Chronicle.

First War Correspondent.

The first war correspondent, according to a theory propounded by Sutherland Edwards, appears to have been Homer, who was sent by the editor of an Argos paper called the Chronos to describe the siege of Troy. Hostilities lasted only about seven weeks, and when they came to an end the Greek chiefs were in no hurry to return to their wives. Homer was a good sort, and as he drew a large salary and a handsome allowance for expenses from the Chronos he readily accepted the scheme propounded by the wise Ulysses—to keep the war going to the columns of his paper so long as he could manage to write about it. His letters were too good not to publish, and meantime the Greek chiefs had an enjoyable time at Troy and elsewhere. Reissued in book form as "The Iliad" these early examples of war correspondence have enjoyed a wider circulation than was possible even in the columns of the Chronos.—London Graphic.

An Unknown Chess Genius.

When Lasker, previous to the 1899 chess international tournament, visited Manchester he was opposed in a simultaneous performance by an unknown player, who had obtained permission from the club secretary to take a board against the champion. The player put up quite a fair game, but was finally mated. Then he inquired of Lasker to know wherein he had erred in the conduct of the play.

"Well," said Lasker, "your play has been somewhat peculiar. I notice that you have not once moved your knights."

"No," replied the player, "the fact is that I have not as yet quite mastered the move of the knights, so I thought it safer not to move them at all."

The stranger had unconsciously conceded his famous adversary the odds of two knights, not to mention the handicap of his cramped position.

Not Very Busy.

"Recorder of Deeds," read the sign over the door of a handsome building on one of the more prominent of the golden streets.

A new arrival within the pearly gates entered.

"The recording of deeds interests me," he announced. "I used to be a lawyer in the other world. But why is it that all the clerks are working except you?" he inquired of the only idle member of the force.

SOME OTHER WORLDS.

A Few Figures That Make the Earth Seem Small.

"This is a small world."

How often do we hear that said; and how truly! Though its affairs seem to us so vastly important, ours is only a tiny planet.

To realise now really tiny it is take a look through a telescope at the star Algol—a name that should be written Al Ghoul, or demon of the night; for so it was called by ancient Arabian astronomers on account of its uncanny habit of winking out at regular intervals.

Algol is a sun. Every sixty-eight hours it is eclipsed by a huge planet that revolves around it, causing it to fade much in the same way as the shutter of an intermittent lighthouse lamp cuts off at intervals the warning light.

This planet is so huge that if cut up into suitable pieces it would furnish material for about 1,250,000 worlds the size of ours. This figure is certainly striking. But, in order that its meaning may be grasped we may to advantage resort to a mode of reckoning that will present it to our minds in the form of a picture.

The earth is about 93,000,000 miles distant from our own sun. Let us suppose that a series of worlds the size of ours was extended all the way from the earth to the sun, like the wooden balls in a bowling-alley trough, each one in contact with its next neighbor.

A little figuring will show that 11,625 such worlds arranged in this fashion would suffice to span the distance between our planet and the solar luminary.

Now you have an idea of the enormous size of the planet that revolves about the star Algol, deriving from the latter its light and heat. What a midget our world is in comparison!

The earth's circumference is about 24,000 miles. That of Algol's huge satellite is not much less than 3,000,000 miles.

Is the latter inhabited? That is the inevitable and always most interesting question. We cannot know; and in all likelihood no dweller on this sublunary orb ever will know.

In contemplating the immensity of Algol's mighty planet we feel like pigmies. But are we such, relatively, to its possibly human-like inhabitants?

We are naturally prompted in imagination to people a giant world with giant inhabitants. But think for a moment. If you were living on such a world as Algol's satellite you could not walk. You could not lift a foot from the ground by reason of the tremendous attraction of gravitation.

Such being the case, it seems more plausible to suppose that the people on the giant planet (if there are any) are tiny creatures, lightly and delicately built.

We are so constituted as to be unable to realise the possible existence of any thinking beings that have not the human form. But how absurd that is when you come frankly to consider it. There are doubtless thousands of billions of inhabitable worlds in the universe and presumably the "thinking beings" that tenant them are mostly patterned very differently from ourselves.

It is a fair supposition that many of the distant planetary races are incomparably superior to ourselves in point of intelligence as well as physically. Is it not even imaginable that some of them may approximate to types which, whether winged or not, we would regard as corresponding to our conception of the angels?

A Worm Good to Eat.

The most prized of all gustatory delicacies in Samoa is the "palolo." Travelers who have been persuaded to try it declare it superior to the lobster.

The palolo is a marine worm, and is rather a mystery, being never seen save on two or three nights in the entire year. Its appearance seems to be regulated by the moon.

The night when the October moon changes to the third quarter is chosen by the palolo for its first appearance. When the moon rises the sea is seen to be alive with wriggling green and brown worms, some of them a yard or more in length.

The natives, ready in advance, make a festival of the occasion, going out with dip nets among the reefs and scooping up the worms by the bushel. They paddle about in every available boat with lighted torches waiting for the moon, and then the scene becomes one of great and joyous excitement.

The palolo comes once again when the November moon quarters, but no more until the following year. It is said to live in crannies of the coral reefs, coming to the surface to spawn at these lunar periods.

Some of these worms are eaten as they wiggle, but the bulk of the catch is reserved for a big feast on the following day, when they are wrapped in banana leaves and baked.

Month With No Full Moon.

February, 1866, was in one way the most wonderful month in the world's history. It had no full moon. January had two full moons and so had March, but February had none. This remarkable state of things had never happened before since the era we assign to th

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

C. P. R. OFFICIALS WILL ESTABLISH A CLASS FOR FIRST AID INSTRUCTIONS

Preliminary Meeting Held in This City Yesterday—Employes, Their Wives ane Daughters are Eligible to Take the Two Months' Course Required.

A two month's course of first aid instruction for C. P. R. employees in Peterborough, was inaugurated last night when Mr. S. A. Gidlow, general secretary, St. John's Ambulance Association of Montreal, addressed a gathering of employees at the C.P.R. freight sheds on Charlotte street and explained the purpose and value of the instruction and the general work which would be covered during the term. Mr. E. Noble, first aid instructor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, accompanied Mr. Gidlow and will return to Peterborough and take charge of the classes which will be held one hour a week for the two months. At the conclusion of the course a local doctor will be asked to examine the classes and to all those who pass, a St. John's Ambulance Certificate of First Aid will be given

In introducing Mr. Gidlow to the employees, Mr. W. S. Dodd, the local freight agent, explained that not only was the company prepared to supply the services of an instructor and the necessary material for the classes but they were also insistent that the classes should be taken in the company's own time so that every employee would have a good opportunity of taking instruction and learning how to render first aid. He also stated that the wives and daughters of the employees would have an equal chance of taking in the classes and that if enough women could be interested, special classes would be opened for them. He hoped that they would all be successful in winning the certificate and he intended to have a try at getting one himself in spite of his age.

In Force for Fifteen Years

In opening Mr. Gidlow announced that this work had been going on in the C. P. R. now for fifteen years and that the Canadian Pacific was such a huge concern together with its steamships, railroads and shops that it was taking years to get around the system and give all the employees the necessary instruction. The course was more on what not to do than what to do as if they remembered what not to do, they were almost sure to do the right thing at the right time. Using an ordinary faint as a simple illustration of the necessity of the course he pointed out that when a person fainted the average person immediately placed the patient in an arm chair or otherwise made them comfortable and then poured water down the throat. He pointed out that in both cases wrong treatment was being given. In the first place, a faint was caused because the heart was not strong enough to send the blood to the brain. Placing the patient in a chair not only sent the blood down instead of up and the best thing to have done would have been to have placed the fainting person flat on the floor. Then in the second place when a person became unconscious it was impossible to swallow anything and the water instead of going into the stomach went into the lungs and caused choking or suffocation. Thus it could be seen that even in a simple faint serious results might come from not knowing how to treat it.

The speaker went on to speak of simple fractures and their danger when improperly treated. Generally when an accident occurred the patient was roughly removed out of the way of traffic perhaps causing the jagged edge of the bone to pierce a main artery and in the space of a few moments the patient has bled to death. It was better to let the traffic wait for a few minutes until proper treatment could be given than to risk a life. He knew of hundreds of cases where the victim of an accident had been the means of saving his own life simply because he was able to tell others what to do for him.

Mr. Gidlow demonstrated simple and effective ways of treating fractures and making splints and slings although time would not permit going into this work fully.

Touching on bleeding he pointed out that when the arm was bleeding from a vein below the elbow the most natural thing to do and what was generally done by those who did not know was to apply a tourniquet above the wound thinking thereby to stop the bleeding, whereas it should have been applied below. In explanation of this Mr. Gidlow told how the blood came from the heart in arteries and if one of these was bleeding a tourniquet should be applied between the wound and the heart. The blood went back to the heart in veins and if one of these was bleeding the tourniquet should be applied on the side of the wound farthest away from the heart. It was a mistake like this which he was out to prevent. In a few words he described the symptoms of a broken collar bone and in the space of a few seconds demonstrated clearly the proper treatment to render so that no serious developments would follow the injury. In conclusion Mr. Gidlow mentioned that it had been the aim to avoid technicalities and that the instruction would be made as simple as possible.

SOVIET RUSSIA READY TO MAKE GENERAL PEACE

OFFERS TERMS TO U. S., TO JAPAN AND TO ROUMANIA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 26.—The Soviet Commissary of Foreign Affairs has dispatched notes to the United States, Japan and Rumania, offering them peace with Soviet Russia according to a wireless despatch from Moscow.

ALD. CROWE CHAMPIONS CAUSE OF WORKING GIRL IN THIS CITY

Pay Them a Decent Wage He Says on Which to Live Decently—He Aims to Uplift the Masses—Council's Committee Endorses Further Salary Increases.

Ald. Turner last night presented to the Council's committee of the whole the Finance Committee's proposition in regard to the salaries of civic officials.

The schedule now stands accepted by the committee of the whole as published last night, excepting in a few cases where further increases were agreed on.

City Solicitor Widdifield's salary was increased from $1,000 to $1,500, an increase of $500. The salary proposed Tuesday night was $1,100, but committee agreed that that amount was inadequate for service to be rendered.

W. F. Johnston's salary was increased from $100 to $150, that of Mr. Fennie from $75 to $100, and the salary of B. Morrow from $75 to $100. These men serve in the Court of Revision.

It has been proposed Tuesday to raise the salary of Assessment Commissioner W. J. Henry from $1,800 to $2,000; but the committee last night decided for $2,150.

In reference to Mr. Henry, Ald. Gordon said he was an expert valuator and his figures generally stand with the Court of Revision. Then, he keeps a watchful eye on improvements, and it was due to him that the city is getting practically $2,000 a year in school taxes from the Quaker Oats Company.

Ald. Crowe launched forth in strong opposition to the principle adopted by the Finance Committee in recommending increases in salaries, especially referring to the raising of the city engineer's salary from $2,500 to $3,300. The increased cost of living during four years of the war aggregated about 62 per cent., he said, and the one year's increases recommended generally were disproportionate to that percentage.

Ald. Turner replied that by accepting Ald. Crowe's policy for raising salaries to meet the increased cost of living, the city engineer should be getting now some $4,111 a year, as he had not been given an increase for seven years.

Government's Plan.

Ald. Crowe here cited the Ontario Government's plan in 1919 for increasing salaries, which he thought might be adopted by Council. They secured, he said, outside expert's figures on the percentage in the increased cost of living and applied that information in this way: Employees getting less than $3,000 a year got a war bonus; those drawing $2,500 and less than $3,000 received a bonus of $120, salaries of $2,000 and less than $2,500 were bonused by $180, salaries of $1,500 and less than $2,000 were agumented to the extent of $240, employees drawing $1,200 and less than $1,500 got $300 and those paid less than $1,200 received a bonus of $360.

That, went on Alderman Crowe, is uplifting the low-paid man to meet the cost of living.

Ald. Gordon: "Well, it is generally conceded that the Ontario Government put over a pretty rotten deal on their outside servants."

Ald. Crowe, continuing, said the Federal Government went one better. To men who had families and were only getting $1,200 a year, they granted a bonus of $420; to those without families and drawing the same salary, $240, such bonuses lessening proportionately up to $3,000 salaries, where they ceased.

Uplift the Masses.

Ald. Crowe here declared his decided opposition to high-paid civic employees getting larger increases than their less fortunate brethren. It costs, he said, the low-paid man more to live than the high-paid man, because the latter has not the ready cash to buy in large quantities. "I'm here," he asserted, "to try and uplift the masses, to see that the lower man or woman gets a chance in accord with the teachings of Christianity. Your policy regarding these increases in salaries is that the rich man shall wax richer and the poor man grow poorer."

Ald. Crowe then declared himself in favor of a minimum salary of $550 a year for girls. "Perhaps some of you men have no girls or families," he said. "If so, the more shame for you. It is the duty of every man to raise a family, and I'm here to see that the average man who raises a family gets a fair chance to live and raise his family properly."

"It is a shame," he concluded, "that while this community is manifesting so much interest in a Forward Movement that the conditions of working girls are such as they are. Pay the girls enough salary to live decently, and give them a chance."

Ald. Crowe's attention was drawn to the fact that the minimum wage provided in the schedule for girls is now $550.

Ald. Crowe said he would vote for no increases but on a flat basis of $200 for girls and $150 for high-priced men.

LOCAL ENGINEERS REPORT ON BRIDGE

SAISFIED WITH TEST MADE OF HARD-PAN FOR EAST PIER

Although The Review gave yesterday the actual results of the test made of the weight-carrying capacity of the hard pan available for the east river pier of the new bridge, following will be found the report in detail from the local branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada, as submitted to the city's committee of the whole council last night:

To the Mayor and Members of Council:

Gentlemen,—In accordance with your request of February 12th, "that the Peterborough branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada be asked to give its opinion as to the sufficiency of the foundation for the eastern river pier of the Hunter street bridge," a committee of the branch was duly appointed, consisting of the following members, Richard B. Rogers (chairman), J. L. Killaly, P. P. Westby, E. R. Shirley, W. G. Montgomery and I. L. Dobbin (secretary).

This committee has examined the work and the character of the foundation, and was also fortunate in being present at the time the tests of the bearing power of the material in the foundation were being carried out under the direction of Mr. Barber's staff on February 23.

The material on which it is proposed to place the footings consists of an exceedingly compact hard pan. From information given us by the engineer in charge, this hard pan is at least 18½ feet in thickness at the south side of the bridge and 17 feet at the north side. This information was obtained by means of a churn drill.

We were also informed that underneath this hard pan, at the south side, is a stratum of sand the depth of which was unfortunately not obtained. There was also a test pit sunk 8 feet below the sand of the present excavation and the soil was found to be uniformly hard pan to that depth.

The pressure tests were made in the following manner. A section in the foundation of the pit was cleared to body hard pan and levelled. A load of 4660 lbs. to a block of wood 4 inches square, this being the equivalent of a load of 20.97 tons per square foot. This load was applied for five minutes at two points in the pit, without appreciable penetration at either point.

Acording to Mr. Barber's figures, the revised plan shows a load of six tons on the material of the foundation, per square foot. This corresponds to a factor of safety of at least 3.5, which, considering the depth of the foundation, and the confinement of the material, we are of the opinion is ample to sustain the load of the eastern pier of the bridge.

In view of the fact that the excavation for the eastern river pier has shown the inadequacy of the preliminary information regarding the foundation for that part of the structure, we strongly recommend that ample borings be immediately made with a core drill, and samples obtained from the sit of the western river pier. At least four holes on the confines of the pier should be made.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

THE PETERBOROUGH BRANCH OF THE ENGINEERING INSTITUTE OF CANADA, R. L. Dobbin, secretary.

Council agreed to send a copy of this report to Engineer Frank Barber and to request him to make borings for the west river pier

LANKA TEA
W.B.Co.
W.B.C

British Grown for British Taste

This new tea called Lanka is British through and through, the perfected blend of fine varieties the hill gardens of Ceylon can produce. It comes straight to us from the Island of Ceylon through the Keystone Port of Vancouver—a direct route which saves freight charges and import duty. Thus, although super-quality, Lanka is sold at the popular price of 75 cents a pound.

Once you have tasted it, once you have enjoyed its incomparable flavor, Lanka will be your final choice of tea. No other varieties satisfy after you have once enjoyed the wonderful flavor of Lanka.

Lanka Tea is further distinguished by its beautiful bright sparkling color, by its captivating aroma, as irresistible as the bouquet of rare wine.

You will see the handsome Lanka package illustrated in this advertisement on your grocer's shelves. Leading dealers everywhere have welcomed the chance to offer their customers the supreme quality of Lanka.

MR. TOOMS EXPLAINS

Editor Review: In answer to the letter signed "Labor" and to all whom it may concern, the United Farmers' Clubs did not ignore or neglect the I.L.P. The president of the Independent Labor Party did receive an invitation to be present, accompanied by a complimentary ticket. While most others invited outside of the Labor circle were permitted to pay the prescribed fee of one dollar and fifty cents, which, I believe, they did gladly, for the opportunity of being present. One-half hour before the banquet a telephone message was received from President McArthur of the I.L.P. saying he could not be present owing to not feeling well.

Lenine's theory, he says, was to let the old state die, according to the Marxian theory, and gradually make all class distinctions disappear until there was only one class left, that of workingmen, but up to now, the correspondent writes, they have only managed to breed a few more very remarkable classes in addition to the existing ones.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

The Welfare Club of Barries, Ltd., met last night in the Y.M.C.A. when a lengthy program was put on for the enjoyment of the employes. Mr. Kelly made a very efficient chairman. A game of indoor baseball was played between two picked teams and two teams from the store also bowled on the Y.M.C.A. alleys, both events providing much enjoyment for the spectators.

A ten o'clock supper was served, to which about fifty sat down. A musical program was put on after supper in which practically every member of the party took part. The accompanist was Dr. Hyland. The evening closed with games in the gymnasium and the merry party dispersed all declaring that they had a wonderful evening's enjoyment.

GROVE SCHOOL TAKES GAME FROM ST. LUKE'S

SCORE 18 TO 10 IN HOCKEY MATCH AT LAKEFIELD YESTERDAY.

Yesterday afternoon an exciting game of hockey took place in Lakefield when the Grove School defeated St. Luke's team to the tune of 18-10. It was a good game, although lost on account of the smallness of the ice which [illegible] the Peterborough boys from getting away. The Grove team showed the results of constant practice in their fine combination while the St. Luke's forwards had a great tendency to "hog" the puck.

For the winners Mackenzie and Hamilton were the stars, both doing some fine rushing and stick-handling. On the forward line of the losers, G. Manlece and Legan were the stars, while on defence E. Manlece was particularly good, breaking up rushes which were sure to add to the goal score. St. Luke's captain made a mistake in sending his forward out of the game. Another mistake was so much "subbing." The team would get together nicely when a sub. would come on, while the Grove practically played the same team the whole game. The return game at the Brock street rink should prove more evenly contested.

LABOR MEMBERS OF LEGISLATURE MAY COME TO RESCUE OF ONTARIO TEACHERS

Minimum Salary of $1000 a Year May be Set for Country Pedagoges When General Question of Wages is Dwelt With.

Having demonstrated by the very absence of successful opposition, its institution as an unquestioned principle where day labor is employed, the minimum wage, strong in the self-consciousness of being, as enunciated by Prof. J. W. MacMillan, Manitoba, "the elementary human right," is now turning to consolidate the sympathies of its latest conquest, the "salariet."

Reports that in its fight against Premier Asquith in the constituency of Paisley, Labor has made an effective appeal to the "black-coated profession" by bringing them to realize that the weekly incomes connected with the gentle bearing and polished shoes and manners, are generally four or five dollars less than those of street sweepers, are of peculiar interest in the light of the similar appeal which indirectly is causing a certain unrest among salaried workers in Toronto and other Ontario cities.

"Closed Shop" in Effect.

While Toronto teachers clamor for a twenty-five per cent. increase and the secondary school teachers announce formation of a federation with which a school board must be "in good standing" before a member accepts a position on it, it is little known that for some months, among public school teachers of Ontario, there has been the practical equivalent of a minimum scale of salaries, application of the "closed shop" and the nucleus of a Dominion-wide federation with what corresponds to trade unions in labor vernacular, as its component parts.

The sleeplessness which such a condition must inevitably bring to the pillows of school secretaries and the panic among trustees might have been all avoided but for a resolution introduced at the 1919 Easter convention of the Ontario Educational Association by Principal Charles G. Fraser of Manning Avenue Public School, Toronto.

The fact that Mr. Fraser's recommendations were immediately acted upon eliminates the necessity of repeating the wording of the resolution. As an indirect result at the next convention of the association steps will be taken to form a provincial federation with Dominion-wide aims for the protection of the teaching profession.

Central Committee.

Directly, however, arose the formation of a small central committee composed of W. Frank Moore of Dundas, chairman; the late Henry Ward treasurer; Charles G. Fraser, secretary; John Munroe and T. A. Reid, Hamilton; Rev. W. M. Morris, Orangeville; J. G. Elliott, Kingston; Miss Helen Arbuthnot, Miss Bertha Atkins and Miss L. M. Dent of Toronto.

With its freedom from cumbersome weight of numbers the committee showed immediate signs of activity and the province wide "salary circle" was formed. Printed cards were sent for distribution to the ninety-five teachers' institutes in the province and since have been returned to the secretary, signed by more than a thousand teachers. They pledge themselves:

> Faithfully to endeavor to adhere to the salary schedule prepared by the central committee.
>
> To refrain from applying for a position where the vacancy has been caused by the failure of the board to comply with the committee's schedule.

Minimum Schedule.

The schedule places the minimum salary for rural and assistant teachers at from $600 to $800; village and rural principals must receive at least from $1000 to $1400; for principals of schools with upwards of six rooms, a minimum of from $1200 to $1600. This scale was then the objective set for two years. Since then the mounting cost of living moved a delegation from the O. E. A., who met Hon. R. H. Grant, minister of education, recently to urge establishment of a general minimum of $1000 for teachers with permanent certificates.

It is also a well known fact that with the possibility of labor's bow into the legislative council resulting in minimum wage legislation at the coming session, hopes of teachers have risen and one of the strong suggestions, if not demands, which they aim to make on the government will be the adoption of a minimum salary schedule for teachers of all grades in the province.

Whether or not one thousand dollars will be the minimum asked, Mr. Charles G. Fraser, secretary of the central committee, declined to say, repeating the proverb about, "choking with too much butter." At any rate the deputation were "delighted" with their reception by Mr. Grant and say that his "assurance of sympathetic consideration" is felt to mean more than the hackneyed political phrase usually implies.

Plan Fight for "Rights."

Popularity for the new "radical" program among the teachers is evidenced by the fact that according to Mr. Fraser every teachers' institute of any importance has an association already formed for instituting steps toward securing its members' "rights."

Another of the association's schemes which was outlined in Mr. Fraser's address to the minister of education before the deputation, advocated placing definite responsibility for one-half of teachers' salaries on above, say six or seven hundred dollars, on the province, the other half to be raised from the section and the first six hundred dollars by county taxation. Adoption of this, the teachers claim, would mean a long stride toward securing county boards of education and a system of consolidated schools.

Meanwhile young men and women who have spent five or six years in training for their profession wade in snow, waist deep, to reach their school houses, wear their coats during most of the morning to keep from freezing and are expected to expound with cheerful voice modern education to groups of children, huddled about wood fires in chinky buildings—all for remuneration ranging from $400 to $700 or $800 a year, at which the cubbiest of office boys would be likely to sniff the air.

One Teacher at $375.

One teacher in Frontenac County received $375 and the highest salaried teacher there receives $800. One teacher in Middlesex County meets the H. C. of L. with $450 a year. In the Town of Walkerton, County of Bruce, three teachers receive $677 a year each, and one $732. Similar "wages" are the fashion in the Towns of Tiverton, Lucknow, Port Elgin, Southampton and Teeswater, while the general scale throughout the neighboring county of Perth is scarcely, if any, higher. The northern cities of Port Arthur and Fort William are held up as "model twins," having conceded to their teachers minimum salaries of $1000 and $1200 respectively.

These are examples which Mr. Fraser quotes directly from governmental records.

ACTED AS AUCTIONEERS WITHOUT LICENSE

JACKSON BROS. OF PORT PERRY FINED IN POLICE COURT TODAY

Two auctioneers from Port Perry came to Peterborough a couple of weeks ago and conducted a sale of cattle at the Montgomery House. The sequel took place this morning when the Jackson Brothers were arraigned in the local Police Court charged with conducting an auction sale without a license in contravention of by-law No. 1803. They pleaded guilty and were fined ten dollars and costs, amounting to $16.10 in the one case and $14.10 in the other.

MRS. HOLMES PRAISES TANLAC FOR RESTORING HER HEALTH IN A SHORT TIME.

"It seems remarkable that it has taken only two bottles of Tanlac to completely overcome my six years of troubles," said Mrs. Olive Holmes, who lives at 409 Atlantic Street, Sydney, Nova Scotia, while talking to the Tanlac representative the other day.

"It was about six years ago that my health began to fail," she continued, "and since that time I have suffered from a complication of troubles. My nerves were so terribly shattered that even the rustling of a newspaper would upset me, and I was so restless at night that it was almost impossible for me to get a night's rest and sometimes it would be three o'clock before I could close my eyes. I had a poor appetite and indigestion caused me so much misery that I hardly ever cared whether I ate anything or not, and I was troubled with dreadful headaches that often kept me in bed for days at a time. I looked almost like a frame and was so weak that I had to give up my housework altogether.

"A friend of mine told me about Tanlac and now I am certainly thankful to her for her advice for it has proved to be just the thing I needed and before I had finished my second bottle I felt like a different woman entirely. My nerves are so steady that I can stand any kind of noise and I am never troubled with headaches any more. I have a splendid appetite and can eat just anything I please with out any bad effects in the least and my food is giving me so much nourishment that I am stronger than I have been in years. I sleep like a child and rest perfectly and I never have that worn out feeling, but instead I have so much energy and strength about me that my housework is a pleasure to me. I am so happy for what Tanlac has done for me that I wish I could tell everybody about this medicine."

The Keene Public School, which has been closed the past month on account of influenza, was opened on Monday.

Miss Olive Shaver, who has been very ill the past three weeks with pneumonia, is slowly improving.

Born—A son, to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Downer, on Wednesday, Feb. 11th, at Nicholls Hospital, Peterborough.

Mr. William Fletcher is nicely recovering from his operation where he is convalescing at Nicholls Hospital, Peterborough.

Miss Hazel Brown has accepted the position as saleslady at G. T. Gall's store.

The meeting, which was to have been held in the Town Hall on Tuesday evening of last week for the purpose of organizing a ladies' U.F.O. club, was postponed until a later date, owing to so much sickness in the community.

HASTINGS

(Special Correspondence.)

Hastings, Feb. 26.—A public auction sale was held on Thursday last at the farm of Mr. Albert Brooks of Percy, when all his stock and implements were disposed of. Mr. Brooks and family are moving into Hastings at once.

A similar sale was held on Friday at the home of Mr. J. Fleming of Percy. Mr. Fleming has sold his farm, but as yet has not decided where he will locate.

At the annual congregational meeting of the Presbyterian church the following board of management was elected: Messrs. H. B. Wilson, Gordon Johnston, Allan Lewis, Fred Dodd and C. P. Doughty, together with assistants: Messrs. W. Whitred, J. E. Taylor, Edgar McKee and J. M. Thomson. The congregation raised for all purposes during the year $2,576.55, and there is a balance on hand of $43.96.

Council Meeting.

At the February meeting of the town council there were present Dr. Hess, reeve, and Councillors Lynch, Chapman and Doxsee.

Mr. John McGrail filed his declaration and qualification for office and took his seat as a councillor for 1920.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

Several accounts were read and on motion orders were drawn for the various amounts.

The collector asked for the following rebates: Mrs. A. Lynn, $3.94; Miss Murtha, $2.85; James Nuttle, $6.50; Sherman Scriver, $2.

On motion of Messrs. Chapman and Doxsee, these rebates will be granted.

Application was made by Mr. L. T. Huycke for the position of collector. On motion of Messrs. Lynch and McGrail, Mr. Huycke was apointed at a salary of $55.

Applications were received from H. B. Wilson and E. M. Tate for the position of auditor, at a salary of $7.50 each. Moved and seconded by Messrs. Doxsee and McGrail that the applications for auditors be accepted at a salary of $6 each.

On motion of Messrs. Chapman and Lynch Mr. Merrill was appointed assessor, salary $50.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Chapman and Doxsee, that Messrs. Gordon & O'Brien be solicitors for the year 1920.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Doxsee and Lynch, that Wm. Warner be a member of the local Board of Health and Wm. West be sanitary inspector.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Chapman and McGrail, that Timothy Grady, Sam Stickles and M. Godfrey be fenceviewers.

The Reeve appointed the following committees:

Streets—Doxsee and Chapman.
Property—McGrail and Lynch.
Finance—McGrail and Lynch.
Charity—The Whole Council.

Moved and seconded by Messrs. Chapman and Doxsee, that William Boyle be pound-keeper, and that the place for holding the pound shall be on the town hall grounds.

Mr. C. R. Fowlds was present and submitted a proposal to enter into an agreement with the village for the supply of the public lighting.

Council adjourned.

After considering the same, council adjourned to meet February 25, when applicants were to be received for the office of treasurer for the town.

Local Chapter I. O. D. E.

The local chapter of the I.O.D.E. report the total amounts from various sources for the year 1919 to be $966.23, with a balance on hand of $349.25. A great many worthy objects were contributed to during the year, and the work of the society in general was satisfactory.

A number from town went down to Belleville Thursday evening to enjoy the hockey match played there between Peterborough and Kingston. A good game is reported.

Miss Elliott of Norwood has been visiting at the home of Miss Ona Doxsee.

Friends of Mrs. C. Jones, at present in the hospital at Peterborough, will be pleased to learn that good news of her steady improvement is being daily received, and it is hoped that she will soon be able to return to her home.

Mrs. V. German and Mrs. J. Oliver took a trip to Peterborough last week.

Mr. L. Joffe, the converted Russian Jew, delivered his lecture, "Russian Superstitions, Proverbs and Folk Lore," in the Methodist Church on Wednesday evening to a good audience. Mr. Joffe sang in several different languages and proved most entertaining. Any questions propounded by the audience were dealt with in a manner which proved conclusively that he was master of the situation. While in town he devoted his time to the work of the Bible Society as colporteur.

The annual Sunday school social of the Presbyterian Church was held Monday evening in the basement of the church. A large crowd was in attendance and an excellent supper served. After ample justice had been done to the tasty viands, a good program was rendered and a pleasant evening passed. Quite a handsome sum was added to the finances of the Sunday school.

It will cost $50,000,000 a year to "make the U.S. a prohibition country," Senator Warren told his associates at Washington.

THEATRICAL

OLIVE THOMAS WILL BE AT EMPIRE NEXT WEEK

WILL APPEAR AS TESSA DOYLE IN "THE SPITE BRIDE

Beautiful Olive Thomas will be seen at the Empire Theatre next Monday in "The Spite Bride," a drama of youthful impulse, produced by Selznick Pictures Corporation. Never has Miss Thomas looked more beautiful, and never was she cast in a better role than that of Tessa Doyle, one of the partners of the Dennis and Doyle dancing "sisters."

Tessa was a high type of show girl—straight, sweet and clean. When Rodney Dobson saw her he immediately decided that she was just the girl for his friend, Billy Swayne, to marry. Rod had impressed Billy with the fact that he must get married—to spite Millicent Lee, the girl to whom Billy had been engaged and who had jilted him, so that she could not get out her publicity first. Rod's idea was this: Marry the girl, hand her a thousand dollars and then give her a trip to Reno.

Billy, a scion of one of New York's oldest families, married the girl, but when he proceeded to give her the thousand, he met trouble. Trixie, Tessa's astute little partner, had sized him up and come to the conclusion that he could afford to pay more.

Billy refuses to be blackmailed and he and Rodney abduct the girls and take them to his yacht, which catches fire the next day and the entire party is forced to take to the lift boat. They are picked up by a tramp steamer bound for Cuba a couple of hours later. The captain falls in love with Tessa and gives her a card to his mother in case she ever needs a friend. A year later Tessa is knocked down by a truck and the card is found in her purse. How she once more meets the captain and later her husband and his mother, brings this delightful picture full of thrills and action to a happy but unexpected ending. Charles Giblyn directed and a fine supporting cast is headed by Robert Ellis, who was leading man in "Upstairs and Down."

Americans in Ireland.

Dublin, the capital, is as distinctly different from Belfast as Washington is from Pittsburgh, for Dublin has few industrial plants and is a hotbed of politics. It has many historic spots, fine monuments, wide streets, a splendid university, a fine castle and a cathedral where the famous Dean Swift occupied the pulpit for years. Cork, too, is a pleasant city with a style distinctly its own, and here the American feels at home. It seems that half the residents there have friends or relatives in the United States, and one is continually hearing stories of these friends. The majority of the Irish who return to Ireland seem to open up a business in Cork, for I counted no less than a dozen shops on Patrick street with the word "American" attached to their signs. There was an American haberdasher, an American book store, an American photographic studio and an American lace store. One of the best places to see the native of southern Ireland is at "Paddy's Market," a sort of huge second-hand store set up in the open street in Cork.—Mrs. C. R. Miller in Leslie's.

Music of the Chinese.

Chinese music does not entirely lack admirers among occidentals. There are, it appears, trained musicians of our own kind who seriously profess uncertainty whether the Chinese have not really advanced beyond us in music.

One authority has pointed out that the Chinese were the first in the history of music to develop a system of octaves, a circle of fifths and various other harmonical technics, and these in the days when our ancestors had not even evolved the simplest forms of melody. While no one has apparently contended that we shall finally arrive at an understanding of and a liking for something that shall approach the Chinese "harmonious discords," there are not wanting those who claim to have discovered among the musicians and lovers of music a steadily increasing sensitiveness to harmonies the existence of which was formerly unknown.—Washington Star.

Von Moltke and His Snuff.

During the Prussian advance in the Franco-Prussian war Von Moltke continually took pinches of snuff. When he was told that MacMahon was marching northward he exclaimed, "He is surely mad!" and forthwith nearly emptied his snuffbox as he retired to his tent to organize the plans that culminated in the tremendous conflict of Sedan. At the end of the war Von Moltke received a bill from the military stores with this item: "For one pound of snuff supplied to General Von Moltke, 1 thaler." The great soldier paid it without a murmur.

Accounting For Patrick Henry.

It is related that Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase on stopping at the birthplace of Patrick Henry in Virginia exclaimed: "What an atmosphere! What a view! What glorious mountains! No wonder Patrick Henry grew here!" Whereupon an honest native dryly remarked that the atmosphere, the view and the mountains had been there for ages, but that only one Patrick Henry had been produced.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

STRANGE TRADITIONS

STORIES THAT HAVE BECOME CURRENT IN HISTORY.

Mysteries Have Surrounded Famous Men and Women—It Has Been Said that Queen Elizabeth Was a Man In Disguise, Which Would Explain Many of Her Eccentricities.

MYSTERY, when involving personages who have had a dominating place in history apart from the mere mystery, usually has taken the form of the problem of definite sex, the problem of cradle substitution, or the problem of eventual fate. Thus the secret of Queen Elizabeth of England, according to ingenious theorists, was that the person so known was in reality a man and not a child of Henry VIII. at all. That theory explains so much; Elizabeth's failure to marry, her attitude to inquisitive physicians, her marvellous collection of wigs, her masculinity of appearance and demeanor.

According to the tale, the child Elizabeth died suddenly in a village of Gloucestershire during a pestilence. Those to whom the princess had been entrusted sought a child sufficiently resembling Elizabeth to allow a substitution that would deceive the King. Unable to find a girl they discovered a boy by the name of Neville, who was dressed in the princess' clothes and subsequently masqueraded through life as Queen Elizabeth.

A somewhat similar story made Prince James Edward Francis Stuart, later known as the Chevalier St. George, not the son of King James and his consort, but actually a child of Sir Theophilus Aglethorpe, nine days older than the Prince of Wales, and substituted for him in the cradle with the connivance of the King and Queen. A third tale of the kind made Louis Philippe of France an Italian peasant child, one Chiappini, the son of a jailer who was well paid for having his baby placed in line for succession to the throne of France, instead of the heir of Philippe Egalite, Duke of Orleans. The Citizen King's democratic ways and sincere espousal of the people's cause were supposed to have been the result of this plebeian blood.

Whoever the Peter Ney who ended life as a schoolmaster of South Carolina may have been, there always will be an element of mystery about the alleged execution of Napoleon's fiery marshal. His trial and its preliminaries were conducted by secret methods. Members of the Assembly who voted for his death did so with the understanding that the death sentence was to be commuted. When Louis Napoleon became Emperor he is supposed to have had Ney's grave opened, with the reputed result that the coffin was found not to contain a single relic of a human corpse.

According to the deathbed story attributed to Peter Ney, Wellington had interceded and saved his life. The firing squad had been instructed to fire over his head, but not until he should give the signal by pressing his hand to his heart, by which action he burst a bag of red fluid secreted beneath his shirt. To insure the success of these deceptions trusted men from his own command were selected. Spirited away after falling at the volley, he was hurried to Bordeaux; thence embarking for Charleston, U.S.A.

Almost as circumstantial is the legend that has persisted about the escape of Joan of Arc from the fagot pile of the market place of Rouen. According to conventional history the Maid of Orleans met her death in the flames and the ashes were thrown into the Seine. But some chroniclers have held that the purpose of the English in drawing up a cordon of soldiers and ecclesiastics at a distance sufficiently far to prevent any of the populace from gaining a good view of the martyr at the stake was in order that an effigy or substitute might be burned in her stead. That would account for the apparent ingratitude of the French King, who made no effort in her behalf, and for the fact that eight years after the supposed execution a woman appeared in Orleans claiming to be the Maid and was recognised as such by thousands, among them Joan's two brothers, Johan and Pierre.

There is a record that Joan married Robert des Armoires, a country gentleman, after her reappearance; and another record, bearing the date of 1476, containing the testimony of a parish priest that in 1473, forty years after the fire in Rouen, Joan's family was entertaining her as an honored guest. An old manuscript in the British Museum reads as follows: "They burned her or another woman like her, on which point many persons are (and have been) of different opinions."

How to Read Tracks.

"Camera-hunting is just about as popular to-day, even among sportsmen, as gun-hunting, and to secure a picture or study an animal's habits it is often necessary to track it. Campers are at a disadvantage when they cannot read tracks seen around the camp. A friend of mine lost a large part of his supplies through assuming that tracks he saw were those of his dog. That night a pair of timber wolves just about cleaned out his pantry," writes L. E. Eubanks in the Hunter-Trader-Trapper.

"One of the fundamental things to know about tracking is that the mode of travel affects the trail. Any animal makes a more distinct track when running, because of striking the ground with more force. Also the snow or dirt is kicked backward. Do your tracking against the sunlight if possible, so that every little dent will [illegible] a shadow."

Our Curious Brain.

A wonderful piece of self analysis, worthy of St. Augustine, which occurs in one of John Donne's funeral sermons gives poignant expression to what must doubtless have been a common condition of so sensitive a brain:

"I throw myself down in my chamber, and I call in and invite God and his angels together, and when they are there I neglect God and his angels for the noise of a fly, for the rattling of a coach, for the whining of a dog I talk on in the same posture of prayer, eyes lifted up, knees bowed down, as though I prayed to God, and if God should ask me when I last thought of God in that prayer I cannot tell. Sometimes I find that I forgot what I was about, but when I began to forget it I cannot tell. A memory of yesterday's pleasures, a fear of tomorrow's dangers, a straw under my knee, a noise in mine ear, a chimera to my brain, troubles me in my prayer."

It is this brain turned inward upon itself and darting out on every side in purely random excursions that was responsible, I cannot doubt, for all the contradictions of a career in which the inner logic is not at first apparent. —Fortnightly Review.

Hospital Efficiency.

A highly developed efficiency system in saving time and trouble for the staff is used in a London hospital. Indicators bearing the names of the officials house doctors and some of the staff doctors are located in many rooms and hallways, and these indicators show at all times whether or not any one of the officials is in the hospital and available for consultation. When each doctor comes into the building a button is pressed that makes it known on all the indicators that he has arrived; and when he goes out the indicators are made to record that fact. The indicators also show the word "engaged," which means that the official or doctor is not to be disturbed—a push on a button in the official's room accomplishing this. Thus, in any part of the hospital, at any time, each doctor knows and each nurse knows when the various officials and doctors may be asked to give attention to any matter.—Saturday Evening Post.

Gods of Machinery.

The ceremony of propitiating the gods which are supposed to reside in the printing machinery is annually performed by the Hindu members of the Times of Malaya printing staff. The usually prosaic machine and composing rooms are turned into weird caverns of mystery, dimly lit by candles and oil lamps, and odorous with the heavy scent of incense and perfumes. Every machine is garlanded and has placed before it an offering of "makan." Rice and bananas and cakes are the portion of each machine according in its size and importance; even the "stone" comes in for a share of the gifts. At the appointed time braziers, containing smoking camphor and cocoanut oil, are carried round and held before each machine, while the power engine, whose god presumably is regarded as a particularly aggressive personage, is "smoked" for a specially long period.—Times of Malaya.

Matter of Spelling.

A capital story in "The Dover Patrol," Admiral Bacon's much-talked-of book, concerns a sailor who was taken ill with a bad attack of rheumatism while mine-sweeping on a trawler, says Tit-Bits.

The sick man was promptly ordered to hospital, but later on the doctor found out, quite by accident, that he was still on board ship.

Angrily he asked why his order had not been obeyed.

"Well," replied the captain, "we tried to send him ashore, but a sergeant of police hailed us and said that on no account was he to be landed or we'd be fined £100, so we just kept him on board.

"But did you not signal to the depot, as I said?"

"Yes, we did; but neither me nor the signalman knew how to spell rheumatism, so we called it smallpox."

Well Known.

"The girl has no reference from her previous mistress, but I will take her if you are sure that you know her personally," the desperate searcher for a servant declared.

"Oh, yes, I know Mary well," the employment agent declared. "Why, I've known her for ten years. Through all that time she's been coming in here every ten days to get a new situation."

Champion "Looper."

At the Four Winds airdrome in Madrid the French aviator Frombal has looped the loop 624 times in a flight lasting two hours, forty-nine minutes, nineteen seconds, thus beating the record of 455 loops in one flight hitherto held by the American airman, Nait.

THREE BIG LEAGUERS TO BE BARRED THIS YEAR FOR GAMBLING ON GAMES

Names Not Given, But They Have Been Sent Contracts That They're Not Likely to Sign.

Chicago, Feb. 26.—The flat statement was made here that three major league players of some prominence would not be seen in any championship games this year as the result of a secret investigation that has been carried on for some time, and which had to do with betting.

No names were mentioned, for obvious reasons, but it is understood that contracts were sent to these three players calling for so much less than they received a year ago that there is little or no chance of their signing.

Rumors of this came out at the baseball meeting in Chicago two or three weeks ago, but from what could be learned the matter has now come to a head.

This is the result of a long investigation carried on in absolute secrecy by the major leagues. The magnates will not stand for the publication of these players' names, and probably will deny that the dread "blacklist" has been used, yet it is a fact that the players involved have been quietly notified that their "services no longer are required," which is taken to mean that they have been permanently barred from organized baseball.

It appears that one of these betting ballplayers "squealed" on his partner in crime and furnished so much damaging evidence that the banishment of both men was a foregone conclusion. Incidentally the "informer" talked freely about the betting evil in general, explaining how other players had been approached by professional gamblers, who were eager to "fix" the games.

Two years ago the player, whose "confession" is in the hands of the baseball governors lost a big wager on a certain ball game, refused to pay the money, and was sued by a bookmaker. Before the matter became public property, however, somebody for the best interests of baseball settled the bookmaker's claim. The player, who thus escaped unpleasant notoriety, was allowed to remain in one of the big leagues, but he was kept under close surveillance.

Receiving notice recently that his career in organized baseball was at an end as a result of his connection with certain gamblers, this player consented to "make a clean breast of it," and proceeded to amaze the baseball investigators with a tale that made the withdrawal of another player or two imperative. It is the policy of the magnates to suppress scandal, and in these two cases they wish to avoid publicity. By dropping these players out of the game without setting forth the details the baseball governors believe that their action will serve as a warning to other big leaguers who have been under suspicion for some time.

Perhaps some day the magnates will disclose the names of the banished players, but just at present official confirmation of the story cannot be obtained.

MR. BURNHAM GIVES NOTICE OF MOTION TO BE INTRODUCED IN PARLIAMENT

Desires to Have Jurisdiction of Dominion Defined With Regard to Declaring Legal an Eight Hour Day.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 26.—J. H. Burnham, M. P. for West Peterborough, in expressing his disappointment that Premier Drury had backed up on his educational policy and eight-hour day, stated that he had placed the following resolution on the order paper of the House of Commons at Ottawa: "That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that the extent of the jurisdiction of this Parliament in a national, legal eight-hour working day should be established immediately, subject only to the right of express private contracts."

Speaking on educational matters, Mr. Burnham said that the disease in Ontario in regard to education was philosophic and the ideal had been removed in favor of the scientific and real, with the result that the rising generation is becoming mechanical mentally and showed little regard for fundamental principles.

FIRST CLASS HOCKEY PLAYED LAST NIGHT

MURRAY STREET AND TRINITY TEAMS TIED IN THE LEAGUE FIXTURE

An exhibition of first class hockey was given at the Brock Street Rink when Murray Street team played Trinity Church team in a city league fixture. There was little to choose between either team and both teams had in their line-up some promising material for future O. H. A. teams. Right through the game the scoring was equal and whenever one side succeeded in breaking the tie it was not long before the other team had tied the score again. The goal work of both teams was particularly good and it was this fact which kept the score down to four all at the conclusion of the game.

White, for Murray Street, was easily the fastest skater on the ice and was a dangerous man for the Trinity defence. Time after time he led some superb rushes and was instrumental in much of the scoring for Murray street. The game was clean throughout and it was necessary to impose very few penalties The tie will be played off next Thursday.

The line-up was as follows:

Trinity—Goal, J. Pethick; defence Huffman and S. Pethick; forwards Davis, Thirnbeck and Graham.

Murray Street—— Goal, Webber; defence, White and Rutherford; forwards, Gilcrist, Doughty and Ward

PLACE TEACHERS ON NEW SALARY SCALE

"SOO" SCHOOL BOARD CEASES TO PAY WAR BONUS, ALTERS SCHEDULE.

Sault Ste. Marie, Feb. 26. — The Public School Board of this city, on ceasing to pay a ten per cent. war bonus, has placed its teachers on a new salary scale. Assistants with permanent second or first class certificates are considered to have begun at $1000 or $1050; to this $50 is added for each year's teaching in this city A teacher who has taught ten years (two of them at Sault Ste. Marie) gets the maximum this year for her class, this varying from $1400 for first and second classes to $1600 for junior fourth classes. Should it be necessary to place on the staff in experienced teachers, such start at $900 or $950, according to certificate. The salaries of the present principals were decided with regard to their experience and length of service in the city. The new schedule runs from $1600 for a two-room ward school up to $2600 for a twelve-room school, increasing $100 a year. The supervisor's salary is $3000.

The supervisor of manual training gets $2000, increasing to $2500, and assistants $1050, running up to $1,500. The supervisor of domestic science will rise from $1200 to $1800, assistants $1050 to $1600. School doctors get $1800, and the nurses grade like the assistant teachers, with a maximum of $1400. The music supervisor has a salary of $1800. Sums of $50 and $100 extra are granted for various reasons, such as teaching in "foreign" schools, in outlying ward schools, in rooms containing two grades, in the third and fourth classes, kindergarten and kind. Primary teachers' salaries run from $1050 up to $1500, and their assistants receive $500.

A CIVIC STORY ABOUT A HORSE

SOLD LAST WEEK, FOUND BACK IN OWN STABLE MONDAY.

Ald. Phelan last week reported to his Board of Works that he had sold that department's black horse for $115. The buyer was F. Driscoll, of Otonabee.

On Monday morning, however, the horse was reported to Ald. Phelan as peacefully at home again in his stable at the fire hall.

It appears that Mr. Driscoll bought the horse for Mrs. Driscoll to drive. She wanted an animal of a peaceful and lovable disposition in whose company she would feel safe.

On harnessing the horse up on Sunday, however, he showed a disposition to claw holes in the atmosphere with his fore feet and to sit on his own tail, a feat rather difficult, not to say dangerous, to attempt when in harness. So Mrs. Driscoll concluded that he did not meet her ideas of a driver, and the animal was returned early Monday.

Street Commissioner Evans admits that the horse has at times peculiar action of his own when starting, but if let alone he soon settles down to business.

Last night Ald. Phelan reported the incident to Council and wanted to know what he should do about it. The city has both horse and money.

But Ald. Gordon was in a jocular mood at the time, and neither he nor his colleagues are David Harums in horse deals.

On motion of Ald Phelan and Morrison, the $115 purchase price will be returned to Driscoll.

THE WEATHER

When people ventured out of the house for the first time this morning they discovered a tremendous difference in the temperature. During the daytime yesterday the temperature rose to a point considerably above freezing, and the water was dripping from the eavetroughs and other places where the sun shone. But this morning, and in fact all through the day the temperature remained scarcely above zero. During the night it was reported to be several degrees below zero. Everywhere today collars were upturned and people hurried about their business with no inclination to stand and talk on the street corners. It was too cold for anything like that.

THE PLAYGROUNDS ARE UNDENOMINATIONAL

THE ENTRANCE TO AND USE OF THEM IS NEVER QUESTIONED.

Mrs. Arthur Stevenson, Mrs. W. R Morris and Mr. G. O. Cameron were a deputation to the City Council last night in the interests of the grant of $1,000 to the Playgrounds Association, which was voted for in the affirmative.

Mrs. Morris explained that their budget last year was $2,000, and they hope to get through this year with practically the same. The Board of Education has given $1,000 to the association for equipment and improvements, and $1000 for the salaries of supervisors was hoped for from the city. Last year these salaries had to be met principally by private subscription. The Playgrounds, she said, are purely undenominational and ratepayers generally are interested in the work.

Mr. G. O. Cameron, in support of the grant pointed out that the fact of Mrs. Morris having been elected to the Board of Education on a platform in part for playgrounds, was evidence that the playgrounds project is endorsed by the public generally.

GOVERNMENT WAS DEFEATED

London, Feb. 26.—The Government was defeated in the House of Commons last night on a private member's motion, calling for a large increase in the pensions to all policemen retired prior to April, 1919, in order to meet the increased cost of living. The motion which was strongly supported, was carried by a vote of 123 to 57, although it was opposed by the Government.

The defeat of the Government has no political significance, but it is considered that it will be rather useful to the Government as an illustration of the difficulties of effecting economy.

BRAMPTON HOCKEYISTS IN O.H.A. SEMI-FINALS

Brampton Intermediates qualified to meet Kingston in the O.H.A. semi-finals when they defeated St. Francis at the Ravina Rink last night by 6 to 1. Brampton won the first game by 10 to 6, and therefore won the round by nine goals.

The St. Francis' were confident of their ability to overcome the lead, but they underestimated the strength of the Brampton sextet, and were again decisively beaten.

"THE EXTRA DAY FOR GOD"

George Street Church Will Hold Special Services Next Sunday

For the first time in a generation February 29th falls on a Sunday this year. Owing to this fact the services at the George Street Methodist Church next Sunday will be of a special nature. The keynote of the day's services will be, "The Extra Day for God." The pastor will preach morning and evening and will deliver practical and appropriate messages. The music for the day will also be inspiring.

In connection with the Sunday school, too, a special effort is being put forth to have a record attendance. In what better way could "The Extra Day for God" be spent than by attending the church services or Sunday school? The doors of George Street Church will be opened wide next Sunday to welcome all who feel that they would like to spend the extra day for God in prayer and praise.

EPIDEMIC OF PNEUMONIA

But Situat'on Not Serious as it Was A year Ago.

There is uite an epidemic of pneumonia in the city at the present time and for the last few days the ambulances has been kept busy removing patients to the hospital. In several cases during the past few days fatal results have followed these attacks and many critical cases are reported from private homes. When asked for his opinion as to the above facts Dr. McPherson stated that while there might be more cases of pneumonia at the present time than is usual at this season of the year. it was nothing to compare with the situation which existed last year and could not be called serious.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. Alfred Weir, of Toronto, has come down to attend the funeral of her nephew and niece, Mr. and Mrs Stanley Byers, and is staying with her mother, Mrs. Harry Cox, Rogers street.

Mrs. W. J. MacLean is visiting in the city, the guest of her brother, Mr A. W. Gamble, 321 Roger street.

Miss Mary Hayes of Toronto was a visitor to the city yesterday.

Miss Mary Cairns of Toronto has returned home after visiting friends in the city.

SAYS PRICE OF GAS QUITE OUTLANDISH

INCREASED SINCE NEW GOVERNMENT CAME INTO POWER REMARKS ALD. GORDON

Ald. Phelan, in Council last night raised the question of the recent increase in gas, the price of which he characterized as quite outstandish.

No action ensued.

Ald. Gordon had noticed that the price of gas had taken a jump since the new Ontario Government went into power.

Keep Them Warmer.

Ald. Hamilton said heating conditions in the market hall are poor. He suggested that the City Trust he asked to plan for keeping frequenters of this public place of barter warmer next year. This suggestion will be carried out.

Measurement Of Wood.

Ald. Crowe said that wood is being advertised at so much per load of no specified measurement. He understood that a city by-law called for wood being sold by measure, and wanted that by-law enforced. The way things are going, he asserted prchasers stand a chance of getting one or a dozen wheelbarrows full in the loads advertised for all the restrictions that are enforced. This matter was sent on to the Property Committee.

Sewage Disposal.

The City Solicitor was instructed to apply to the Municipal and Railways Board for an adjournment of three weeks for the second hearing of Otonabee-Monaghan vs. City of Peterborough, re-sewage disposal plant. According to a ruling by the Board last December, the city was to submit plans and a site for a sewage disposal plant by Monday next. But this delay is asked to allow of the Provincial Board of Health approving of the site selected by the city, when they meet two weeks hence.

NINE CTSES OF SMALLPOX

Not Nineteen Keekly as Reported in Toronto Paper.

Dr. McPherson. Medical Health Officer. called attention to a report appearing in the Toronto papers this morning to the effect that ninetten cases of smallpox had been seported in the City of Peterborough in the past week. Hhe pointed out that this statement was absolutely wrong and should have read nine cases. There has not been a week since the present epidemic started when there have been more tran nine cases reported and it is generally less.

LOCAL ANGLICANS EXCEED OBJECTIVE IN THE RECENT FORWARD MOVEMENT

The Amount Aimed at Was $20,000 and Total Received to Date is $20,060 With Belated Subscriptions Yet to Hear From.

Later reports of the Anglican Forward Movement campaign received by Archdeacon Davidson are very gratifying. The canvass is now officially completed, but some of the canvassers have kept their books in order to get in a few names previously missed.

Reports from all parts of the district, which were received this morning, indicated that the Deanery of Peterborough and Northumberland had subscribed $32,000 on an objective of $20,000. The Deanery of Durham and Victoria, including both these counties, overpaid the objective of $24,000 by $7000. Included in this total were: Lindsay, $7000; Millbrook and Cavan, $5124; Emily and Omemee, $2624, and Bethany and Manvers, $1015. It is also reported that West York and West Simcoe carried their objectives.

A report received at 1 o'clock this afternoon by telephone from Mr. J. A. Aylmer, chairman for the Peterborough district, gave the important information that the objective of $20,000 for Peterborough had been exceeded. The total for the city is made up as follows: St. John's, $8,540; All Saints', $5939; St. Luke's, $5581, making a total of $20,000. There are a few belated subscriptions to be added to this, which may considerably increase the total. It was pointed out that the parish of St. George is included in the mission of South Peterborough and Otonabee in which district St. Mark's subscribed $400.

Nearly $200 was handed in at Kent's drug store during yesterday by people who had not been called on, showing the general desire to be in the line-up for the national cause.

CARPET BALLS TOURNEY FOR SONS OF ENGLAND

MEMBERS OF LANSDOWNE PLANNING TO MAKE MEETINGS MORE SOCIABLE

The members of Lansdowne Lodge of the Sons of England are endeavoring to make their meetings more sociable and congenial, and with this end in view, a carpet ball tournament has been arranged. The first round will be played on Friday night of this week and subsequent round will be played on the regular meeting nights, after the regular business has been concluded. Prizes will be awarded the winners of the tournament and it is hoped that a large number of the members will send in their names for the tournament.

During the past few weeks, several new members has been initiated and it is expected that before the close of the winter months a large number will have been added to the membership of the lodge.

The next of the series of social evenings which are planned for this winter will probably be held on Friday, March 19th. A fuller announcement will be made at a later date.

MONS SERVICE STAR FOR CONSTABLE YOUNG

MEMBER OF POLICE FORCE RECEIVES BADGE FOR HIS WORK OVERSEAS

One of the veterans on the local police force received a pleasant surprise this morning. He was Constable Harry Young, who received the 1914-15 star for service overseas. This star is given to all soldiers who were serving in France at any time before December 31, 1915, and was originally known as the Mons Star, a name by which it is commonly known now. Constable Young enlisted as a private in the eight Canadian Mounted Rifle in January, and after a short period of training was transferred to the sixth Mounted Rifles, proceeding to France with that unit during the latter part of 1915. He served in France with that unit until the cessation of hostilities.

FLATTERING ADDRESS PRESENTED TO ESTEEMED RESIDENTS OF CAVAN

(Special to The Review)

Millbrook, Feb. 26.— On Thursday night of last week about seventy of the friends and neighbors of Mr and Mrs. J. W. Brock, presented them with an electric reading lamp and a casserole and an address. Although taken completely by surprise Mr. and Mrs. Brock rose gallantly to the occasion and made suitable replies.

A splendid time was spent in music and games, after which a dainty luncheon was served. The gathering broke up about two o'clock a.m. The folowing is the address:

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Brock:

Your friends and neighbors have gathered together this evening to say farewell. It is always with feeling of regret that we part with our friends. You, Mr. Beck, have been so many years a leader in the community and an official of the church, that you will be greatly missed. With this home have been associated three generations. Your grandfather and father were pillars in the church and active in every good work. You have followed in their footsteps. It is natural for the community to associate you and your family with this homestead.

You, Mrs. Brock, have so heartily co-operated in maintaining the traditions of this home, that you have found a place in the affections and esteem of the community. You have always been active in every good cause in the community and church and we will all feel that a true friend has removed from our midst.

Now that you have decided to remove to another home, we wish to express our regrets at losing your presence and influence. We will always keep fresh in our memory the associations of the past, and pray that God's blessing may rest upon you and your family in your new home. May you be spared to see many more years of usefulness and service

Kindly accept this small token of our esteem and friendship. Your many friends and neighbors wish you every success and happiness and hope you will find congenial associations in your future home.

(Signed on behalf of Zion community.)

OBITUARY

MRS. MARY ELIZABETH MATTHEWS

Pneumonia claimed another victim in the city when Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Matthews, wife of Mr. John Matthews a well-known employee of the Peterborough Lock Works died at an early hour this morning after an illness of but a week's duration. Mrs Matthews, before her marriage, was Miss Whatman. daughter of Mr. John Whatman of Uxbridge, Ontario, and was born at that place 37 years ago She had been a resident of Peterborough for the past ten years coming to this city from Uxbridge.

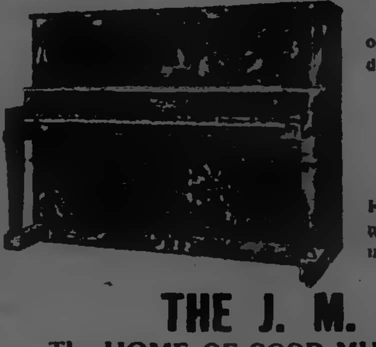
Besides a sorrowing husband, there survive four little children, Roy, Russel, Charles and George, the oldest being 12 years and the youngest 16 months. She is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. F. Hall, 221 George st. city, Mrs. Ainsworth of Winnipeg, and three brothers, Robert Whatman of Campbellford, and William and Russell Whatman of Peterborough An unfortunate fact in connection with her death is that at the present time Mr. Matthews is in the hospital also suffering from pneumonia but his condition his not thought to be serious.

As far as is known at present, the funeral will take place on Saturday from the late residence of the deceased, Hunter street, to Little Lake cemetery.

The Memorial Hospital presented to Listowel by F. W. May, M. P. P., and Mrs. Hay, has been formally opened.

The Belgians who recently arrived in St. Mary's to work in McCreadie's flax mill, are giving the best of satisfaction.

LAST WEEK OF OUR YEAR



We are making a special effort to reach a certain objective before our year ends. To do it we want to sell 200 Pianos in our district during February.

IF YOU INTEND TO BUY SOMETIME, WE WILL MAKE IT WORTH YOUR WHILE TO BUY THIS WEEK

Let us have an opportunity to explain our Special February Year End Proposition to you. We know it will interest you, but if you do not buy it will have done no harm to know our proposition. Terms made easy if required.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS OF THE CITY IN ANNUAL CONVENTION AT ST. PAUL'S

The annual convention of the city Sunday Schools was held yesterday afternoon and evening in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. There was a good attendance of Sunday School workers and a good programme was provided.

Addresses were given by five representatives of the Ontario Educational Council, viz: Rev. Messrs. Dayfoot, Langford, Salpenny, Robertson and Miss Laney. Interesting discussions followed the afternoon sessions.

It was agreed that for 1920 the city association should undertake to extend the work of the Teachers' Training course by combining the Sunday schools of the city into groups for this work. It was also resolved that the association, in co-operation with other religious organizations should undertake a religious survey of the city some time during the present year. These community undertakings should receive the nearby support of all.

The officers elected for 1920 are:

President— Mr. A. Mowat.

First Vice-President— Mr. A. B. Gates.

Second President— Mr. C. E. Sisson

Secretary— Mr. H. Stock.

Treasurer— Mr. A. J. Johnston.

Superintendent of Primary Department— Mrs. E. D. Lewis.

Superintendent Teen-age Department (Boys)— Mrs. R. H. McCarton. (Girls)—

Superintendent Adult Department— Mr. Andrew McKenzie.

Superintendent Home Department— Mr. John Edgar.

Superintendent Teachers' Training Department— Mrs. H. R. H. Kenner.

Superintendent Missionary Department— Mrs. Jos. Keadry.

Superintendent Temperance Department— Mrs. John Speir.

The above named superintendents will act as convenors of committees composed of the superintendents of the departments of the various Sunday schools of the city.

The secretaries of the various Sunday schools of the city are reminded that the treasurer, Mrs. Johnston, has to remit the contributions of the city schools to the Provincial Council before Easter Monday.

The churches of the city united in providing a supper for 100 teachers and workers. Thus brought the Sunday school workers of the city together in a delightful and informal way.

Lyceum Concert At The Conservatory

With the Conservatory of Music hall thronged to the doors, the Metropolitan Singers entertained, at the third Lyceum concert last evening. It is not often the people of this city have the opportunity of listening to such singers as these, and the excellence of last evening's program tendered them one immense harmonious treat.

The combined effort of the artists was very beautiful, at times rising to the sublime, and well meriting the many enchores of an insistent audience. Evincing a knowledge of technique that is apparently faultless, these singers also possess the other undefinable qualities which smite at the heart of an audience and draw forth the fine sympathy of appreciation.

They instanced the beauties of the simple as well as the intricate phases of the vocal art. They sang delicious humor into the most inconsequential numbers, and their interpretation of nature's music, especially as in the song of the Bumble Bee, was such as to transport, in spirit, those present to the clover-meadows of summer.

Each of the entertainers gave generously of their ability—their understanding as true artists—and especially so that gifted tenor, John Lehnhard.

With a voice like the music of a silver bell, Mr. Lehnhard's expressive accents fell like gems upon the ears of his listeners, and when he sang that song, "Absent," the depth of the impression created could only be guaged by the intense stillness which filled the hall, during which a single breath was audible.

Following is the program:

1.—"Praise the Lord" (Maunder).

PIONEER IN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH DELIVERS ADDRESS IN ST. ANDREWS

Rev. Dr. Pringle, Veteran Preacher and Chaplain in the Late War, Tells Interesting Story of His Experiences Here and Overseas.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was well filled last night to hear Rev. Dr. J. Pringle, moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, relate his many experiences and lessons learned in a ministry extending over 40 years.

Dr. Pringle, who holds the highest position it is possible to hold in the Presbyterian Church in Canada, has had a wide experience of church life throughout the country. He has preached from the 49th parallel to the ice-bound shores of Hudson Bay and the barren trail of the Yukon and from the Atlantic Ocean to the coast of British Columbia. In fact he knows the Presbyterian Church in Canada through and through and has grown up with it from its infancy nearly 40 years ago. Presbyterians in Peterborough were therefore afforded an unexcelled opportunity of learning more about the church to which they belong and an opportunity which does not come very often. Dr. Pringle battled with the wilderness of the Yukon for years before the war, building no less than three of the churches he preached in with nothing more than his own ax.

During the war he had varied experiences as a chaplain with the Canadian forces overseas, at first being chaplain of the 16th Battalion and later senior chaplain of the Canadian camp of Seaford, holding the military rank of major at that time. The war record of Dr. Pringle's family is not confined to himself. At the outbreak of the war his son was in the Peace River district and walked 420 miles to Edmonton to enlist. In France he rose rapidly from private to the commissioned rank and was killed during the fur- [illegible] Somme battle in November, [illegible]. Since being elected moderator of the General Assembly Dr. Pringle has been touring the Presbyterian churches in Canada on behalf of the Forward Movement.

The opening services last night were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Rollins, who was also a chaplain overseas, assisted by Rev. R. Pogue of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. In presenting Dr. Pringle to the congregation Mr. Rollins said that there was nothing that he could say that would fittingly introduce him.

His Third Visit.

"This is not my first visit to Peterborough, but my third," said Dr. Pringle at the commencement of his address. His memory of his last visit to this city was enlivened by the vision of an old school friend of his whom he found sitting in the front pew of the church on that occasion. He was glad to be able to return to Peterborough, not as moderator, but as a brother minister. He was not aware until he reached Peterborough this time that there were now three Presbyterian congregations in the city. He was glad that the church had shown such growth in this city.

Dr. Pringle stated that there was no promotion from the pastor's position. They might make him moderator of the General Assembly but they could not raise him any higher than he already was as a pastor. If the General Assembly had done nothing more by promoting him than to give him the opportunity of seeing the church in Canada as he had seen it in the past few months he was satisfied.

He had lived in the manses of the church and it had been his delight. There were no better cooks than ministers' wives and he spoke as one who should know for he had once cooked for a claim gang of 25 men in the Yukon territory. At that time the manager of the gang asked him what he got for preaching and Dr. Pringle replied. "$125 a month," whereupon the gang manager said: "You get $125 for preaching. I will give you $250 to cook." Of course the offer was refused.

Dr. Pringle told of some pleasant experiences while in New Brunswick. He preached in the parish in which Bonar Law was born and where Bonar Law's father had preached for 33 years. He preached on the Forward Movement there to a congregation 95 per cent. of which were men. After the morning service the minister said: "Wait fifteen minutes and I will take you home in my motor. I have to attend a management meeting which is considering giving me the new minimum salary of $1500 instead of $1200." Dr. Pringle went to the back of the church and waited. The minister came out and told him that the committee, all of whom were his best friends, had decided that the church could not afford the increase. When Dr. Pringle returned to the parish a week later he found that the congregation had taken the matter out of the committee's hands and had, by canvassing, increased the permanent annual revenue by $700 and granted the pastor his increase.

Dr. Pringle told of the expansion of the Presbyterian church in the West. He had heard it stated that the church had lost its hold on the people, but it was not so. The church had never had such a hold on them as today. It will be 42 years ago next April since he went out to Manitoba at the request of Dr. Robertson. That was in April, 1882, when Winnipeg was a sea of mud with a population of about 5,000. At that time there were two Presbyterian congregations in Winnipeg. There was Knox Church which was bankrupt, and St. Andrew's congregation, which had no church or hall but which held its services in the court house. There was but one Presbytery for the whole of Manitoba and Vancouver did not exist. Then the province was divided into the Presbyteries of Portage La Prairie and Winnipeg, forming the Grand Synod of Manitoba, but the entire synod did not consist of more than 150 congregations. Today in the province of Saskatchewan there were not less than 832 congregations to whom the gospel was being preached. In the Maritime Provinces the success of the church had been wonderful. Dr. Pringle was able to state that not one congregation in the Maritime Provinces had failed to reach its objective in the Forward Movement Campaign. The progress of the church had been far greater than that of the railways or banks and its posts now stretched hundreds of miles beyond the railways in the West. What he had seen of the church had made him an optimist in considering the future.

Forward Movement Not New.

Dr. Pringle stated that the Forward Movement of the church was not new. The church had always been moving forward but what was wanted now was a lengthening of the stride and an acceleration of the step. The Movement did not rise from the offices in Toronto, but got its impulse from the tragedy of the war.

He had preached in all sorts of churches in the Old Country and he had come to the conclusion that all the great leaders of England combined could never have driven the country to war for anything but righteousness. The country would not have followed them. Dr. Pringle's own son, just ten days before he was killed, wrote saying: "Dad, if anything happens to me don't say that I died for the Empire. Say I died for what I thought was right."

Two generations hence the war would be forgotten or would be read in books only, but the tragedy of Calvary was a living thing after a lapse of nineteen centuries. The Forward Movement could not end until it had reached its objective which was the exaltation of Christ on earth. In the Forward Movement two things were needed. The first was a new vision of Christ and the second was the vision that Christ had of the world's needs.

Dr. Pringle's address was replete with stories of his experiences both in the Yukon and overseas. He told of a service held behind Ploegstaart in Belgium Nov., 1915, when he was chaplain of the 16th Battalion. The rain was pouring down and the service was in the open and yet two companies of the 14th Battalion came over voluntarily for the service. After the service a communion table was made in a barn with two kitchen chairs and a small barn door.

Speaking of foreign missions, Dr. Pringle said that China and Japan were nearer to Ontario today than Nova Scotia was 25 years ago and unless we Christianized those countries they would soon paganize us.

Financial Review For The Week

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 28. — Railroad shares provided the only encouraging features of the week in the securities market, other issues continuing to react as signs of tighter credits assumed more definite form. Call money fluctuated between 10 and 15 per cent. against the ruling rate of six per cent. in the preceding fortnight, and time money was increasingly scarce in face of the higher bids. Further notice of restricted monetary conditions was given by the Federal Reserve Board, accompanied by a moderate advance of local rates for short time accommodations based on treasury certificates of indebtedness. Much of the unsettlement in the stock market was caused by very unfavorable annual statements of earnings submitted by the Republic Iron and the Lackawana Steel Companies. In trade circles, however, these exhibits were not accepted as sympathetic of existing conditions in industry.

The return of the railroads to private operation next week furnished the basis for an advance of three to ten points in that group, more substantial gains being made by the shares of so-called reorganized properties. Wall Street credits west and southwest, with a heavy accumulation of these stocks whose speculative possibilities entered largely into their strength and activity. Opinion respecting the merits of the railroad bill continues widely divergent.

VETERANS PURCHASE SITE

Acquire Corner Lot From Indians For Memorial Hall

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas, Feb. 28.—For a nominal sum of a few dollars, the Great War Veterans' Association, The Pas branch have been given the highest priced corner lot in town by the Cree Indians to be used for the erection of a memorial building. The lot is controlled by the Indian Department who fixed a nominal price, in order to comply with the regulations. The lot is valued at $15,000. The Indians in council passed a resolution asking the department to transfer this lot to the veterans, that it might serve as a memorial to the dead and living of both races from the northland. It is estimated that 200 Cree Indians served in the Canadian forces from this part of Manitoba, many of whom lie buried in France, and others returned maimed and crippled for life.

Women of Winnipeg Decide to Raise That Amount.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28.—The Young Women's Christian Association has announced that a campaign will be started for the raising of $100,000 to meet the enormously increasing demands upon the association. This is the first campaign put on exclusively for the "Y" since the initial one at the time of the building of the institution.

SAYS PERSHING APED STYLES OF ENGLISH

AMERICAN CONGRESS TAKES UP QUESTION OF GENERAL'S UNIFORM IN EUROPE

Washington, Feb. 26. — The cut of Gen. Pershing's coat and trousers was debated in the House. He and other American army officers were charged by Rep. Connally (Dem.), Texas, with having "aped" European fashions in their uniforms and in carrying canes.

"Gen. Pershing's coat is split up the back and his trousers bagged like the English uniform," said Mr. Connally.

"He kept his American head," Rep. Wingo (Dem.), Arkansas, interjected, "but I, too, noticed that his tail was very English."

Deploring the adoption of foreign fashions, Rep. Connally moved to abolish the title of under-secretary of state and substitute the former title of counsellor, in the Executive Appropriation Bill, but the motion was defeated, 39-21.

Rep. Greene (Rep.), Massachusetts, referred to former Secretary Lansing's retirement from the cabinet.

"What's in a name?" Mr. Greene asked. "A secretary of state by any name would have a row with the administration.

When the Republicans cheered, Rep. Connally brought a reply salvo from the Democrats by retorting that the Republicans applauded internal difficulties of the Administration.

TIME FOR LOANS EXTENDED

Eligible Men Have Until April 30th to Apply.

The time has been extended in which eligible disabled ex-service men may apply for loans in order to purchase tools and equipment, or to resume interrupted training and educational courses.

Men not now on the strength of the Department of Soldiers' Civil re-Establishment and who are eligible for such assistance, have until April 30 next in which to wake application.

Men now on the strength of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment for training or treatment, and who may eligible for loans, have a period of two months after completion of their courses or discharge from treatment in which to apply.

Loans up to $500, without interest are available for those men who have satisfactorily completed a re-training course with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment and who wish to start in business in line with the training they have received and who are unable to do without such assistance.

Loans of $500, free of interest, may also be granted to those with a war disability who are not eligible for or who have not had, vocational re-training under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, and whose pre-war training or education has been substantially interrupted by war service, and who are in need of such assistance for the purpose of continuing in training or education.

HORSES FOR ONTARIO

Undersized Animals May be Brought Here From West.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—That there is a real market in Ontario for the undersized horses of the Alberta ranches is the good word brought by Walter Harland Smith, manager of the horse department of the Union Stock yards, Toronto, who is in the West looking into possible supply. It is the horse under 1,250 pounds, which is so common on the plains of this province and which are so undesirable from a breeding standpoint, that is wanted.

MOTOR BUSSES IN WINNIPEG

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28—Motor busses will be the prevailing system of transportation in Winnipeg within seven years, J. G. Glassco, manager of the city light and power department predicts. He said he believed the present street car system will be obsolete by that time and that rails would be removed from the streets.

SERIOUS INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM JAPAN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 28.—The Daily Telegraph says: "Serious information was received here Friday night regarding the situation in Japan." No details are given by the newspaper.

TO LICENSE AERODROMES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28.—Municipalities in Manitoba are to be given the power under projected amendments to the Municipal Act, to license and regulate aerodromes and to define the areas in which they can be erected or prevent their erection.

NEW RAILWAY MAY TAP RICH MINERAL WEALTH

COMPLETION OF HUDSON BAY LINE EXPECTED TO OPEN OTHER INDUSTRIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas, Man., Feb. 28.—To tap the rich fisheries in Hudson Bay, which Professor Prince, Dominion commissioner of fisheries, describes as more valuable then the Pacific fisheries at Prince Rupert, and to give access to the mineral deposits reported on both sides of the Bay, are leading considerations put forward for the immediate completion of the Hudson Bay railway. Professor J. B. Tyrrell believes that when the railway reaches the Bay it will cause a rush of mining men and prospectors to search every nook and corner of the huge inland sea for the mineral wealth reported upon by various members of the geological department of Canada. Tyrrell himself made one report concerning the prospects of finding mineral on the shores of the bay, and he pointed out that he expressed no fears as to the outcome of an organized search by trained field men.

Originally projected as a grain carrying route, and a shorter one to Europe, the Hudson Bay railway has now devolved itself into a colonization road to tap resources hitherto conjectured at, but of which very little definite information was possessed. Only recently a report was issued describing the vast pulp wood areas south of the railway at a point near Kettle Rapids, and a second area 15 miles off the railway on the Grassy River. These two areas combined with what is already known of lesser pulp areas and the total known pulp wood areas tributary to the railway may contain one hundred million cords. The railway was projected in 1911 and work was pushed until the fall of 1917 when war conditions brought further work to a standstill. The grade, however, was fully completed from The Pas to Port Nelson on Hudson Bay, a distance of 424 miles, and the steel laid for 332 miles, leaving a balance of 92 miles upon which to lay steel. Nothing has been done upon the railway since 1917, and unless work is resumed this year, it is claimed the road bed will suffer great deterioration and create an expense of ten million dollars to repair the damage.

LANDS LYING IDLE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—Twenty million acres of good arable land are at present lying idle along the railway lines in the four western provinces, declared Mayor M. A. Brown, Medicine Hat, before the special committee appointed by the Alberta Industrial Development Association.

TO RAISE OR NOT RAISE THE BARBER'S PRICES

HAT IMPORTANT QUESTION HAS NOT YET BEEN SETTLED MEN SAY

The predicted increase in prices which was to have been made by the local barbers on Monday next is not as yet an accomplished fact. There seems to be some divergence of opinion among the hair-cutters as to the advisability of the increase at the present time and these is just a possibilty that it will fall through for the time being. Earlier hours of closing are also under contemplation and it is this fact which is holding up negotiations. The master barbers claim that if the shops are to close at seven o'clock as is suggested it would be necessary for the barbers to work right through till that time without supper and journeymen barbers are not quite sure whether they want to do that or not. In any case nothing definite will be known until Monday.

A local barber pointed out today that these suggested changes, if carried out would merely be bringing the Peterborough shops up to the level of those in other cities. In Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford and most other cities 50 cents has been charged for a hair-cut for some time past and 20 cents for a shave. The hours in these cities have also been shorter than here and in some cases Wednesday afternoon holiday is observed all the year round and the shops close early on Saturday nights.

It was also pointed out that barbers' prices have been raised less than any other prices during the war, and they were at the present time far out of proportion to the increased cost of living.

BRITISH PAPERS HOLD VARIETY OF OPINIONS ON NEW IRISH BILL

Times Greet it With Faint Terms of Praise While Unionist Journals Condemn it Without Reservation—"A Weakling With a Bad Family History".

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 28.—The press reception of the Home Rule Bill is rather mixed but Times recognizes the Bill as based upon sound principles within limits, but says that it conveys the impression that the framers had not the full courage of their convictions.

The Telegraph, Unionist, says nothing editorially and the Morning Post declares that never since the compilation of the Athanasian creed has there been so ingenious a document. It prophesies that Ireland will remain hostile to the Bill and will not give these islands any peace. It will only transfer the old conflict to a new battlefield.

The Daily Chronicle, Liberal, approves of the Bill and thinks that the financial terms are extremely generous and regards as most vital that part of the measure which enables the two Parliaments to come together at any time by agreement.

The Daily Mail, which has been a severe critic of the Government's Irish Policy, thinks the Bill good, but not good enough as regards dominion p[illegible]s for the Irish Parliaments.

GENERAL RAILWAY STRIKE HAS BEEN CALLED BY FRENCH UNIONS

Strong Military Forces are Guarding Tracks Inside Limits of Paris and Chambers of Deputies Passes Special Act to Meet New Conditions

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 28.—Orders for a general railroad strike have been issued to the National Federation of railroad men. Reports were current last night that this action had been taken, but confirmation could not be obtained until late this afternoon. A Cabinet meeting has been called for seven o'clock tonight. Operating conditions on the Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean lines and other roads affected by the walk out of employees seemed to be slightly improved last night. Traffic was shown to have increased during the twenty-four hours closing at midnight and it was believed that mobilization orders sent to the men of the Paris Yyons and Mediterranean and State roads would bring a sufficient force to carry on normal traffic

Strong military forces a gerrauna

Stong military forces are guarding tracks inside the city limits of Paris and law authorizing the requisitioning of automobiles, motor trucks and airplanes in case of interruption of railroad traffic was passed last night by the Chamber of Deputies.

The action taken it is claimed by the strike leaders in the [illegible] order issued, was owing to an attack by the Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean Company on the exercise of union rights.

The order advises the preservation of calmness throughout the strike.

LAWYERS GUESTS OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS

ANNUAL DINNER TO BE HELD AT EMPRESS NEXT TUESDAY EVENING

The members of the Peterborough Law Association are to be the guests of the Central Ontario Life Underwriter's Association at their meeting and dinner next Tuesday evening, at the Empress Hotel.

Invitations have been issued to the lawyers in town and His Honor Judge Huycke will be one of the speakers of the evening.

The occasion is the annual visit of the President of the Life Underwriters Association of Canada, who this year is Mr. E. S. Miller of the Imperial Life Assurance Company, Regina. It is expected that Mr. Geo. H. Hunt the Honorary Secretary of the parent body and Mr. J. H. Castle Graham General Secretary of the Association will be present.

FEDERAL AUTHORITY IS SUPREME OVER STATES

UNCLE SAM WILL ALLOW NO LOCAL TINKERING WITH PROHIBITION LAW

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 28.— All persons found violating the Federal Prohibition Enforcement Act will be proceeded against to the "limit of the law," irrespective of any state statute legalizing the sale of liquors, it was announced today by Commissioner Roper of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

BRITAIN'S OFFER TO SOVIET RUSSIA AS PEACE TERMS

CONDITION ON WHICH TRADE WITH THAT COUNTRY WILL BE RESUMED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Buenos Aires, Feb. 28. — What purports to be the basis of Great Britain's proposals to the Russian Soviet Government, which James O'Grady, British representatives at Copenhagen, transmitted to Maxim Litvinoff, are contained in a Rome despatch as follows: "Tacit recognition of Maximalist political regime, non-interference by Great Britain with respect to the internal condition of those countries separated from former Russian rule in the West, namely, Finland, Esthonia, Lithuania, Ukrainia and Poland, non-interference by Great Britain in Siberian affairs, the demobilization of the Red army, promise by Bolsheviki to recognize the independence of the Meridional republics, especially Georgia, non-interference by Russia with territories on the frontiers of Georgia and Persia, payment in gold for foods exported or imported between Russia and Great Britain, regime of commercial equality for Russia and Great Britain in autonomous states on the western front."

TEACHERS GET INCREASE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Sask., Feb. 28.—The Collegiate Institute Board has sanctioned a general increase in teachers' salaries of 20 per cent. This move follows upon the recent action of the board in voting a substantial high cost of living bonus to the teachers to tide them over this term.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1920.

PETERBOROUGH'S BIG CONVENTION.

A DELEGATION from the G. W. V. A. waited on the City Council and asked for a grant to help defray the expense of taking care of the five to six hundred delegates who are expected to attend the Provincial Convention of the organization to be held in this city next month. The delegation asked for a reasonable amount and secured it without hesitation on the part of the aldermen. The usual custom of deputations asking for three or four times what it is hoped will be allowed was not followed in this case. The city officials are mainly responsible for the holding of the convention in this city, as an invitation was formally extended and promises made when the choice of a meeting place for 1920 was decided a year ago.

The $1000 which the Council has granted for the purpose will go but a short way in providing entertainment for the number of visitors who will be here. However, the matter of entertainment is not the main question. What is giving the committee of arrangement real concern these days is the matter of finding board and lodging accommodation for these visitors. The hotels cannot possibly take care of more than one-tenth of the number expected, and places for the remainder must be found in private houses.

The veterans are not coming here to be entertained and provided for at public expense, nor are they looking for private charity. Every man will be willing and able to pay his way. Maintaining them for the four days which they will be here is a purely business proposition. To find temporary homes for five hundred strangers should not be a heavy task for a city the size of Peterborough, even if the task calls for a change in the domestic arrangements of a number of families. If there is not sufficient room available in private residences, every club room in the city should be furnished with cots and turned into temporary sleeping quarters for the veterans. The duty which confronts the citizens in this respect can easily be discharged. All that is needed is something like concerted action. If every one does his part according to his ability every difficulty will be overcome. It would never do for the city to fall now in the matter of caring for visitors who come here on the strength of the invitation that was both official and fraternal.

Any citizen willing to lodge one or more of the visitors is asked to send a notice to that effect to Secretary Whatley at the G. W. V. A. hall on Murray street.

THIS SEASONABLE WEATHER.

THE OLDEST INHABITANT may be able to recall numerous occasions in the past when the thermometer registered a lower temperature than has been reached any time this winter, but it will tax the memory of most men to give the date of a season during which the mercury so consistently maintained a low altitude. The cold has been steady since before the holidays. Even the January thaw failed to materialise, this alone constituting an exception in the records of weather.

But the people, much as they may be inconvenienced by the cold, should bear this particular burden patiently. The weather is at least seasonable. January and Febufrary are the months when a low temperature is to be looked for. Better a winter in season, better normal weather conditions at the proper time, than a low mercury at the time of year when heat is required to promote vegetation.

One abnormal season follows another. A long period of excessive drought is invariably followed by one in which the rainfall is above the average, and vice versa. Nature must by hook or by crook strike a balance, and the law of compensation never fails. Better a winter of low temperature than a belated spring.

Th earth is frozen to the depth of several feet. Nature is thus, as every farmer will tell you, preparing it for the work of production. The winter wheat and the meadows are secure under their whte blanket coverng. All conditions portend an early spring and a prosperous year on the farms, where prosperity means good timer for all classes in the community. Spring is on the way. Every revolution of the earth brings it a pace nearer, and the people should comfort themselves with the hope that better and brighter days are immediatly ahead of them.

ONE WAY TO STRANGLE BOLSHEVISM.

THE DOMINION PARLIAMENT at the session one year ago voted the sum of ten million dollars to support technical education in Canada, the amount to be distributed, under certain well defined conditions, among the provinces according to population. Prof. L. W. McGill, Director of Technical Education for the Dominion, is charged with the duty of seeing after the division of this money.

At a luncheon given by the Canadian Manufacturers' Associaiton in the King Edward Hotel in Toronto the other day, at which Peterborough was represented by W. R. Breyfogle, B. F. Ackerman and Vincent Eastwood, Prof. Gill was the main speaker and his subject was Technical Education. The extension of that system of instruction was one of his suggestions for a reduction of the high cost of living, increasing production as it certainly would. Another of his ideas was that technical education would prevent the spread of Bolshevism in Canada.

Prof. Gill is not alone in this position. Sociologists and students of political economy agree with him. Mr. Breyfogle, in his address to the members of the Board of Trade the other night, made practically the same contention.

There is little danger of the spread of Bolshevism in a community where all the citizens are prosperous. Contentment follows prosperity, and the latter is to be achieved only in efficiency in the various vocations of the people. Efficiency is achieved to the full only by actual working experience, but a long start can be secured by training in a technical school. Years of shifting and uncertainty can be saved in the same way. When the boy is ready to start out in the battle of life, he knows for what calling he has been designed by Nature, and has made some progress in acquiring a working knowledge of the duties he will be called upon to perform. Technical training is good for employer and employe alike, saving both as it does from vexatious delay in getting the latter broken in to his work. So many of the present ventures result in failure. The lack of anything like a practical education has been painfully apparent in Ontario for years. The remedy is within easy reach of the people. Give the boy who is to follow a trade the same chance to prepare for his life work as is given the doctor, the lawyer, the minister, or the civil engineer.

Peterborough can secure a share of the Federal grant by establishing a technical school. The greater the outlay authorized by the voters, the larger the amount that will be received from the Dominion treasury.

THE FIRST LENTEN SEASON.

THE OBSERVANCE of the forty days of Lent by fasting and other forms of self-denial has the most illustrious of all precedents. The greaterst Man the world has ever produced, the most outstanding character in sacred or profane history established that form of spiritual life. At the outset of His public career, by way of preapration for His life work, He retired to the wilderness and remained in solitude for the period which so many of His followers observe with religious devotion down to the present day.

It is not revealed to man what really occurred during those forty days in the wilderness, but the belief is justified that they were spent in study and prayer. In that vast solitude there was developed the most lovable nature, the strongest character ,the purest sentiments that the world has ever known. Returning to the world, the Nazarene was ready to take up the work that He was sent to perform. He was able to resist all the forces of evil, to silence the sophistries of Satan. The flowery paths of ease and popular fame beckoned Him. His was the opportunity to use His Divine power to advance His own personal ends. By swerving from the strict line of duty He could have won the worship of the multitude. But He chose the rocky road of sacrifice, undismayed by the knowledge that was surely His—that that road led to Calvary.

In the quiet and calmness of the wilderness it is likely that the Nazarene prepared that matchless discourse, the Sermon on the Mount, and surely that triumph alone was worth the sacrifice. For over two thousand years that sermon has stood as the model of pulpit oratory, as the rule of all human conduct, the foundation of the Christian faith. In humble adoration the followers of the Nazarene in this matter attempt to follow in His footsteps. The effort is not likely to be lost even if they fall far short of His illustrious achievement. A world sated with pleasure may well pause for a few brief weeks and turn its thoughts upon higher things.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

BRYAN ON THE PAY ROLL.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

The interesting fact is disclosed that William Jenning's Bryan is and has long been on the payroll of the Anti-Saloon League. In the same way some of our Canadian prohibitionists have reason to know that prohibition pays.

POISON ALL ROUND.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

Facility in phrase-making is sometimes a dangerous thing. There is that man Ivens, for instance, on trial at Winnipeg. He was inspired a short time ago to speak of "a poisoned judge, a poisoned jury and a poisoned sentence," and now in Winnipeg they speak of himself as "Poison Ivy."

SAVE GREATER LOSS.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The hue and cry against the sale of the former German ships is based upon a misconception of the situation or a deliberate misrepresentation of it. The shipping board must sell the ships below the value of the vessels under normal conditions ,but such loss will be insignificant compared with the cumulative cost of continued government operation.

WRITERS OF SOME FAMOUS BOOKS

(By F. M. D.)

One of the most neglected sections in the Library is that devoted to Biography. It is hard to understand why this should be so, save for the possible reason that the public, even after nine years of constant access to the shelves, have been unable to allocate to it its proper place in and value as Literature. It is all the more strange because there are very few among us who do not enjoy hearing gossip about our neighbours insignificant as we and they are. Putting it on the lowest possible level therefore, it would be strange indeed if we could not find much that is toothsome and interesting in a gossipy way about those who in their own day and generation grew to be famous in the varied activities of life. But there are far higher considerations than this why Biography should be made a study of by all who read the history of their country and are interested in the men and women who have helped to keep it in the van of the world's progress.

There are few amongst us, I take it, who on reading a book, do not make a mental picture o the man or woman who wrote it. We long to know something of the personality of the individual. Addison and Charles Lamb wrote some of the most pleasing essays in the language. Their names are famous and yet there are comparatively few who could give one even the barest outlines of their lives. Addison was, by general consent, one of the most charming men of his time. He was far from being a great speaker, but men like Swift, and Steele, Young and Pope, and women like Lady Mary Wortley Montague, have all borne witness to his charm. His career lay somewhat along the orthodox lines of these days. He travelled in Europe, was a member of the noted Whig Club, the Kit-Cat Club, and through its means obtained preferment in the government. The Spectator made him famous. There is a very good article on him in the Dictionary of National Biography. Lamb, whose Essays of Elia have never been equalled for the geniality of their humor, had what most people would consider a tragically unhappy life. A tendency to insanity, an incurable stutter, long years of poverty, the care of a sister who in a temporary frenzy stabbed her mother to death, were enough to make the life of anyone a burden. But Lamb rose superior to all his troubles. He made and kept troops of friends, who loved him for his geniality, for his loyalty and for his genius. When you read about him in the Dictionary of National Biography you will feel that the man who could have such staunch supporters as Colridge, Wordsworth, Southey and Talfourd, was a man of worth indeed. Many are puzzled as to the origin of the title of his best known work the Essays of Elia. It was appended to his first article in the London Magazine. Lamb, on being asked for a signature for it, on the spur of the moment appended the name of an obscure clerk who had once been a member of the staff of the South Sea House.

These names have just been mentioned casually, but it takes only a glance along the shelves devoted to Biography to see what a wealth of valuable material the Public Library possesses. Even a hasty dip into this or that book reveals all sorts of interesting details. There are lives of several of whom one may frankly confess, he had never heard, but an introduction to whose career is a revelation and a delight. Penned in between a portly life of Lord Acton and one of Louis Agassiz, is a biography of modest dimensions entitled "Will Adams." Curiosity as to whether there was any connection between the life of this particular Adams and the notable gentleman who unaided and alone defeated Napoleon at the battle of Waterloo, led me to take down the book and I found that it was a record of the life of the first Englishman who entered Japan and who was the means of establishing friendly relations between the potentate of that country and the King of England. The events narrated occurred in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and read like a novel.

It is very doubtful if anyone living in Peterborough would be able to tell anything about James P. Beckwourth. He was the forerunner of men of the type of Buffalo Bill, and was a famous mountaineer, scout, and pioneer, who became chief of the Crow Indians. His life covers the time when the West was a wild west indeed, for he was born in 1798. The book abounds in tales of thrilling deeds and is graced with a preface by Charles Godfrey Leland, the author of the famous Hans Breitmann ballads.

The life of Mrs. Bishop, née Isabella Bird, is that of one of the four best known lady travellers of the past century, the others being Miss North, Miss Kingsley and Miss Gordon Cumming. Mrs. Bishop faced her adventures single-handed, traversing the waste places of the East with the most determined courage. Her Life is excellent reading, for it gives us a splendid insight into conditions in Korea and China at the time of which she wrote. The book is profusely illustrated with photographs.

Mrs. Bishop wrote extensively on conditions in the countries which she visited. There are a number of her books in the library. Her philanthropic interests showed themselves in the many lectures she delivered before the Geographical and other societies. She was honored by being the first lady Fellow elected to membership in the Royal Geographical Society.

The Reminiscences of Mark Boyd, one of the early promoters of colonization in Australia and New Zealand, is an interesting book, for it gives many entertaining anecdotes of people of whom too little has been handed down in print.

These three or four names have been taken from two shelves of the biographical section and as there are no less than forty-five shelves devoted to this one class of literature it can easily be seen how much of interest awaits the man or woman who has a liking for this sort of reading. Purposely, in most instances, the least known lives have been given, to show how varied an assortment the library possesses. The reader may be fairly sure of getting what he wants in the way of biography concerning those whose names have become famous at some period or another of the world's history.

"Old Madhouse," by Wm. DeMorgan.

This is a posthumous story by DeMorgan, the last chapter being supplied by Mrs. DeMorgan. It is a tale of mystery, which would probably have caused as much controversy as Edwin Drood had it not been for Mrs. DeMorgan's explanatory chapter. It is the tale of the mysterious disappearance of a clergyman in an empty house known as the "Old Madhouse." The story shows a great deal of subtlety and though diffuse is full of freshness and charm.

"Sonia Married," Stephen McKenna.

Readers of Sonia will possibly be disappointed in reading "Sonia Married." It is one of those books that however cleverly the author may attempt to make a complete and separate novel of it would be incomprehensible in parts if acquaintance had not been first made with the earlier work. It contains several dramatic scenes and is an interesting but somewhat depressing book. As the Springfield Republican says: "It borders dangerously on exaggeration and melodrama."

"Small-Talk at Wreyland," Cecil Torr.

This is not a novel. It is simply a record of talks with intimate friends in a small hamlet in Devonshire. One writer says it is as typically English as a Christmas pudding. It is packed with wisdom and information. Another writer remarks that "it is a book to be commended, without hesitation or reserve, to every lover of old England."

To everyone who in reverie dreams of old days by the quiet ingle-nook, listening to reminiscences by one's elders, this book is to be commended. It breathes the very spirit of home life and home confidences.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

For almost five years the Hon. Robert Lansing was President Wilson's Foreign Minister, for the equivalent of that post in the United States Cabinet is that of Secretary of State, which Mr. Lansing filled from June 23rd, 1915, until a few days ago, when he resigned at the request of the President. It seems that ever since the Paris Peace Conference the relations between the President and his Secretary of State had not been cordial, and the two men had not been pulling together.

Mr. Lansing was born at Watertown, N. Y., on October 17, 1864. His higher education was received at Amherst College and Princeton University, Admitted to the bar in 1889, he at once began the practice of his profession and within a few years was employed in several cases of an international character, such as the Behring Sea Arbitration and the Alaskan Boundary dispute. For a year before becoming Secretary of State he was counsel to the Department, so that he had to do with the foreign relations of the United States throughout the whole course of the war.

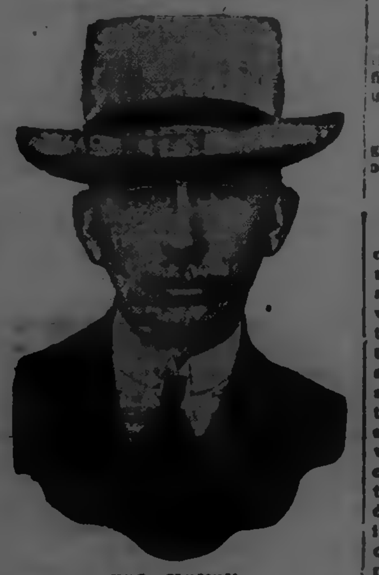
Colonel House, Who Was Wilson's Man of Mystery, Is No Longer Consulted

◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆◆

IN diplomatic and political circles in Washington there has been a lot of speculation as to what has happened to Col. House, 'the man behind the throne,' and the unofficial statesman who is popularly supposed to direct the affairs of the United States. It is rumored that he has lost favor with President Wilson, and that the extraordinary public career of this formerly obscure Texas business man is drawing to a close. An American writer, who keeps in close touch with national events, says: "Careful observers of international and domestic political events base their belief partly on the fact that Col. House has not seen the President since his return from Paris, where he played such an important part in the Peace Conference, nor has he seen the Secretary of State. It is true that both Mr. Wilson and Col. House have been ill, but the colonel has for some weeks been able to attend to business, and he has not been in Washington, nor has he been summoned by the President. There has been no open quarrel between Mr. Wilson and Col. House, but it has been the President's custom quietly to eliminate persons who have lost his confidence. For some time past, it is stated, Col. House has been quite ignorant of Mr. Wilson's plans. Some Government officials think that when the President has sufficiently recovered his health he will summon his former adviser and restore him to the very great favor he enjoyed for seven years, which it is asserted he has now lost because of acts of excessive authority which have greatly embarrassed the President."



COL. HOUSE.

The tendency of President Wilson to quarrel bitterly with his former friends was shown when he recently ejected Secretary of State Lansing from his Cabinet in a manner most humiliating to the man who used to help Wilson frame his famous notes. The quarrel with House, if it has taken place, was not so spectacular, but the Texas colonel appears to have passed into oblivion nevertheless.

The Journey of Hsuan-Tsang.

Sir Aurel Stein has traversed the Gobi by the desert way which serves as the Chinese high road connecting Kan-su with Hsin-chiang. It is the old "Northern Route" which ever since 73 A.D. has been China's chief means of access to her central Asian dominions. It is the way along which Hsuan-tsang, the Chinese sage and pilgrim, traveled in the second quarter of the seventh century A.D., passing through the guarded marches of the northwest border of China to reach those "western regions" on his quest for knowledge. Sir Aurel Stein states in the Geographical Journal for December that in the course of his party's survey, they were able to verify the accuracy of the precise details of the Chinese pilgrim's story, as found in his "Life," by the agreement they showed with the topographical details which the survey revealed. The incident of Hsuan-tsang's attempt to find the "Spring of the Wild Horses," and of his final resolute resolve, in order to recover his way, to turn to the northwest, is shown by Sir Aurel to have been the best course he could have adopted, though one needing extreme courage prompted by the religious fervor of the great pilgrim. It was the wisest course to follow, provided he knew how to keep his feet stedfastly northwest. In doing this he was aided by that "instinct of the compass," which his "Hsi-yu-chi" shows he possessed in a strong degree, and which, Sir Aurel adds, is prevalent among Chinese of whatever condition.

A Good Reason.

The teacher had been explaining fractions to her class. When she had discussed the subject at length, wishing to see how much light had been shed, she inquired: "Now, Bobby, which would you rather have, one apple or two halves?" The little chap promptly replied: "Two halves." "Oh, Bobby," exclaimed the young woman, a little disappointedly, 'why would you prefer two halves?" "Because then I could see if it was bad inside."

Meaning of the Green Bough.

The custom of placing a green bough on the roof of a newly built house is not confined to Germany, but was adopted by the French Canadians who brought it with them from Brittany. The custom originated from the superstition prevalent centuries ago that every tree is inhabited by a spirit; consequently it was believed that every time a tree was felled as other spirit was dispossessed, and this was supposed to cause some bitterness on his part against society. Rather than risk having these homeless and disgruntled spirits vent their ill feeling upon the houses under construction or upon the builders a branch was planted on the highest part of the house for their occupancy. They were then supposed to be mollified, and if they remained so until the roof was put on any evil design contemplated would prove harmless, for the spell would be broken.

Brazil Found by Accident.

Amerigo Vespucci made the first map of Brazil, although only of the coast line, and it was the publication of this map that led to the fixing of the name of the new world. Brazil itself was revealed to Europeans in 1500 by an accident—the drifting out of its course of a Portuguese expedition. The country indirectly owes its modern advancement to Napoleon. To escape from the conqueror King John of Portugal fled to his dominions in America and, believing Portugal lost to the royal family, set about putting Brazil upon a civilized basis by throwing open its ports to the whole world.

Irish Wit.

At a luncheon a bishop, resident in the west of England, told the following story illustrative of the native wit of the Irishman: Two English tourists, in the hope of "taking a rise" out of Pat, who was leaning over a gate, got into conversation with him. As they parted they remarked, "Have you heard, Pat, that the devil is dead?" This news excited no comment, but the tourists had not proceeded far when they were called back and solemnly presented each with a penny. On inquiring the cause of this unexpected generosity they were met with the answer: "It's the custhom of the counthry. We always help the orphans."

"WAACS" Demobilized.

Queen Mary's Army Auxiliary Corps, known as the "Waacs," the khaki-clad army of intrepid women who served in various capacities at the front during the war, ceased to exist as a military organization with the ending of the year. The Waacs performed a notable service for their flag and not a few of them were killed or wounded in service.

When King George of England was shooting in Scotland recently Queen Mary led the life of a private individual, looking up old friends, paying private calls and making various alterations in and around Buckingham Palace.

THE YAQUIS' REVENGE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, [illegible] by Associated Literary Press.

Every American of us at the silver mines had turned out with the Mexican soldiery to help drive the Yaquis back to their hiding place in the mountains. It was a case of self preservation with us. When the Yaqui was on a raid he made no difference between the property or scalp of an American and a Mexican. He owned the land before Cortez appeared. The process of weeding him out is still going on.

And so when the news came in that the Yaquis had taken the warpath and killed or driven off the men at the Soltuito mine above us we turned out with the 300 soldiers sent up to meet the war party and drive it back.

For three days we fought the Yaquis before we got them on the retreat. It was not enough, however, that we had saved the big mines and 500 almost defenseless people. Orders came to the colonel to push on after the retreating Indians and hold them up if possible and exterminate them. We went with them to see the thing through and because they had need of our rifles and of our sharpshooting. Once among the mountains the soldiers could no longer move in a body. There was constant fighting, but the Indians were continually forced back. By and by they had reached the women and children and their stronghold, and the Mexican colonel rubbed his hands and laughed and said:

"We have got them penned up at last, and not one shall escape. It is the best show we have had for half a century to exterminate them."

The stronghold of the Indians was a series of rifts and caves in the face of the mountain. There was but one path leading to it. That wound over a number of ridges and then dipped down into a basin which had a circumference of about half a mile. The colonel's plan was to advance the whole force into this basin when night fell, and, taking cover behind the bowlders lying thickly beneath the caves, we should be ready at daylight to begin the work of extermination. While a portion of the troopers kept up a fire to prevent the Yaquis from leaving their caves another portion would collect fuel and smoke them to death. We were not averse to dealing the Indians a hard blow and one to be remembered, but we did not go in for the extermination of a thousand souls at once, more than half of whom were women and children.

"Gentlemen, you are not under my command," said the colonel as he rubbed his hands and smiled, "and you will therefore decide for yourselves. When darkness comes my command will march down into the basin. For fifteen years I have been hunting the Yaquis. For fifteen years I have been hoping for just this chance."

They could not charge us with cowardice, but when our decision not to support them in a massacre was made known there were smiles and expressions of contempt.

An hour after dark the soldiers left us and went marching in single file down into the basin. I do not believe the first man had yet descended into the basin when we suddenly caught sight of a signal fire to the right.

The Yaquis were not to be surprised. During the next hour the whole side of the mountain showed signals at intervals, and then there was an interval of three hours, during which not a light was to be seen. At midnight from the center of the mountain a signal fire suddenly blazed out. It did not last more than a minute and was followed by a noise none of us could make out. It was like the roaring of a gale in a narrow gorge of the mountains, and we had been listening to it for perhaps ten minutes when from the dark basin beneath us arose such a cry as few men ever heard.

"In the name of God, what can it be?" asked each man of his comrade, but no one could answer. Down there in the midnight blackness some terrible tragedy was being enacted, but we must wait for daylight to solve it. The roaring, rushing sound came to us after the scream died away, but more softly than at first. From that hour till dawn came there was no signaling, no noise, nothing to prove that there was life in the mountains beyond our little band. The peaks of the mountains stood out first. Then we followed the dawn down till our eyes rested on the caves. In front of them were hundreds of people, but they were standing quiet and peering down into the basin. In another minute daylight had crept down there, and we looked and cried aloud in horror. The bottom of the basin, as we saw it the evening before, had been covered with scrubs and grass. It was a basin still, but the bottom was hidden under ten, twenty, thirty feet of water. There was no outlet, and we could see the waters rushing and swirling round and round as if to find one. And borne on the rush were the bodies of the dead—of the 231 men who had left us a few hours before. Not one had escaped. High up on their side of the mountain the Yaquis had dammed a spring or rivulet and stored up the waters for just such an emergency. At midnight they had let the flood loose, and it had come tearing down at lightning speed to overwhelm the enemy, caught like rats in a trap. As we turned away in our horror to make our way down the mountains the Yaquis raised their voices in one long shout of exultation and then were silent. They had reaped their vengeance and were satisfied to let us depart in peace.

Money Signs.

The meaning of the British money signs, £., s., d., representing pounds, shillings and pence, has recently been explained. Edward Lovell, an authority on folklore, gave his lecture on "Folklore of Commerce" at the Horniman Museum, in which he touched on the subject. Originally the signs did not mean pounds, shillings and pence. The "L"—always the most important letter—is a modification of an ancient symbol representing scales (libra) used for weighing pound's weight; "s" can also be reduced by folklore principles to mean, not shillings at all, but a piece of silver wire for measuring distance, while the "d" is the initial of the Roman coin "denarius." It was made of silver and in early days was equivalent to about 18 cents.

The American dollar sign, he thought, was a blending of the ancient Pillars of Hercules and a Spanish scroll.

The origin of the term "bill" is, of course, well known. It is derived from the French word "bille," a piece of wood. In olden days the process of rendering accounts was by means of cutting notches in a stick, the stick being split through the notches, and one half being given to the debtor. This system, known as the "tally" system, still is in existence in some of the English hopyards.

The word "bankrupt" is an Anglicized form of the Lombady banker's "bancus ruptus." Banking in its infancy was conducted in the open. When one of their members defaulted his bench was seized and broken up to prevent his doing further mischief.

Demolishing Parisian Bridges.

Another old bridge is being demolished at Paris as a sacrifice to the spirit of progress. This is the Pont de la Tournelle, some distance down stream beyond Notre Dame. It was originally built about 1620, the first structure being of wood. The foundations of the present stone bridge date from 1656, although it was widened twice, once in 1777 and again in 1845, to keep pace with the increase of traffic. But the remarkable fact about its destruction is, that while the demolition plans are complete and thorough, there is a vagueness about what will next be done. Is its destruction for the sake of so-called civic improvement, or will it simply vanish and another historic landmark of old Paris be only a memory? Or will the municipal council replace it with something fashionable in steel or re-enforced concrete? The pity is that no one can find out why this bridge was chosen for destruction, nor what will replace it. Paris can ill afford to lose her structures of the past.

A "Howler."

Rather extreme measures are advocated in this "howler" reported by a school teacher: "To get rid of danuruff you must first remove the scalp and then rub thoroughly with some strong tonic."

The Land of Long Words.

Humboldt once said that nothing in Mexico strikes Europeans more forcibly than the excessive length of the words. This length, moreover, does not always depend on their being compounded, as in the Greek, the German or the Sanskrit. Thus the Mexican word for that simple thing, a kiss, is tetennamiquiliztli.

But that is nothing, says Mr. Charles W. Domville-Fife in his book on Guatemala, to what the Central American can do. His best efforts eclipse even Shakespeare's often quoted "honorificabilitudinitatibus." in "Love's Labour's Lost," for if you wish to call the boy who carries newspapers, you have but to murmur "amatlacuilolitquitcatlaxahuilli," and he may possibly come.

More Darkness.

"I'm all in the dark about how these bills are to be paid," said Mr. Hardup to his wife.

"Well, Henry," said she as she pulled out a colored one and laid it on the pile, "you will be if you don't pay that one, for it's the gas bill."

BANKRUPT AUSTRIA.

"No pleasure trips" is the general order of the day, and yet on entering a Vienna railway station one would think that the Viennese had been seized with a perfect passion for traveling. The booking-halls are thronged, and it is only by dint of standing two or three hours in a queue that it is possible to procure a ticket, the possession of which, even then, by no means guarantees one a place, much less a seat.

Half an hour before the departure of the train the platform gates were opened, and the rush that follows is indescribable. The struggling people push their way through the narrow opening and rush wildly for the train. In a few moments the platform is one dense mass of people, many of whom crowd on to the steps of the carriages and hold on grimly lest they should be torn away. Remonstrance is useless and no one heeds the risk, for they all know very well that things will be no better with the next train.

What, it will be asked, is it that impels the crowd to undertake this wild journeying? It is food shortage! The weekly rations are insufficient, only the "nouveaux riches" can pay for the goods handled by profiteers, and so it is necessary to go into the country to fetch food. Therefore these people journey in the utmost discomfort for half a day or more, and on reaching their destination tramp for hours until they come across a peasant from whom they beg milk, eggs, or butter. To secure a kilo of butter for from 40 to 50 kronen is a veritable triumph; in Vienna the price would be from 130 to 140 kronen. And to find a peasant kindhearted enough to supply a morsel of meat is the greatest achievement of all, for the Viennese have almost forgotten the very taste of it. Who can afford meat at 100 kronen the kilo?

Then back to the station again with well-stuffed rucksack and often another bag as well. There the earlier scenes are repeated until the train starts, except that, thanks to the bulging rucksacks, there is still less room in the carriages, so that the travelers take to entrenching themselves on the roof. Now it might naturally be thought that on arrival in Vienna the struggle would be at an end. But not a bit of it. First there is an examination to undergo, and as one is bringing prohibited articles into Vienna one must be prepared to see these confiscated at one fell stroke.

It is heartrending to look on while the milk, which some poor woman has sacrificed herself to procure for her children, is taken from her just as she thought she had reached her goal—not to mention the thought of the financial loss. No pleas, no tears are of any avail; the fiat has gone forth, and the official has to obey it. It is a common thing for people to break their eggs and trample on their food rather than hand them over to the authorities. When will better times come for these distressed people?

A Heroic Slave.

There was a humble slave in the palace of the Caliph Haroun al Raschid. The caliph had in his audience chamber twenty rare vases, and it was written in the laws of Bagdad that he who should have the misfortune to break one of these would pay the penalty with his life. This slave one day broke a vase. He was instantly seized, tried and condemned to death. But the caliph had no sooner pronounced sentence on him than the slave turned, and, walking calmly to the other nineteen vases, with one sweep of the arm destroyed them all.

"Wretch," the caliph thundered, "why have you done that barbarous deed?"

"To save the lives of nineteen of my fellow countrymen," the doomed slave replied.

Dying Is Expensive.

The difficulties of dying have been aggravated by the coal shortage; that is, if you will be cremated, says an exchange. In the town of Esslingen, South Germany, candidates for earthly cremation have been forewarned that they can have their wish only when the local crematory has coke on hand. The progressive city of Ulm, Wurttemberg requires to furnish the the necessary fuel along with the dead, if cremation is desired.

Incidently, the cost of cremation has gone up considerably. The cremation fees average around 70 marks, a niche for the memorial urn costs from 250 to 600 marks, according to location, while the urn itself lets you in for from 250 marks up.

Even without cremation, dying is expensive in Germany to-day. The cheapest pine-board coffin is priced at 125 marks and the cost of coffins runs up to 5,000 and 6,000 marks for ornate metal caskets. The cheapest short-distance ride in a hearse costs 50 marks, while professional pallbearers get a minimum wage of 7.50 marks per capita. The cheapest funeral wreaths cost 50 marks, but you cannot get anything grand and showy under 500 marks.

Living would seem to be the lesser evil, and, as a matter of fact, the death rate is going down in Germany.

Goliath, the Philistine giant, must have caused a lot of trouble for the army quartermasters of his day. How did they get a regulation uniform to fit him, for he stood eleven feet three inches in his stocking feet; if, indeed, Philistines of those times wore stockings.

INFLUENZA HAS LATER DANGERS

The influenza convalescent who has apparently recovered from the disease and is yet in a strangely weak and depressed condition should be the object of particular care, according to Dr. Louis I. Harris, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the New York Health Department. In the opinion of Dr. Harris the after care of the influenza patient is most important. The co-operation of the patient, coupled with the willingness to see that the weakness and depression are a part of the illness, though coming after the disease itself has spent its force, is a big factor in effecting a complete return to full health. On the other hand, the determination to ignore this debilitated condition and to fight against it, will, Dr. Harris says, frequently bring serious consequences upon the patient.

After Effects Bad.

"First, and perhaps the most momentous condition to be considered is the striking depression, mental, nervous, and physical, complained of by most patients. Those attacked by the disease with moderate severity are almost always afflicted with this depression, which should be recognized and dealt with. Those who have had mild cases of the epidemic are little affected by depression, and their quick return to health and strength gives rise to the belief that influenza is trivial. On the contrary influenza in its after effects is anything but trivial, and calls for the application of rules of common sense and sanitation which are the fruit of years of experience.

"Tonic treatment, well chosen diet, and great care in not becoming overtired or allowing the body to be chilled are necessary. Eggs may be eaten, but not more than two a day, for the average adult. Of course, it must be remembered that in many cases this disease tends to direct its force against the kidneys, and therefore we instruct patients to avoid eating a great amount of meat, eggs, or beef extracts. Eggs, soft boiled, poached or beaten, raw, are advisable in limited numbers. The raw eggs should always be well agitated before taking.

When Good Food Is Bad.

"With milk and eggs as a foundation the patient should eat good nourishing food, including meat, fish and vegetables, simply prepared. Frying, for instance, is out of the question. Good food prepared in an unassimilable manner becomes bad food; especially is this to be noted in cases of convalescence from influenza, for the disease often manifests itself in vomiting, and in intestinal and gastric disturbances, and it is important not to weaken the digestive function by the eating of poorly prepared food or even the best of food in ill-advised quantities. The quantitive distribution of foodstuffs should be so adjusted as not to overtax the stomach but the patient should eat generously and frequently."

As a tonic to build up the blood and stimulate the shattered nerves, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are unsurpassed. These pills actually make new, rich, red blood, which reaches every organ and nerve in the body, improves the appetite, strengthens digestion and drives away the feeling of weakness and depression always following an attack of la grippe or influenza. Those who give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial will be amply repaid by the new health and strength this tonic medicine always gives.

DOUBLE FUNERAL MARKS LAST OF TRAGEDY IN THE BYERS HOME

A double funeral took place yesterday afternoon when Mr. and Mrs. S. Byers, who died within twenty-four hours of each other from pneumonia, were laid to rest side by side in Little Lake Cemetery. A large number of friends, fellow employes from the C.G.E. and fellow lodge members attended the impressive funeral services, which were held at the family residence, 183 Lock street, conducted by Rev. J. Rollins of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, assisted by Rev. J. A. McKenzie, of Knox Church.

The floral tributes, which were very numerous, gave evidence of the high esteem in which both husband and wife were held by all who knew them and to the deep shock which this double tragedy had given them. They included beautiful wreaths from the employees of the Canadian General Electric pattern shop and the Independent Order of Oddfellows. The pall-bearers for the husband were chosen from the Oddfellows and were Messrs. E. Hardy, Chas. Thornton, Wm. Young, F. Legros, J. Roberts, and H. Williamson.

The pall-bearers for Mrs. Byers were Messrs. Stewart Cox, V. Dimmock, F. Haggart, George Allen and Roy and Walter Byers.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH HAS CONTRIBUTED $30,500

EXCEED THE OBJECTIVE AIMED AT BY NEARLY SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS

This is the record of St. Paul's Church in the Forward Movement the past three weeks: The objective of $25,000 was reached the second week of the canvass, and continued on its upward course until it has now gone beyond the objective nearly $6000, with a few pledge cards still to be returned to the treasurer. This brings to a close the most remarkable canvass in the history of St. Paul's Church.

The committee wish to thank all the contributors to the fund, and also those who gave their generous support to it, which carried the canvass to success and made it a source of pleasure to all those who had a part in it.

Chairman.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN REACHES HALIFAX

SAYS HEALTH IS IMPROVED BUT HE WILL NOT RESUME DUTIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Feb. 28.—Sir Robert Borden arrived in Halifax on the Carmania this morning enroute to New York, where he will be met by Lady Borden who will accompany him on a trip to the South, which will be undertaken in a further effort to regain his lost health. Sir Robert stated this morning that while he felt much better as the result of his trip to England, he was unable to venture an opinion as to when he hoped to be restored to his normal health. He declined to discuss the political situation either in England or Canada and would make no comment on general conditions.

GROUP INSURANCE FOR COLONIAL WEAVING CO

MANAGEMENT DECIDES TO INTRODUCE THAT PLAN FOR BENEFIT EMPLOYEES

The Colonial Weaving Co., Limited, of Peterborough, of which Mr. R. R. Hall, one of our leading lawyers and barristers, is president, and Mr. A. E. Coulthard, general manager, and who has always identified himself with any forward movement in the interest of Peterborough, have decided along with other welfare work which they are interested in to insure their employees, which number about ninety, in the Prudential Insurance Co. of America. This action on the part of Mr. Hall and Mr. Coulthard only goes to prove that they are interested in the welfare of all those who are associated with them in the Colonial Weaving Co., Limited. It goes without saying that this action on their part will be greatly welcomed by the employees of the Colonial Weaving Co. where the best of feeling exists between the managership of the company and the employees.

A REMBRANDT IN CANADA.

Portrait by Famous Artist Owned by Toronto Man.

The portrait of Magdalena Van Loo, owned by Mr. Frank P. Wood, of Toronto, is one of the most valuable paintings in Canada. It was painted by the great Rembrandt. Its removal from the museum at Colmar was perfectly legitimate. The sum paid for the portrait by Mr. Wood was less than $300,000.

The foregoing is a summary of the statements made by Prof. Mavor of Toronto University regarding the purchase:

"There is not the least doubt about its being a genuine Rembrandt," said Prof. Mavor. "Nobody but Rembrandt could have painted such a portrait. It is evident that the portrait was done in one of the periods of his life when the great master was comparatively wealthy. Rembrandt, like a good many more artists, had a hard time early in life, but when good fortune came his way he spent his money lavishly. He was very fond of jewelry, and took great pleasure in displaying it on his subjects when they sat for him. The portrait of his son, Titus, for which this was a companion picture, shows Titus to be comparatively poorly dressed, and was possibly done at a different period. It is apparent that this portrait of his daughter-in-law was painted when Rembrandt was being showered with commissions. Sometimes his funds were not so bountiful, and he died comparatively poor, though not a pauper by any means."

Prof. Mavor received a letter from a friend, telling him of the arrival of the picture at New York. While there, it was examined by many connoisseurs, and it was not long before Mr. Wood, who was going through New York, heard of its presence, and he immediately went to view it, and shortly afterwards made the purchase. "But he did not give $300,000 for it as the New York newspapers say," declared Prof. Mavor. "I know the figure paid, but I am not prepared to state what it was."

A short time ago a Toronto art critic made the assertion that if the portrait were a genuine Rembrandt, it would be re-lined at least once, on account of the fact that a canvas does not last longer than one hundred years under ordinary conditions. "That is not so," said Prof. Mavor. "There is as much difference between canvases as between various pieces of cloth. There are canvases of great age in some galleries in Europe. The picture may have been re-backed; but this is a matter which does not affect the genuineness of it in the least."

"A Frenchman named Henri Rabat presented this Rembrandt to the Colmar Museum in 1842. It remained there until 1917, when the town sold it in order to buy a famous ancient abbey of the Antonites in the environs, which was the property of a German named Spetz. This man had filled it with paintings and statuary, antique furniture, tapestries, and marvels of all kinds. Upon his death his heirs offered to sell the abbey to the town, and the mayor and municipality judged the purchase to be a good one. But there wasn't any money to pay the heirs their price. This was in 1917.

"Finally it was decided to part with the Rembrandt and a valuable and historic medallion in order to get the necessary funds. These were sold to a Finnish collector, whose home is at Litsen. And this collector sold the picture to the two art firms of this city jointly.

"About six weeks ago Mr. Wood, in passing through New York, was told of the picture being here, and he lost no time in going to view it, and very little time in producing the money to buy it.

"The portrait represents a handsome woman with rather a thin face, but a most gentle and ingratiating expression. Her hair is done in the old Dutch fashion, smooth over the brow with a tangle of tiny little curls. The light falls from above on face and shoulders, which are bare, and on her arms, folded over a little King Charles terrier. On both wrists pearls are shown, and around her neck is a pearl necklace. A fine chain, which is almost invisible, suspends a large jewelled ornament at her breast. In her hair is another large jewelled ornament which catches the light in the magical Rembrandt manner.

"This picture is painted in Rembrandt's third or latest manner. It is pronounced by connoisseurs to be among the best, if it is not the best, of his paintings of this period of work."

Travel in Newfoundland.

An express train on the Reid-Newfoundland Railway, a narrow guage line, arrived in St. John's, Nfld., on Friday, February 13, after being three weeks on the way across the island from Port au Basques. The train was scheduled to make the 546 miles run in 29 hours. Several storms were encountered and it was snowed in frequently.

Passengers reported that at some exposed points the snow drifted to a height of 20 feet. They were on scanty rations much of the time, with fish as the principal food.

BROWN WAS FAST GOING DOWN HILL

ABOUT TO QUIT WORK, BUT TAKES TANLAC AND FEELS FINE NOW.

"I told my wife one day that if I didn't find something pretty soon that would help me I would just have to quit work," said Bertram Brown, familiarly known to his friends as "Bert," who is employed by the Piercery Supply Company and resides at 46 Maynard street, Halifax, N. S., while describing his condition before taking Tanlac. Continuing, he said:

"For the past two years I suffered from the worst sort of stomach trouble, and finally became so weak and felt so tired all the time I could hardly get about. I had no appetite to speak of and could not eat the least thing without simply forcing it down, and for a long time I could not even do this at breakfast, and would go for weeks without eating a single mouthful in the morning, for I knew if I did I would suffer from it all day long. What little I did manage to eat would sour and ferment and I would bloat terribly and my heart would palpitate dreadfully. I also had such cramping pains they would almost draw me double, and such a burning sensation that it felt like there was a coal of fire in my stomach. I would have such severe attacks of heartburn they would nearly drive me wild; I would have blinding headaches, and would sometimes become so dizzy I would just have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. I was extremely nervous and could get but little sleep. I would roll and toss from one side of the bed to the other all night long, and would get up in the morning completely tired out. I also suffered from constipation and was simply in a bad fix every way, and for two months before I started taking Tanlac there was hardly a minute when I was free from pain, and I was so weak I could hardly stand on my feet.

"One day I was talking to a friend of mine and telling him how bad I felt, when he told me how much good Tanlac has done him, and advised me to go right down to the drug store and get a bottle, as he felt sure that it would do me good also. Well, I took his advice, and I hadn't taken but a few doses when I noticed it was helping me. I have taken six bottles altogether, and I am entirely over my stomach trouble. I have a fine appetite and never suffer any bad after effects from anything I eat. My nerves are in such good condition I sleep as sound as a log all night long and always get up feeling greatly refreshed. I am regaining my lost weight and strength and my work is a pleasure to me. I have not had a headache since I began taking Tanlac, and never become dizzy, and I think Tanlac is the greatest medicine ever put on sale in Canada, and I am always recommending it whenever I get an opportunity."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by The Warne Drug Co., and by the leading druggists in every town.

WHO WILL HONOR GOD SUNDAY?

Who will honor God tomorrow by dedicating the day to His praise and glory? Only once in a generation does Sunday fall on February 29th, so to many the opportunity will come but once in a lifetime. So the motto "The Extra Day for God," has been selected as being particularly appropriate.

The services at George Street Methodist Church will be of a special character and the pastor will be in charge both morning and evening. His subject in the morning will be, "A Truth Which Everyone Needs to Know," and in the evening he will speak on "The Man Who Was Near But Not Near Enough." The Sunday School will meet as usual and the adult friends are invited to attend the session. Appropriate music will be supplied by the choir.

It is the pastor's desire that every church member and adherent will make an effort to be present at both services. A cordial invitation is extended to strangers and those who have no particular church affiliation but who are willing to honor God by dedicating tomorrow to Him.

DEAL IN SULPHIDE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas, Man., Feb. 28.— From reliable sources it is learned that the deal for the sale of the great sulphide ore body at Glin-Glon may be closed at any time now. The parties have got together, and a definite price fixed to the satisfaction of both sides. The terms also include, it is stated, the commencement of development work immediately with a force of men, for which supplies and machinery will be taken in before the end of March.

TWO MILLION FOR PUBLIC WORKS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—About $2,000,000 will be included in the budget of the public works department, it is expected, and new buildings and bridges in different parts of the province during the coming year. The final figures are now being made up for presentation to the Legislature.

A GHOST PILOT

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Tom Singleton, to use a homely expression, was a boating inebriate. He spent all his vacations on Casco bay, on the Maine coast. There is something more in that bay than handling a boat, and that is handling what the boat is liable to bring up against. The waters are literally full of rocks.

Tom early fell in with a fisherman named Wilkins—Captain Wilkins he was called, as all men who sail their own boats in that region are—who took a fancy to the youngster because they both loved the water. Wilkins usually went out after dark, set his nets and returned about sunrise the next morning. Tom was so in love with the water that he would go out with the captain one or two nights in the week. That's what made the captain love Tom. Both were awed by the solemn grandeur of the starry dome above them. Both loved the mystical moonlight—so Tom named it—and when they got caught in a rising wind and all was black about and above them, if there was not a pleasure in it, there was a pleasure in getting ashore and in the memory of it.

But there was one weather condition that appalled Tom, and it was this that caused him to confine his excursions alone to short sails in fair weather—he dreaded a fog.

And why shouldn't he? Often when the sun shone brightly on a partly submerged rock and the foam of a gigantic wave breaking over it he would exclaim, "Just think of running on to that of a dark night or in a fog!" And the captain would say, "I've been sailing in this bay for thirty years in dark nights, in foggy nights, in all kinds of nights, and I never struck one of 'em yet."

"How do you do it?"

"I dunno. Reckon I do it as you git out of bed in the middle of the night and go downstairs for a drink of water or something, without a light."

One day when the two were sailing together Tom said that so long as he lived he would spend his vacations on Casco bay and if he grew rich he would spend the whole of each season there.

"I won't be with you when you're running your own yacht, Tommy," said the captain, "but if you ever get in a bad fix I'll help you out."

"What! After you're dead?"

"No one dies. We simply change conditions: we don't need legs and boats and such like."

When the mackerel became so scarce that it didn't pay the captain to go out nights he and Tom would cruise about among the beautiful islands of the bay, living aboard the boat. They had butterfish for breakfast, cod or lobster or clams for dinner and mackerel for supper. And as for sleeping when at anchor in a cove, with the wavelets soothing them to slumber against the sides of the boat, they kept awake only because it was so delightful.

Well, the day came when Tom Singleton was able to keep a small yacht of his own and spend the greater part of the summer cruising in her. He took her to Casco bay—he owned a cottage on Bailey's island—and enjoyed sailing to his heart's content.

But, though he knew a great deal more about navigating a boat than when a youngster, he was not up to the rocky bottom of Casco bay. Moreover, he didn't have Captain Wilkins to rely on, for the captain's old hulk was buried in the cemetery on the highest part of Orr's island, where one can see the ocean in many different parts. So Singleton was obliged to sail his own boat, confining himself to fair weather.

But if the yachtsman could tell about what the weather would be he couldn't predict freedom from fog. The coast of Maine is nearly as bad for fogs as the banks of Newfoundland. They come suddenly, and sometimes they stay a long while.

One bright morning Singleton started with his wife and children and a few friends from Bailey's island for Papham beach. They had made the voyage outward and were returning past Seguin light when a fog bank came rolling in from the eastward and enveloped them. Singleton could steer only by compass, and what is compass steering on the coast of Maine? The fog was heavy and promised to be of long duration.

Tom heard a swish of waters to port. He knew the sound and steered just in time to avoid one of the big submerged rocks of that part of the bay. The party passed a couple of hours in terror; then it began to grow dark.

The women and children were mostly in the cabin or on the forward deck. Tom had the tiller. He began to feel a resistance when he turned it, and, this continuing, he yielded to the force. He heard waters surging to port and starboard, but seemed to pass, by some unseen seamanship, between or around all dangers. He let go the tiller, and it moved not by the waves, but apparently by the unseen force.

What was Tom's astonishment at last to find himself in the narrow crooked gut between Orr's and Bailey's islands and going through safely! When he got out into the sound the fog suddenly vanished and he was enabled to steer for the dock.

No one can convince Tom Singleton that a spirit hand was not on the tiller during that perilous voyage. And he remembers Captain Wilkins' words: "If you ever get in a bad fix I'll help you out."

GREY COUNTY'S CENTENARIAN.

To celebrate one's hundredth birthday is not the good fortune of many people and to come to the hundred and fourth mile-stone still able to enjoy life and to be interested in the every-day affairs of the community is decidedly unique. Yet up in Grey county, near the town of Owen Sound, lives a little old lady who, on January 10, was 104 years of age. Her name? Why anyone from that district will tell you of Mrs. Ann Brown, of The Glen, Sydenham, Grey county's only centenarian, and who is said to be the only surviving witness of the coronation of Queen Victoria.

Born in the quaint old village of Topcliffe, in Yorkshire, England, her early days were spent in the quietness and seclusion of the little country town. Her earliest recollection is of her grandfather preparing a feast on the village green for the men of the Topcliffe Company of Regulars, just returned from campaigning against Napoleon Bonaparte in Belgium and France. The first venture from the protecting shelter of her grandfather's cottage was to the great city of London. When a dark-eyed young maid of twenty summers she went to visit her mother in the great city, traveling from Hull in one of the first steamboats. On arriving in London she found that everything was in a state of bustle and excitement in preparation for the coronation of the young Queen. Her step-father was an upholsterer in the employ of the royal family and, to please his shy young visitor from Yorkshire, secured a pass for her into Westminster Abbey to witness the ceremony of the coronation. On the great day, June 28, 1838, she took her place with hundreds of others inside the Abbey and waited breathlessly for the great event. According to Mrs. Brown the appearance of the Queen was rather disappointing. She had been picturing to herself a tall beautiful woman, and instead she saw a girl, two years younger than herself, rather short, and quite ordinary-looking.

In 1862 Mrs. Brown made another journey from her home in Yorkshire to visit the First World's Fair, promoted by Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's Consort, and held in the Crystal Palace, London. On the death of her husband in 1863, Mrs. Brown decided that she could better her fortunes in a new land. With indomitable spirit she set out with her five small children for Canada. For three years she resided in Owen Sound. In 1866 she took up 120 acres of land in the township of Sydenham, four miles from Owen Sound. Here she has lived ever since, often under disheartening and difficult circumstances. In spite of the primitive condition of the country she wrested a living from the soil and raised and educated her little family.

During the visit of the Duke of Devonshire to Owen Sound in June, 1918, His Excellency visited Mrs. Brown and chatted with her for some time. She is still quite active, goes about the farm, reads a little, and writes in a clear steady hand. During the war she knitted nearly a dozen pairs of socks for the local branch of the Women's Patriotic League. Her vitality is wonderful, and she has many friends in Grey County who hope that they may be able to congratulate her upon her 105th birthday.

Cut and Run.

"Cut and run" originated in a peculiar custom of the Egyptian embalmers. A low caste was employed to make the first incision in the corpse, a process viewed with much dislike by the people, who held him accursed who should mutilate the dead. As soon as the fellow had made his "cut" he had to run through a storm of curses, stones and sticks. He "cut" for a living and had to "run" for his [illegible]

Cuss Words in Print.

The London British public is not so sensitive about a cuss word or two these days.

Lately some of the reformers and reconstructionists have been sowing their wild oaths all over their speeches, and they're being reprinted in the press just exactly as they fell from the orator's lips.

"Hell" in the newspapers of to-day is "hell," not "h—l," which was an anaemic rendering of a fine expletive, considerate of the feelings of old-time readers.

Gen. Ironside came back from Russia and told every reporter who approached him, "I think a damn sight too much has been said about Russia already," and nobody thinks any the worse of Gen. Ironside nor of the newspaper for writing damn instead of d—n.

They All Have It.

Everybody at our house
  Has the world unrest:
Ought to hear 'em start to grouse
  Soon as up and dressed.

Father won't go near his store,
  'Phones his orders down:
Tells his clerks to charge 'em more
  Now he owns the town.

Mother runs a lot of clubs,
  Heads the Anti-Beers:
Fills the house with long-haired dubs
  With long-haired ideas.

Sister's nerves are in her feet,
  Powder'd on her nose:
She says shimmying is sweet,
  And she needs new clothes.

Brother plays the idle snob,
  Surely does know how:
Swears he will not take a job
  Under ten good thou'.

Me-unrest? Back to the farm!
  I drove army plugs:
Had six shots thrown in my arms—
I'm immune from bugs.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers You.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become sluggish; they become overworked; backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for a generation to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

"THE CRY OF A LOST SOUL"

Subject of Discourse at Murray St. Monday Morning

The above is the subject announced for Murray Street Baptist Church at the evening service tomorrow. At the morning hour a message from the president of the Baptist Convention, Rev. John MacNeill, D.D., will be presented.

The Baptist people are showing that the splendid giving in connection with the Forward Movemnet was only an incident in the campaign. Now that the matter of grateful giving has been attended to, the president of the convention presents a subject in an altogether different line, which will appeal to every one who knows the grace of compassion.

HARTLEY DEWART FOR CHANGE IN STATUTE

WOULD ALLOW MUNICIPALITIES SELF DETERMINATION AS TO SUNDAY CARS

Mr. G. N. Gordon received a letter from H. Hartley Dewart, the leader of the Opposition in the Legislature, saying that he would be glad to support an amendment to the law allowing cities to vote on the question of whether the ratepayers desired that Sunday street cars should be opperated. Mr. Dewart put his reasons for supporting this amendment on the ground that the public should be trusted to manage their own affairs, and undue restrictions should not be placed upon municipalities in matters of purely local concern.

TYRONNE POWERS NEXT SEASON TO PRODUCE TWO FAMOUS PLAYS

WILL BE SEEN IN "BUNCH OF VIOLETS" AND "THE MIDDLEMAN

The remarkable success which has attended the transcontinental tour of the famous English actor, Tyrone Power, so far in "The Servant in the House," has encouraged Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., the All-Canadian theatrical organization, under which Mr. Power is touring, to go ahead with arrangements for a similar tour across the continent by Mr. Power next year in two famous plays well known and popular everywhere —"A Bunch of Violets" and "The Middleman."

Special productions will be built in Canada for both plays, and special companies engaged to support Mr. Power. The great reception given these two works throughout Canada when they last were played by E. S. Willard, affords a good index as to the propriety of their selection as the next vehicles in which Mr. Powers will be presented.

The delightful sentiment of "A Bunch of Violets" has made a fragrant play for all theatre-goers who like clean drama. This is what Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., aim to give the Canadian public.

The dramatic strength and the intense humanity that are found in "The Middleman" similarly commend that drama to those who find in the theatre something more than a place in which to idle away an empty hour or two.

Plans for an imposing list of other productions for next season by Trans-Canada, Ltd., will be announced in due course.

Bookings made by Trans-Canada booking office for their own and affiliated houses for this and next season include "Chu Chin Chow" for return dates; Dale Belasco's "Tiger Rose," "Zeigfeld Follies," "Al. Jolson." Tyrone Power will be seen in "The Servant in the House" at the Grand.

ORGANIZATION OF THE OFFICER OF THE 57TH

IS NOW COMPLETE AND LIST WILL BE SENT TO HEAQ-QUARTERS

The organization of the officers of the 57th Regiment has been completed and will be forwarded to Kingston, for approval by Militia Headquarters, in the course of a day or two.

There are still a few vacancies for platoon commanders and the appointments of medical officer and paymaster. These two latter appointments are to be filled by officers of the C.A.M.C. and C.A.P.C. and officers are in view for these appointments.

It will be noted that in the slate of officers here published that all the company officers are active young men of sterling qualities who have all seen service and are highly qualified for their appointments.

Capt. Winterbottom has been appointed adjutant and is employed permanently, while Sergt.-Major Instructor Dunkerly has been appointed S. M. and Instructor to the Regiment. It is expected that a permanently employed orderly room clerk will be on duty also.

Recruiting will commence on Tuesday evening, March 2nd, and every Tuesday and Thursday evening thereafter. It is expected to commence drilling at once. Special classes will be started in the various branches of infantry training.

Remarkable Experience of Mrs. Ripley

Mrs. Millaner P. Ripley, of Williamsdale, East, has good news for all who suffer from aches and derangements caused by Kidney Trouble. Read her letter:—

"Before taking Gin Pills I had suffered dreadfully with my back and headaches, and had suffered for 20 years. I tried almost everything but got no relief until I got Gin Pills. I have taken 6 boxes and now I have not a sign of a pain or an ache. I am now 48 and feel as well as ever I did in my life."

In Gin Pills, all the valuable diuretic Juniper element in the Gin has been utilized, and the alcohol eliminated. Combined with other highly efficient diuretics and antiseptics, Gin Pills present the most scientific and effective remedy for Kidney and Bladder trouble that can be secured. They give sure, quick and safe relief. If you have backache, headache, highly-coloured urine, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, dizziness, lassitude, floating specks before the eyes, unaccountable uneasiness of mind and general debility, lose no time. Treat yourself with Gin Pills before it is too late. At all druggists and dealers, 50c. Money refunded if not relieved. Free sample on request.

OUTSKIRTS OF EMPIRE.

Many Natives of New Guinea Have Not Seen a White Man.

"Strange though it may appear, there are thousands of British subjects living to-day in various parts of our possessions who have never seen a white face, nor even heard of the mighty institution of which they form part—the British Empire. Their world of living things ends when earth meets sky."

Thus E. W. Pearson Chinnery summed up the situation, when invited by a representative of the Christian Science Monitor to tell something of the yet little known land of New Guinea on which he is an authority. Mr. Chinnery has been engaged in administrative exploration work in all parts of the territory since 1909, save for the interruption of the last two years when he left to enlist in the Australian Flying Corps.

After the war was over, Mr. Chinnery entered Christ's College, Cambridge, as a research student in anthropology. Since then some interesting papers have been read by him before the British Association, Royal Anthropological Institute, Royal Colonial Institute, Horniman's Museum, and other great bodies.

Among the least known of the isolated corners of the Empire beloved by Mr. Chinnery, are those hidden away in the mountains and valleys of the interior of British New Guinea. As an officer of the magisterial staff of Papua, he has explored to introduce the culture of civilization to many thousands of its inhabitants. Little is known outside Papua, he explains, of the results achieved by district officers. A comparatively small portion of Papua is under control; but even so the future of the territory is assured, for the area under settlement and development has given indications of great promise. Petroleum fields have been discovered; minerals (copper and gold) and rich agricultural products are exported; while the portion under cultivation increases annually.

The chief asset of this young colony, however, according to Mr. Chinnery, is its native population. Those people who have already absorbed the elements of civilization supply labor for the plantations and other industries upon which development depends. But as settlement expands, so the need for labor increases, and to meet its demands the administration is forced to increase the area under [illegible]

For the purpose of extending government influence, the territory is divided into administrative areas, each in charge of a resident of assistant resident magistrate. Detachments of armed native constabulary (Papuans) under white officers, are stationed in each division under the control of the district officers, officials charged with the development of those races in their districts which are under control, and with the responsibility of exploring the unknown portions and introducing civilization among their inhabitants.

Mr. Chinnery estimates that during the term of his service in this capacity the seeds of civilization were sown among no less than 13,000 people. Of this number, he says, 11,000 had never seen a white man other than himself.

An officer, Mr. Chinnery says, is said to have sown effectively the seed of civilization among savage races, when he has induced them to abandon such practices as homicide, head-hunting, and cannibalism, and has been able to appoint one of their number in each district to represent government authority, and to bring all cases of wrongdoing before the magisterial courts for adjustment.

It is on the foundation of such practices as the above mentioned, Mr. Chinnery says, that the native builds his whole social and religious structure. Interference which may destroy the very essence of his welfare, must, he thinks, be carried out in such a way that the stability of cultural institutions will not be impaired. As he says, this is no small task, for in the first place the district officer must gain the full confidence of his people, and establish the proper relationship between Government and subject.

He emust also devote intensive study to their cultures, and to the modes of thought which produce customs antagonistic to civilized standards. He must offer, in place of these, a choice of substitutes which will be equally effective in perpetuating their welfare, and while they are struggling to readjust themselves, he must be ever at hand, patient and helpful. He must always remember that his intrusion among them has shattered the faith built up by many generations of tradition, and that in its place are cultures wholly alien to them, of which he is the central figure.

When he has guided them safely through the initial stages of transition, and has retained their confidence throughout; when they consult him day and night on social and domestic matters, accepting his judgments; when they welcome him in their villages; then—but not before—says Mr. Chinnery, he may be reasonably certain that he has effectively sown the seed of civilization.

No Cause to Worry.

A physician on a liner made a great use of sea water among his patients. Whatever their trouble, a dose of the briny liquid was given them. One day the doctor fell overboard. A great bustle consequently ensued on board, in the midst of which the captain came up and inquired the cause. "Oh, it's nothing, sir," answered a tar, "only the doctor has fallen into his own medicine chest."

Galway a Port of Call.

Interest is being revived in a proposal to make Galway, Ireland, a port of call. The Dublin corporation, which in 1917 passed a resolution in favor of the creation of a great harbor at Galway to deal with American and Canadian trade, has returned to the subject and passed another resolution in similar terms.

Dyeing In England.

A demonstration in London by the Knox Guild of Design and Crafts showed the beautiful results produced by ordinary methods of dyeing. Some woolen stuffs woven by members of the guild with primitive apparatus were dyed with privt, bracken, gorse and other well-known plants and even with soot from the chimney, the last producing a beautiful old gold tint.

Line of Swiftest Descent.

What is the line of swiftest descent? To any one not acquainted with the laws of higher mathematics a proposition such as this would appear absurd, the most obvious answer being a straight line. However, it has been proved by mathematicians that the line of swiftest descent is a curve called the cycloid. It is this curve that the eagle unconsciously utilizes in his wonderfully swift swoop to his prey. The analysis of the curve is simply a straight line motion combined with a circular motion. The best illustration showing this is a cartwheel as it rolls along the ground. Any point on the rim of the wheel is describing a cycloid, and no point is at any time describing a circle or going in a straight line. A peculiar thing is deduced from this knowledge, and that is that no point on the rim of a wheel rolling on a surface goes round the center of the wheel, for the center is describing a straight line, and all the points on the rim are describing cycloids; thus as no circular motion exists, the statement holds.—New York Press.

Lord Saye and Sele.

Among curious titles must be reckoned that of Lord Saye and Sele, which sound like a firm determination to stand by what has been said, even to delivering a duly attested and sealed deed—an irrevocable "what I have said, I have said," in fact. But this odd double title has nothing to do with saying and sealing, says an exchange. It was in its origin the Barony by Writ of Saye, created in 1313, and extinct or in abeyance by 1399. It was revived in 1447 in favor of a Fienens of Hurtsmonceaux, who took the additional title of "Sele", which comes from one of the Seals in Kent—perhaps the village of Seal, near Sevenoaks. The title of "Saye" was assumed by reason of a descent from that family through the new peer's grand-[illegible]

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

Girls in Great Britain

Are Now Studying Charm

As Husbands Are Scarce

FREED from war work and war worries and no longer having to fight for the vote, a considerable proportion of the feminine population of Great Britain is beginning to analyze the effects of the new independence which has come to them.

In fact, the new craze among London society women is self-study. By interesting themselves in analytical psychology these women believe they can stethoscope their own natures and discover how many personalities are lodged within themselves. After finding the best one, they thereafter submerge the other personalities, of which many women are said to have three distinct varieties. But there is a vastly larger number of women more interested in arguing a woman's right to choose her own mate. This last is the burning question because more than a million girls are doomed to be husbandless here because of the shortage of men.

In one paper there is now proceeding an animated argument about the attractions of tall women and short ones. The short ones say that the tall women are not so affectionate. The tall ones reply that their seeming austerity is only a part of their general beauty.

Dr. Alfred Schofield has found a new species of women which he calls "latchkey girls," or economically independent women who will want to select their own mates.

Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, the author, says that as a Frenchwoman she believes "arranged marriages" are immensely successful and that Cupid ought to be retired in favor of fathers and mothers.

Although the seven women appointed magistrates by the Lord High Chancellor at the end of December were the first of their sex to be thus designated in Great Britain, the first woman to actually sit as a judge in a police court was Mrs. Ada Jane Summers.

Elected in 1912 as the first woman member of the Stalybridge Council, she was made Mayor of that Cheshire town last November and thus became Chief Magistrate of the police court there. As such she took her seat recently and was welcomed by a full bench of magistrates.

"I did not find it an ordeal," she told an interviewer. "I am not nervous—though I am not a speaker; the cases were trivial. I was glad they were so simple the first morning, and also," with a smile, "that I was able to let them off."

Asked if she had any decided views as to whether sentences should be severe or not, Mrs. Summers replied: "No. It depends on the case and the culprit, doesn't it? I think an old offender should be punished severely, but I do not agree with punishing children. I think the parents are to blame more often than the children. I shall be interested in those which concern women. A woman understands about a woman better than a man."

WINTER WEATHER HARD ON LITTLE ONES

Our Canadian winters are exceedingly hard on the health of little ones. The weather is often so severe that the mother cannot take the little one out for an airing. The consequence is that baby is confined to overheated, badly ventilated rooms; takes cold and becomes cross and peevish. Baby's Own Tablets should be given to keep the little one healthy. They are a mild laxative which regulate the stomach and bowels and thus prevent colds. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Paris at Night.

To a traveler arriving at night Paris reveals a glamour and conceals a mystery—the excited, gesticulating porters that greet the train as though they were there to welcome friends and eager to serve them; the uncertain lights of the train shed, the dinning in the ears of a strange language—a beautiful strange language—and the wild, exhilarating flight in a trunk laden taxi through unknown streets.

There is glamour, if you will, in the lights of the restaurants, in the dizzy crowds and in the broad, brazen avenues teeming with a race of people who like to believe that every day is a holiday, but there is mystery in the silent by streets, lined with high blank walls and darkened windows, where a footstep echoes dismally and the beat of a horse's hoofs resounds like musketry, and there is mystery, too, in the stretches of fragrant gardens, with their treetops reaching up dark masses into the golden glow that hangs like a halo above the City of Lights.—Gordon Arthur Smyth in Scribner's.

Judging a Camel.

One way to popularity with Arabs, it appears, is the acquirement of expert acquaintance with the camel, its character, habits, personal appearance, and history. Such knowledge, to be sure, is not a complete equipment for winning the confidence of Arabs, but, according to Lowell Thomas, describing, in Asia, the ascendancy that an English archaeologist, now known to the world as Col. Lawrence, gained over the desert tribes, it is a great help. Mr. Thomas, incidentally, has learned a good deal about the "ship of the desert" himself, and whoever reads his article in Asia will be that much better prepared to enjoy the menagerie of next summer's traveling circus, even if he never has occasion to "talk camel" with a surprised and delighted Arab.

The finest breeds of camel, one learns, come from central Arabia, where there are six different species, none of which has more than one hump. And another name for this one-humped camel is "dromedary," which comes from the language of the Greeks, and means "a camel that runs." By his hump, moreover, shall we know a camel, and this useful part of him should be of hard, fatless muscle. Nor should your camel be either too fat or too thin. Long legs are desirable and a small waist. Over good ground a first-class Arabian dromedary can trot as fast as 22 miles an hour, canter up to 28 miles, and gallop at 32. But for a whole day's journey seven miles an hour is the reasonable gait, and if you are starting on a journey of some hundreds of miles it is best to be patient and keep your camel at a walk. On one occasion, however, when speed was necessary, Col. Lawrence did 300 miles in three days on camel-back.

PUGILIST'S MANAGER SAYS MILL GOES TO MAN WITH DEMPSEY'S SIGNATURE

Heavy Weight Champion Declares He Will Not go to Europe to Fight the Frenchman.

Paris, Feb. 28.— That a fight between Georges Carpentier and Jack Dempsey, for the heavyweight championship of the world will go to whatever promoter succeeds in signing Dempsey to a contract is the gist of an interview with M. Descamp, Carpentier's manager, which was published by Sporting, a weekly publication.

"I have given my signature to C. B. Cohran, of London, Theodore Vienne, of Paris, William Fox of New York, and Tex Rickard, as I shall give it to anyone who can bring me sufficient guarantees, always, however, with the provision that Dempsey's signature be obtained," said M. Descamps.

"Mr. Cochran is a personal friend of mine. That is why I gave him the preference after Carpentier's match with Beckett. But up to this date he has been unable to secure Dempsey's signature. Meanwhile I have received a telegram from Jack Kearns, manager of Dempsey, saying that Dempsey had not signed with anyone. He also advised me strongly to deal with Tex Rickard and asked me to go to the United States, where he said Kearns and Rickard were awaiting me. Carpentier and I will leave March 13.

"I am not forgetting that Cohran holds Carpentier practically bound until the end of the year, but inasmuch as he has not succeeded in securing Dempsey's signature, and when he realizes that this will be impossible, he is too good a sport to stand in our way of putting the fight through, because should Dempsey sign with either Rickard or Fox the contract Cochran has with us becomes null."

Vienne, the Paris promoter, has virtually given up hope of holding a bout between Carpentier and Dempsey in France, owing to the exchange rate situation, and Sporting says it is the opinion of Descamps and all sporting men in Paris that if the fight takes place it will be in the United States.

To Indict Jack and Jack

San Francisco, Feb. 28. — The return of the Federal Grand Jury looking into the record of Jack Dempsey during the war is being awaited here with interest, as it is reported that an indictment will be filed by the jury for both Dempsey and his manager, Jack Kearns.

Will Fight in United States

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 28.—Jack Kearns, manager of Jack Dempsey, heavyweight pugilist champion, denied today that he had communicated with M. Descamps, Georges Carpentier's manager, and said that he would not negotiate for a championship match with Carpentier until the Frenchman arrived to the United States.

"It is a mistake that I cabled to M. Descamps or communicated with him in any way," said Kearns, commentig on an interview with Descamps, published today in Paris. The European champion's manager was credited with saying that Kearns cabled that Dempsey had not been signed by any promoter and urged that negotiations be opened with Tex Rickard.

"There will be nothing doing from us until Descamps and Carpentier get to New York," said Kearns. "Then we will really see who has Carpentier. We do not care to run into litigation by signing up until we know who has the Frenchman.

"One thing is certain— the fight will be in the United States and not in England or France. We will not not go to Europe. That is final."

FATHER OF POLE VAULT, DEAD

Princeton, Feb. 28.— George Goldie, Princeton University's first physical director, who died at his home here Monday, was widely known in athletic circles both as an athlete himself and a trainer of athletes. He was 78 years old.

Mr. Goldie at one time was the holder of the world's records in the standing broad jump. He is said to have inaugurated the use of the pole in jumping for height, and was known as "father of the pole vault."

Mr. Goldie came to Princeton in 1869 from Montreal, of which city he was a native. He remained here until 1885, when he became the first coach of the New York Athletic Club. In 1893 he returned to Princeton and was actively associated with the university's athletic affairs until 1911, when he retired. During his first period with Princeton he turned out several championship gym teams and was the originator of a number of swings and twists among them the now abandoned 'ladder." From 1869 to 1885 he held the five and the three-year all-around championship titles of the United States and the Caledonia Club of Canada.

YANKS ARE FAVORED BY MANAGER OF TIGERS

JENNINGS THINKS ADDITION OF RUTH INSURES NEW YORK 1920 PENNANT

Scranton Pa., Feb. 28.—Just back from the meeting of the big leagues in Chicago, Hugh Jennings, manager of the Detroit Americans, found time to say a few words by way of discussion of the development at the conference of the moguls.

Hughie said the Yank owners virtually assured Gotham of the 1920 pennant by buying up the demon swatter from Boston. Asked if he thought the acquisition of Ruth meant a great deal to the Yanks, the leader of the Tigers smiled and said:

Hughie Guesses Well.

"Well, sir, if the Yankees don't win the pennant this year I am a very sad guesser and Cap Huston is even a sadder one. With Ruth and the others, New York looks to have the strongest team in the league.

"A great deal depends upon Ruth and also a good deal on the start of the Yanks. It was said by Frazee that Ruth was inclined to kick over the traces and be the law unto his own self.

"There are several other temperamental chaps on the New York team, and if things do not start off right there will be disputes that will tend to form the club into cliques, each likely to be full of glee if the other falls down.

Need Good Start.

"If, however, the Yanks start off by winning the first six or seven games, the chances are that these petty jealousies will be reduced to a minimum and things will probably sail along nicely. But once let there be any friction and the team will go to pieces and go fast.

"No, an all-star team does not necessarily mean a pennant. I have in mind the old Chicago team of the Brotherhood days. Every man on it was a star. Yet the club finished in fourth place.

"I will say that the Yankees on paper look to me to be a better club than the White Sox, and that right now Cleveland seems to be the only team likely to beat them, though Detroit is in good shape and will be heard from right from the start."

Surprise Coming.

Jennings said in his opinion it was about a 50-50 victory for the warring factions of the American League, but the best thing about it all is that peace has surely resulted. He says that nobody but the moguls themselves know what went on behind those closed doors, and some day, if the real truth does come out, there are going to be a whole lot of surprises that will cause some gasps and some laughs.

Jennings said that he did not believe that the board of review, composed of Col. Ruppert, of the New York team, and Clark Griffith, of Washington, wil lamount to much except to act as advisers to President Johnson —a sort of check as it were.

An Instrument of Providence

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

I was walking on the beach, watching the waves come rolling in before a gale and throwing up driftwood, when a bottle was tossed at my feet. I extracted a paper from it on which was written:

> We are going to pieces. Whoever gets this go to Norman D. Carlisle and tell him he will find my will in my desk in secret drawer.

This was all—no date, no signature, no address as to where Norman D. Carlisle would be found.

That night I went to bed thinking about the message. Suppose it was genuine. Somebody was enjoying property that belonged to another. But it seemed to me that if it were genuine the writer would have given at least the city in which the person for whom it was intended lived. If the perpetrator was doing the thing for sport or to pass the time or because he hadn't any more sense he would have given it.

And yet perhaps that's just what he wouldn't do. He might not like to particularize. On the other hand, a man who is about to be dumped into a roaring ocean might leave something out that he should have put in.

I was impelled to find Norman D. Carlisle. I didn't wish to engage in looking for a needle in a haystack, but I couldn't resist the feeling that it was my bounden duty to do so. There were then some 80,000,000 people in the United States alone. The name was Anglo-Saxon, and the person might be somewhere in the great British countries. Nevertheless when I found that I couldn't let the matter alone I went into it methodically. I put a personal advertisement in one newspaper in every city in the United States whose inhabitants numbered 500,000 or over for the said Norman D. Carlisle. I received several replies signed Norman D. Carlisle, the middle name usually differing. I wrote each of them, asking if he had lost a relative at sea, but they all answered in the negative—that is, so far as they knew.

After six months I put in another advertisement for Mr. Carlisle and received a reply from a Norman D. Carlisle living in a town of about 50,000 people. He had seen the ad. while in the city where it had been inserted. I asked him if he had lost a relative at sea, and he replied "No." I dropped the matter so far as he was concerned, but later he wrote me that he was a lawyer and had had a client who had sailed from Rio de Janeiro in a vessel that was catalogued among missing ships.

After some correspondence he sent me a check for expenses, and I went to see him. He made an engagement for me to meet a lady in his office, and I was introduced to Miss Edith Parks, twenty-one years old and comely. She appeared to be a lady, but was shabbily dressed. I was informed that her uncle had been lost on the missing vessel from Rio. I brought out the paper I had found, which I had carefully kept, and as soon as she saw it she said she believed that it had been written by her uncle. Some of his letters were produced, and all doubt was removed. The message, though scrawled hastily in a trembling hand, was found to correspond with the uncle's writing.

I was then told that Miss Parks had been brought up by this uncle, who was wealthy, he being unmarried and without children. After he had been declared legally dead the courts had set about administering his estate and had already found forty persons who were heirs at law.

Since Mr. Weatherby, the man who had been shipwrecked, had given Miss Parks to understand that she was to be his heir it was likely that the will mentioned in the message gave his property to her. But the desk—where was it? Mr. Weatherby's furniture had been sold a year before. Who had bought the desk? No one could tell.

Since I had gone so far in the matter I did not propose to be beaten now. Advertising having availed, I advertised for the person who had bought a desk at a sale of the effects of Cyrus Weatherby. In due time I received a reply from the purchaser. I wrote him that a niece of the deceased wished to redeem it and asked him to fix a price. He said he would sell it for $100. Miss Parks had no money to pay for it, so I mailed the man a check for the amount. The desk was sent to me, and, taking it into a cellar, I chopped it into kindling wood. Among the rubbish lay the papers in a secret drawer, and, taking this up, I found one marked "Last Will and Testament of Cyrus Blake Weatherby." I read it and found that he left all his property to his beloved niece Edith Parks.

That same evening I called on Miss Parks with the will that changed her condition from poverty to wealth. She sat like a statue staring at the paper as though she were looking through it rather than at it. I asked her what she was thinking about, but she did not hear me. I repeated the question, and, apparently awakening from a dream, she said:

"It doesn't seem possible that uncle, about to die on a boundless ocean, too wrought upon to give my address, could have reached me among the millions of people of the earth."

I did not tell her so, but she soon came to recognise me as the instrument chosen by Providence to find her.

After awhile she rewarded me by giving me herself.

A rural darky in Georgia, of little experience in traveling, presented himself to the ticket agent at the railway station and inquired the price of transportation to Mason. "Three dollars and forty cents," said the agent. "Oo!" exclaimed the darky, "dat shore is high! I'd ruther walk." And off he started. He had not proceeded very far when the train came along, whistling as it neared the station. "Yo' needn't whistle fo' me," muttered the darky, as he trudged along. "I made yo' an offer [illegible] an' yo' wouldn't take it. So yo' [illegible] go on, train. I ain't a-comin'—wif yo'."

LOCAL MARKET TODAY

Heavy roads and colder weather resulted in a smaller market than usual this morning. Consequently prices were higher all round. Eggs were stationary at 70 cents a dozen, although one or two attempted to get 75 cents, but later on came down to the 70-cent level. There were but three people selling chickens on the market this morning. Two were asking 35 cents a pound, and the third, with slightly better looking chickens, asked 40 cents. All classes of meat were up slightly in price, the increase being a cent a pound in most cases. The following were some of the prices being charged this morning:—

Dairy Produce
Butter, pound, 67c and 68c.
Eggs, dozen, 70c and 75c.
Chickens, pound, 35c and 40c.

Meat
Pork, pound, 27c and 29c.
Beef, pound, 18c and 21c.
Lamb, pound, 33c and 35c.

Garden Produce
Potatoes, bag, $4 straight.
Turnips, bag, $1.
Carrots, peck, 40c.
Parsnips, peck, 40c.
Beets, peck, 40c.
Onions, peck, $1.75 and $1.35.
White Beans, quart, 25c.
Cabbage, per head, 15c to 30c.
Apples, peck, 90c.

OBITUARY

GEORGE CLARK.

The death took place at Springville this morning of George Clark, a life-long resident of the district and a well-known and successful farmer. Mr Clark had been suffering from bronchial trouble for more than a year and lately his condition had become much worse so that his end was not unexpected. He was born at Springville 60 years ago on the same farm where he died. He and his brother have worked the same farm all their lives. He never married and took little interest in affairs outside of the farm, but was always looked upon as an expert farmer.

There survive two brothers, J. D. and Martin Clark, and one sister, Mrs. John Burns, all of Springville. The funeral will probable take place on Monday.

THE WEATHER

This morning was ushered in by six degrees below zero, an overcast sky, with hoar frost on the trees and fences. During the night twenty below zero was reached. This will surprise some who were not out, but those who were will not question the figures. A number of people have asked me as to the dates of low temperatures here in Peterboro. The following are the lowest: Feb. 10, 1912, 30 degrees below; Jan 19, 1904, 30 below, Feb. 17, 1896, 28 below; Feb. 18, 1892, 34 degrees below.—W. P.

In lumbering 184 were placed, and in the manufacturing of metals. 100.

In the Women's Department 124 applicants were placed. Of these 59 were in domestic and personal service, and 48 in commercial lines. 185 women were placed in 276 casual jobs

I KNOW IT IS TRUE

About ten years ago a farmer of Dummer Township, well past fifty, was used up with rheumatism. He was cured, and has remained so, by taking Gallagher's Kidney Remedy. If you could only see the splendid herbs—Buchu Leaves, Mandrake Root, Juniper Berries, and many others—al put in a big boiler, steeped, and the tea drawn off, you would say with me that it would be good for one's whole system, whether needing a Kidney Remedy or not. A little Blood Purifier at night to keep the stomach, liver and bowels active, and the Kidney Remedy before meals to keep the kidneys right and help the stomach, and there you are on the road to good health.

NO TRUTH IN RUMOR OF QUARANTINE FOR THE Y

INMATE OF THAT INSTITUTION NOT SUFFERING FROM CONTAGIOUS DISEASE

During the early part of the week one of the residents of the local Y M. C. A. was taken sick and the rumor was current in the city to the effect that the "Y." was to be quarantined. The patient was placed under the supervision of the Medical Health Officer, who yesterday gave him a clean bill of health as far as contagious diseases are concerned. The ailment proved to be merely a severe cold but all precautions were taken by the Y. M. C. A. authorities in case it developed into anything of a more serious nature.

The Young Men's class will meet for a supper at the Y.M.C.A. at 6:45 on Monday evening. There will be the regular speakers for the occasion and a good time is promised for all.

AT KNOX CHURCH TOMORROW

Rev. James Rollins and L. Joffe Will Be the Speakers

The services at Knox Church tomorrow will be conducted as follows: In the morning Mr. L. Joffe will preach. His subject will be "The Quality of Faith, the Bulwark of the Church." Mr. Joffe has spoken on this topic effectively in other cities and it is hoped that thete will be a good turn-out of the members of the congregation.

In the evening the preached will be the Rev. James Rollins, the esteemed pastor of St. Andrews.

AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

Lewis Joffe, Converted Jew, Will Preach in the Evening.

The minister's morning subject will be "Reconstruction."—not from the national but from the individual point of view.

At the evening service, Mr. Lewis Joffe, who has been heard with great acceptance in several of the city churches will preach on "The Crux of Christ."

Mr. Joffe is an Israelite, who accepts Christ as the hope not only of Israel but of the world. This handling of such a subject at the Crux of Christ is bound to be fresh—informing and interesting to the Western world.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE PETERBOROUGH FAIR

Editor Review:— A few years ago it was proposed that the Fair Grounds should be purchased from Mr. R. A Morrow and kept for a permanent fair ground. The matter was submitted to the people and voted on; the result was that the project was snowed under, not because the people disapproved of an agricultural show,—but because they are opposed to paying out their money for what always has been, and what they considered would continue to be a continuing nuisance.

When not in use as a fair ground for three days in each year it was a nuisance.

It consists of 20 acres of land stretching for 1800 feet across the city absolutely dividing the north from the south by a belt of land 436 feet in width closing up all roads and streets. It would close up 160 lots so to be free from city taxes, shutting out improvements of every kind, preventing the erection of a quarter of a million dollars' worth of buildings and making it necessary to travel around this 1800 foot block to go to the south part of the city, or from the south to the north. When not in use for a fair the ground is used for a lot of horsemen to trot horses on, and for a couple of days each summer as a circus ground, and on other days and nights as a rendezvous for tramps and night birds.

Mr. Denne proposed that a lot of money be expended on the ground for new buildings. This will call for money from the taxpayers; every new building will fasten this incubus on the land and make it constantly more costly to keep up and more difficult to pull up stakes. If the city must have a fair, all right, but decide early so that the people won't be hampered Buy 20 or more acres a couple of miles out of town on the line of one of our railways. They go out from the centre thus: South on the old Cobourg and Peterborough line, southeast on the C. P. R., north-west on Lindsay branch west on C. P. R., south on G. T. R. to Millbrook

Surely the fair directors can get suitable land within two miles of the city for one-tenth part of the cost of the Morrow land And such fair ground would not cut the city in two and injure the city.

This present fair ground with its unsightly fence and enclosed darkness is not a good thing for the city. It is no oranment and it hurts all the property around it. I would attempt to controvert all that might be said in favor of a yearly fair, though whether it is forth the cost is another matter.

Let this town not fasten down an eternal nuisance on the shoulders of the city—cut the knot now when it is easy done and you will never cease to be thankful for your act in getting this burden off your shoulders.

RAW SUGAR COSTS LESS

No Excuse, Dealers Say, For Another Increase in Prices.

The opinion among the local retailers as to the possible results of the recent action of the Board of Commerce in releasing sugar from control is that it should not have the effect of increasing the cost of that article to the consumer but was more likely to result in a reduction in price if anything. One retailer gave the information that at the present time the cost of raw sugar was $2 a hundred less than it was a couple of months ago and there was therefore no justification for the refineries to increase prices. Whether they would or not, however, was another question.

GOVERNMENT HAS DECIDED ON ITS NAVAL POLICY MINISTER SAYS

Details of Plan Will Not be Announced at Present Admiral Jellicoe's Report to be Made Public in House—$20,000,000 for Shipbuilding.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 27.—Hon. C. C. Ballantyne, Minister of Marine, stated today that the Government would ask Parliament for a vote of twenty million dollars to complete the Government's mercantile marine shipbuilding program.

The Minister of Marine stated that the Government shipbuilding program called for a total of sixty-two ships. Of these thirty had already been launched, while a number of others were in course of construction.

Question concerning the Government's naval policy, Mr. Ballantyne stated that Admiral Jellico's report is now being printed and will possibly be brought down to the House within a week. He would not say whether the Government proposed introducing any legislation based on the report. All the information he would give was to the effect that the Government had decided on the course it proposed to pursue, but that it was premature to make an announcement at the present time. The naval policy and the new franchise bill were, he said, the most important matters to be brought before the House at the present session.

JOSEPH O'BRIEN USED DRUGS IN SEEKING RELIEF FROM SICKNESS

Herion Was Prescribed for Him by Dr. Carmichael and Another Physician Says Treatment Was Justified—Cases Against Druggist and Physician Adjourned

Police investigation into the traffic in drugs in the city of Peterborough terminated this morning when three charges wer laid in court in connection with the investigation. A charge was laid against Mr. C. A. Moncur, druggist, 407 George street, of having contravened the Opium Drugs Act in that he neglected to keep a complete record of all drug transactions. A charge was also laid against Dr. Duncan Carmichael of signing prescriptions to the order of Joseph O'Brien, for the filing of which drugs were required, such drugs not being needed for medicinal purposes or prescribed for the medical treatment of a person who was under professional treatment by the said physician. The final charge was against Joseph O'Brien, who, it was alleged, had on the 17th of February heroin in his possession, the same not being required for medicinal purposes.

During the course of the investigation Detectives Cookman and Meagher visited every drug store in town and examined the books and records, thus obtaining the information which led to the above charges.

The first charge heard was that against C. A. Moncur, and he was defended by Mr. G. N. Gordon. Detective Cookman was called into the witness box by the Crown. He stated that he had been instructed by the Chief to inspect all the drug books of the druggists in the city, and this had been done. He visited the store of the accused on February 10 and asked to see the poison record book, which was produced for him. He did not see the accused at that time, but knew that he was in the store, because he heard his voice. He wanted to find out what doctors had been prescribing morphine and heroin, but found that this information was not given in the book. There were quite a number of entries for heroin. One of these showed heroin sold to Joseph O'Brien on February 14, 1920.

Crown Attorney Hatton asked if there were any previous entries in O'Brien's name, but at this point Mr. Gordon made a strenuous objection, claiming that the information laid against the defendant had reference to one specific date, and that if it was the purpose of the prosecution to include other dates, he would demand an adjournment to collect evidence in the matter. Crown Attorney Hatton insisted on including the other dates in the charge and amended the charge to read in that way. Mr. Gordon's objection was upheld by Magistrate Dumble and the case was adjourned until Monday, March 1st.

In the case against Dr. Carmichael the Crown Attorney intimated that the same alteration was to be made as in the previous case and Mr. Jos. Wearing acting for the defendant, demanded an adjournment before any evidence had been taken. This was granted until Monday, March 1.

O'Brien Is Discharged.

The last case was that against the only user of drugs apprehended by the police, Joseph O'Brien. He was defended by Mr. Gordon.

Detective Cookman, called by the Crown, stated that he had seen the accused on Hunter street on February 19 and told him that the Chief wanted to see him. He was present at the time when the accused was questioned by Chief Thompson. The Chief asked O'Brien if he had any of the dope in his possession, and he replied that he had used it all up on the 17th. Defendant told the Chief that he had been getting heroin from a number of doctors. Later witness asked if Dr. Wood was not his doctor, and defendant replied that he had been going to Dr. Wood but had lately changed to Dr. Carmichael. Dr. Carmichael had been giving him heroin tablets. Dr. Carmichael also told defendant that he was going to take an X-ray of him. Here the magistrate interjected, asking if that was to find the heroin. Defendant told the Chief that he had been taking heroin for consumption, although he had had no examination yet. The prisoner was under arrest at the time that the Chief questioned him, and had been properly warned. He had been out on bail ever since. Detective Cookman said that he had seen the accused in Fontain's livery stable a couple of days ago. He said that he had quit taking the heroin, but was like a raving lunatic and could not sleep at night. He admitted to the Chief that he had had the drug in his possession on Feb. 17. Cross-examined by Mr. Gordon, witness stated that he knew the defendant had been overseas, and he had also heard last fall that he was suffering from tuberculosis and that he had been in a consumptive sanitarium. He had told the Chief that he used heroin to stop coughing at night.

Mr. Wm. Madill, a well-known druggist, was the next witness called. He produced a prescription numbered 23512 signed by Dr. Carmichael, which called for twenty-four 1-6-grain tablets of heroin for Mr. O'Brien. Witness recognized the signature. He could not identify the prisoner as the person who brought the prescription into the store, and could not be sure whether he or his assistant filled it. He thought that 1-12-grain tablets were used in more cases than 1-6-grain. According to the wording of the prescription, the twenty-four tablets should have lasted the accused twenty-four days.

Dr. T. W. O. Young gave some expert opinion as to the use of drugs. He stated that heroin was a derivative of morphine and was prescribed to take the place of morphia, as it was not so constipating. He did not prescribe heroin as he had been accustomed to prescribing morphia, and saw no reason to change. Heroin was a good drug for its purposes. The size of the dose would

ENGINEERS LOOK OVER SITUATION AT PIGEON LAKE

DEPUTATION FROM PETERBORO AND VICTORIA COUNTIES WAIT ON DEPARTMENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 27.—A large deputation of prominent citizens from Victoria and Peterborough counties waited on the Minister and other officials of the Department of Public Works in the Chateau Laurier this morning with a view to impressing upon them the great necessity of a new bridge over Pidgeon Lake in Peterborough County. It was estimated by the members who spoke that the bridge desired, which would be of a floating type and one mile and a quarter in length, would cost in the neighborhood of $100,000.

The chief speakers for the deputation were Mayor McIntyre, Peterborough; Ald. H. Phelan, S. R. Armstrong, city clerk of Peterborough; George Nicholls, Warden of Peterborough County and Edward M. Elliott, county clerk. The pointed to the great danger of the present structure over Pigeon Lake, which as unsafe for any kind of traffic. They urged the Government to consider the building of a new bridge without delay contending that as the original one had been necessary owing to the operations of Government in the vicinity of the lake it was up to the Department to maintain a new one.

The Minister promised consideration of the application, assuring the members that engineers would be sent to Pigeon Lake without delay.

FRENCH TROOPS IN BATTLE WITH TURKS

ABLE TO EXTICATE THEMSELVES BUT COMPELLED TO BEAT HASTY RETREAT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 27.—Official despatches on the situation at Marash, in Vilayet of Aleppo, Syria, where French troops have been engaged in a severe struggle with Turkish forces, announce that the French succeeded in extricating their contingents after very hard fighting. The French evidently withdrew hastily as they were compelled to leave the wounded, who will be cared for by the American Red Cross. A message from the same source confirms the reports of massacres of the Armenians in the Marash section, but does not substantiate the statement from the Armenian quarters that several thousand were slaughtered.

FOUND LITTLE AMISS IN LONDON ASYLUM

JUDGE MACBETH ISSUES A PRELIMINARY REPORT OF HIS FINDINGS TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Ont., Feb. 27.—The following statement was issued today by Judge Macbeth, who acted as commissioner in investigating the charges made by Harry Lawder at the London Hospital for the Insane. "Investigation at the Ontario Hospital, London, has been adjourned to the 28th instant when statements will be taken of a few persons as to some matters of minor importance. I expect that the inquiry will then be closed and my report made to the Lieutenant-Governor. Reports of the proceedings, which appeared in the daily press, would give to the public an erroneous opinion of the facts disclosed in the evidence. The charge of widespread thriving in connection with the institution broke down completely. There was no evidence of neglect of duty on the part of officials resulting in wrongs or injuries to the patients, or of ill treatment of patients by attendants. No discrimination against returned soldiers has been shown."

PROMPT ANSWER TO PRESIDENT'S NOTE TO THE ALLIES

PREMIER NITTI OF ITALY IS NOW DISPOSED TO BE MORE MODERATE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 27.—Premier Lloyd George and Millerand were able to quickly reply to President Wilson's note relative to the Adriatic through action of Premier Nitti who, anxious to give proof of his moderation, consented to enter into fresh negotiations with M. Trumbitch, the Jugo-Slav Foreign Minister, says Pertinax in the Echo De Paris. The Premiers, therefore hastened to make known this new Italian concession to Mr. Wilson, begging him to use his good offices to facilitate an agreement.

The two premiers, the writer adds, also discussed the Italian zone in Asia Minor, which, he says, will compromise all the western part of that region with the exception of Smyrna and its environs which will be reserved to the direct administration of Greece. The last Greco-Italian exchange of views gave to Italian influence Meander Valley, while Greece was given Karahissar in the Vilayet of Silvas and an important railroad centre on the Bagdad line.

The Supreme Allied Council also considered yesterday morning the answer to observations made by the Hungarian peace delegates to the treaty submitted to that country by the Entente, Pertinax concludes. The Council he understands, maintains the treaty terms in their essentials, particularly the clauses relating to the territory.

MR. BIGGS DENIES REPORT

Corrects Statement as to Highways Made in Morning Paper.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 27.—Hon. F. C. Biggs, Minister of Public Works, this morning declared that the report in a morning paper that he would designate the Talbot route as that to be followed in the London and Windsor section of the Provincial highway, as erronerous. Mr. Biggs sent a telegram of denial to Mayor Brisco, of Chatham, who enquired as to the accuracy of the report.

All But Professional Men Come Under Manitoba Plan.

Winnipeg, Feb. 27.—All employers in business with the exception of professional men, such as doctors, dentists and lawyers, may be required to adopt state insurance, or insure their employes under the Workmen's Compensation Act if the proposed new system to come into effect January 1st, 1921, is adopted.

MINISTERS CONFER IN NEW YORK CITY TODAY

WILL MEET WITH PREMIER BORDEN ON HIS ARRIVAL FROM EUROPE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 27.—It is understood here that a conference will be held in New York today between Sir Robt Borden, Hon. J. A. Calder and Hon J. D. Reid. Dr. Reid is in New York on his way back from Florida and Hon. Mr. Calder left Ottawa for New York two days ago to meet Sir Robert when he lands from the Carmania today. While nothing official is being said as to the conference, it is understood that the ministers will discuss the present situation generally with the Premier and will also place several matters before him for his consideration. Much interest is being evinced in the meeting in political circles here.

GERMAN CULPRITS DECLARE THEY ARE READY FOR TRIAL

BUT INSIST CHARGES AGAINST THEM MUST BE HEARD AT HOME

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Feb. 27.—A number of prominent generals and admirals accused by the Allies of war crimes today issued a declaration, which, while reterating their refusal to appear before a foreign court, expresses the willingness of the men to go to trial before German judgment in whose fairness they declare their confidence. The signers of the declaration are Gen. Ludendorf, former First Quarter Master General; Admiral Alfred Stonierpit, former Minister of the Navy; Gen. Erich Von Falkenpayn, former Chief of Staff; Field Marshal Von K. Luck, Admiral Von Schroeder and numerous other generals and admirals. A German judge, declaration asserts, will proceed according to German law.

"We will only submit to trial conducted in accordance with these principles but now that we know what the enemy accuses us of we expect our trial will be immediately carried out for the preservation of Germany and their own honor," the document continues. "We declare that we are prepared to assume full responsibility for all commands issued to our subordinates."

TO AMEND LABOR ACT AT PRESENT SESSION

CHANGES IN INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES LAW ARE ALREADY DECIDED ON

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 27.—Amendments to the Industrial Disputes Act, which will be introduced into the House this session, have been prepared for final submission to the Cabinet. Pending there discussion by the Council Senator Robertson, Minister of Labor, would not disclose their nature. Labor legislation, based upon the Washington conference which may be introduced during the session, is not yet prepared, it is understood.

ALLIES COUNCIL TO CONSIDER THE COST OF LIVING

PROGRAM WAS AGREED UPON AT SESSION OF THAT BODY TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 27.—Decision by the Allied Supreme Council today to investigate thoroughly the prevailing high prices and the question of exchange will necessitate splitting the conferees into two bodies and continuing the sessions in London at least another week. After preliminary discussions this morning the Council decided to investigate the exchange, the scarcity of commodities, increased production, transports, operation of the "rings" charged with keeping up prices, profits and taxation as it affects prices. Financial questions will be dealt with by the premiers with their official financial and economic advisers augmented from time to time by unofficial experts.

Owing to the importance placed on this investigation, Premier Nitti of Italy has been persuaded to postpone his trip home and Premier Millerand of France has been urged to return to London the moment the French railway strike situation permits.

ANOTHER RISE IN PRICE OF SUGAR LOOKED FOR

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Feb. 27.—The effect of lifting the Government control of sugar prices is as yet uncertain. Officials of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery and the Atlantic Sugar Co. are unable to state what the result will be but an increase in price is expected by them, owing to the shortage of raw material. Big shipments from Cuba, however, will ease the situation in the near future in that respect.

W.R. BREYFOGLE OUTLINES IDEAL CONDITIONS IN BUSINESS LIFE

In Address to Members of Board of Trade on Organization Tells How Employers and Workmen Can Carry on With Harmony and Efficiency.

"If all the employers in the world were of that stamp there would be no necessity for Labor unions, there would be none of this industrial unrest that we hear so much about these days."

That was the remark made by a prominent Labor man last night at the close of the address delivered to members of the Board of Trade by Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, president of the manufacturers' branch of the Board and manager of one of Peterborough's leading industries, the De Laval Works. Mr. Breyfogle spoke from personal experience with the workingmen and with all the authority of a man thoroughly conversant with modern business methods. What he said had all the weight attached to the utterances of the speaker who advocates a system which he has himself exemplified throughout his career in this city. He dealt with actual conditions in his own plant, instead of with fine spun theories. There was nothing recommended in his address that he has not first tested to a satisfactory demonstration himself. The De Laval factory is singularly free from labor troubles. Members of the staff, clerical or mechanical, have always been noted for their loyalty to the company and for a pride in their connection with such an institution. The secret for this condition was disclosed by Mr. Breyfogle last night. There was, however, nothing of egotism in his remarks. He seldom alluded to the concern in which he is interested, but stated general principles, which will in the end bring about the results that have been achieved by at least one industry in this city.

With the outline of a human skeleton hanging on the wall behind him and which he used as a text, Mr. Breyfogle discoursed on the principles of organization, showing how essential it was that all parts of any structure should be complete in its way. He referred to the faithful workman, whom he finds in his own factory, the man who puts his whole soul into his work and whose ambition is to achieve the perfect.

With healthy optimism, Mr. Breyfogle declared that there is no Bolshevism in this city. That is a national disease that is propagated by foreigners, but so far Peterborough has escaped the affliction.

Mr. Breyfogle said that even yet he is fond of dropping into his factory and trying his hand at the machines. There is no joy on earth equal to that of producing something. One of the most touching obituaries he had ever read was the account in the local press of a resident of Omemee, of whom the chronicler said he was in his time one of the best blacksmiths in the country. The late E. B. Harriman, the American railroad magnate, died possessed of an estate worth probably one hundred and fifty millions, and yet the most touching tribute to his memory was paid by a cartoonist who represented him clad in overalls stepping down from the cab of an engine. Under the picture appeared the words, "The End of the Run." It is not the money a man leaves at his death, but the work he has accomplished that should be emphasized by those who live after him. All should strive for results rather than for wealth. Monetary reward will follow faithful effort as a natural result.

Clean surroundings, recreation grounds and the like will do much to keep employes satisfied. The De Laval Company have a bowling team, a skating rink, a baseball club and other athletic organizations, and at present are getting up a minstrel show.

Another secret of success in dealing with men is solved when there is a mutual understanding between the employer and the employed, when the former takes an interest in the home life of the other and in any side lines such as gardening, in which he may be engaged.

There is very little industrial unrest in Peterborough, Mr. Breyfogle was glad to say. One sure way to prevent anything of the kind was to deal with anything like a grievance at once.

The correspondence schools came in for criticism, those institutions that offer for $100 to fit the pupil in six weeks for a $2000 position, which can really be attained only by actual experience. The result is that the disappointed pupil becomes dissatisfied. Mr. Breyfogle recommended that patronage of these schools be discouraged in the interests of harmony.

Turning his attention to local affairs, Mr. Breyfogle said that the street car lines should be extended. It is not fair to ask men living in the suburbs to wade through snow waist deep in order to reach their work. The De Laval people have received repeated assurances from the Hydro Commission that the car track will be extended to their plant, but nothing has come of all these negotiations. Mr. Breyfogle added that in the matter of promises Sir Adam Beck's office in Toronto can put it all over the Land of Canaan.

Not only do the local manufacturers want extension of the street car line, but they stand unitedly for increased housing accommodation. Until more residences are provided, the manufacturers are opposed to seeing any more industries brought to the city as that would mean congestion and dissatisfaction among the improperly lodged workmen.

Mr. Breyfogle had no fault to find with the civic administration. On the contrary he pronounced the present Council a good one. He also took time to say that the local police force is one of the best in America, and added that he is unable to see how they manage to keep the city so free from crime. For this condition the Police Commission are entitled to all praise.

The Fire Department, too, came in for commendation as at present constituted. It took some time to build it up and to provide the necessary equipment, but Mr. Breyfogle believes that the underwriters are now satisfied with the standard that has been attained by the brigade.

This closes the Thursday night meetings of the Board of Trade, gatherings that have proved as interesting and instructive to the members.

BRITISH SET PRICE OF FARMERS' WHEAT

GROWERS ASSURED OF ONE HUNDRED SHILLINGS PER QUARTER FOR CROP

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 27.—The Minister of Agriculture announces that the Government has decided to guarantee the wheat growers of the United Kingdom one hundred shillings per quarter for their produce next year. The Minister says the Government is gravely concerned over the decline in the wheat production of the United Kingdom, which is attributable to state control and the consequent absence of a free market, the result being that almost any other crop gives the farmer a better return.

A quarter of wheat consists of eight bushels. One hundred shillings is equal to about $25 so that the British farmer is assured of over $3 a bushel for his wheat.

A TOTTERING GOVERNMENT.

IT BECOMES more and more apparent that no Coalition Government formed during the war in order to secure co-operative effort and to enlist the services of the best statesmen, regardless of party, can hope to long survive once the war is over. It is true that the Coalition in Britain has been endorsed by the voters since the signing of the armistice, but Lloyd George was astute enough to appeal to the country at the politically pyschological moment, and by so doing secured a snap verdict. The enthusiaum of the electorate, flushed with recent victory, was at fever heat, and besides the election was won on the strength of promises that it is now apparent the Government has no intention of implementing.

Mr. Asquith is in his place again. He is at home in the field now that the world is at peace, and no new vexing problems dealing with international strife are to be considered. Of all domestic problems he is the thorough master. He can take up the work which the breaking out of the war forced him to abandon and the people have faith in his statesmanship. If his election is a personal triumph it is also a damaging blow to the Coalition headed by Lloyd George.

The Westminster Gazette says that in the meantime the difficulty that faces Mr. Lloyd George is to keep his Government together until a favorable opportunity for a general election offers itself. Already the Labor members are leaving the ship which many of its own crew declare to be so unsafe. The resignation of Mr. Barnes and Mr. Roberts is a serious blow to the Coalition. It is probable that Mr. Wardle and Mr. Parker, the Labor Whip, will also leave the Government. If Mr. Lloyd George cannot keep Labor, his value to the Unionist Party is thereby considerably diminished, and the movement within the Unionist Party to get rid of him will grow. Lord Birkenhead is said to be at the head of this cabal and to regard himself as the future leader of the Conservative Party. He has already issued his pronunciamento, which was a very unkind stab at his chief, and if Mr. Lloyd George will not or cannot toe the new line he is to go. Lord Birkenhead is quite capable of believing that he ought to be Prime Minister when his party is in power, and whether the story is true or not, what has occurred points to a growing division between Mr. Lloyd George and the Conservative Party, who are beginning to doubt, with Labor deserting him on one side and the Liberal Coalitionists becoming a moribund party on the other, whether it is worth their while to keep the Prime Minister in office.

The Coalition starts the session divided against itself and as it is advertised to be a house built on very shifty sands it will probably come ignominiously down before long.

LABOR MEN AND POLITICS.

THERE IS DISCORD in the ranks of Organised Labor over in the United States. Sam Gompers, the veteran leader, is now, as he always has been, unalterably opposed to the formation of an independent Labor party. He is still convinced that Labor can achieve more by aligning itself with one or other of the old parties, and by throwing its support to the one which is most in line with the aims of the workingmen.

There is opposition to this policy in all parts of the country. The Detroit Federation of Labor the other night unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the organization of a separate and distinct Labor party in opposition to Sam Gompers and his policy.

The resolution declares that neither of the old parties now have a dependable candidate appealing for the suffrage of the people. It further declares that none of the parties nor candidates now appealing to the American people could be trusted to carry out their pre-election pledges. While no mention was made of the attitude of Mr. Gompers, the resolution declared that the best interets of the American Labor moement would be served by the organization of a Labor party independent of all political organizations now existing.

Probably the Labor men have warrant for their main contention, having been taught by past experience that there is little confidence to be placed in the pre-election promises of a political candidate. But in one case at least they have the advantage over the Labor men in other countries. The term of office of State Legislatures and members of the Lower House of Congress is for two years only. If they fail in their promises, early reprisal on the part of the voters is possible.

Why cannot the Labor men of the United States learn from the experiences of the veterans of the Civil War? That powerful organization never took independent action in State or Federal election, and yet they were given practically all they asked for in the way of paternal legislation and actual representation in Congress and Legislature. Their members were in office everywhere. They held the balance of power for years and employed it to telling purpose. Any attempt at independent action would simply have dissipated their strength and would besides, have alienated the sympathies of the members of the old line parties and solidified against the veterans the opposition of Democrats and Republicans alike.

How long would it have taken the Labor men of Canada, for instance, to have secured by independent political action the adoption of such a law as the Workmen's Compensation Act? The Mothers' Pension Bill, which will be introduced at the coming session of the Legislature, is really a legacy from the late Hearst Government. If that Administration had survived the recent election the bill in question would have been introduced and passed. Coalition is the secret of success in such cases. The members of the Independent Labor party elected to the Legislature last October could by remaining apart have accomplished little, if anything, for their cause. Their one hope was union with another party, and they made the most of the opportunity. Class parties may flourish for a time, but cannot long survive, no matter how sound the principles for which they stand. Numerical strength is what really counts under a system of government that makes the majority supreme.

SPRINGTIME.

(Detroit News.)

THE SUN is coming back. The light creeps up over the hilltops more hopefully in the morning and lingers fondly and promisingly at night in the western sky. It is spring promise. There is the stimulus of courage in the hope of a rejuvenating world.

Let every man take abounding inspiration. Inspiration of sweeter air and sweeter thoughts and purposes and resolves. It is a better time than New Year for resolutions.

And the resolutions must make a cleaner world. The world needs a spring cleaning; its alleys and back yards are full of rubbish. It has been a long, hard winter the old world has had to go through, a winter of bad blood and selfishness and greed and crime and bloodshed; a winter of war more than five years long.

But the spring is coming. It is troubled and stormy and muddy and muddled at times and in places, as spring must always be, but the spring is coming. Look the world squarely in the face and tell it that. Spring is coming. Tell it to every croaker who still talks of more war and greed and hatred. The war is over; the spring of peace is coming.

In spring the forces that make for growth and healing and bloom well up in mighty, irresistible power. Dead things fall away before them and are absorbed in the processes of life. It must be so now. Let all the sanity and good sense and constructive will and healing virtue and forgiveness and benevolence and attaining decision surge upward into world-embracing spring.

And remember this—among the things which this new spring of hope will put away with the rest of the rubbish is the would-be leader who knows nothing but war. The winter of destruction is nearly over; teach us now the works of spring.

AMERICAN CONGRESS DEALING WITH PROBLEM OF BONUSES FOR SOLDIERS

Many Different Plans Have Been Suggested but no Definite Course Has Been Decided Upon.

Washington, Feb. 27.—Republican leaders who have been striving to prevent voting of a soldier bonus at this session of Congress in the interest of the economy record their party is trying to build, have given up the fight. It is now conceded that some form of bonus will be passed in the House of Representatives and there is every indication that it will also pass the Senate.

It has been agreed by the Republican Steering Committee of the House to refer all the 40-odd proposals of compensation for service men to the Committee on Ways and Means, and Chairman Joseph W. Fordney of Michigan and a majority of this committee have pledged themselves to report one of these bills to the House. That such a measure will be passed if the subject ever reaches a vote, no one has ever doubted.

Republican members who have introduced bonus bills have kept the matter constantly before party managers from the time the present session convened, in December. The steering committee stated with a determination to kill off all such legislation, but has given way, step by step, as the force of the demand on them has increased. The recent action of American Legion executives, in sesion at Indianapolis, in making a definite demand for $1,900,000,000 bonus, to be paid in the form of Government bonds at the rate of $50 for every month served in the army or navy during the war, was the final determining factor.

Cash Payment Impossible

As to the form in which the bonus bill will reported, there is till doubt. It is, however, agreed that it will not be in the shape of an immediate cash payment. The absolute impossibility of marketing another large issue of Government bonds, which would be necesary for such a payment, without disruption of the natoinal money market and serious depreciation of present outstanding war bond issues has put such as cash payment out of the qupestion. Not even the returned soldiers themselves have had the temerity to advocate immediate increase in Federal taxation as a way of meeting their demands.

The form of aid which was most generally favored a few months ago was a Government loan to purchase city homes and farm lands. This is the proposal sponsored by Rep Morgan, of Oklahama, who was among the first proponents of the bonus idea but the soldier agitation has now far outgrown this suggestion. Something in the nature of a cash payment, now or hereafter, it appears, is the least the Veteran's organization will now accept.

Consideration of the condition of the treasury and the present high level of taxation has led to the proposal for a bonus in the form of bonds. Mr. Fordney, it is stated favors a non-transferable and non-taxable Government bond running for 25 years and drawing interest at 3 1-2 per cent, and the insurance of these bonds at the rate of $30 for every month of service. This is the proposition favored by the American Legion except that it asks for bonds at the rate of $50 for every month of service.

$240 Or $400 Average

The average term of service is estimated at eight months. On this basis the Fordney proposal would give to soldiers, sailors and marines an average each of $240 in bonds. The American Legion proposal, would give them an average each of $400 in bonds. It is estimated this would entail the issuance of $1,900,000,000 in bonds and would cost the Government $66,500,000 in annual interest with probably an added sinking fund to retire the principal in 25 years.

The Fordney suggestion would entail the issuance of $1,140,000,000 of bonds, costing approximately $40,000,000 in annual interest. While Republicans have been dealing in the bonus agitation and the proposal now seems likely to come before the House as a majority party measure Democrats has contributed largely to force such action.

Democtats have seen in the bonus demand the possibility of defeating the desire of Republicans to make a showing of economy for campaign purposes. Hence the minority members have been quietly egging the bonus agitation on and lending support to force the hand of the Republic Steering Committee.

Many members of Congress would willingly vote for some form of soldier bonus if they could convince themselves that they would thereby fully satisfy the soldier demand. It is very genrally agreed, however that this first raid on the treasury will be only the entering wedge. Once the bonus is voted in the form of bonds it is anticipated the next session of Congress will see a demand for lifting the ban against sale of the bonds by their soldier owners. When this is done and the bonds have been realized into cash, the gratuity demand will come forward in some new form.

ALL IN THE NAME OF THE SOVIET

"In the name of the Soviet." This was the only explanation. It was also the only satisfaction the tradespeople received.

Powerless the wretched shopkeeper would watch the soldiery help themselves to his stocks of foodstuffs. The huge Russian cheeses, flat and round, would be rolled away, like cartwheels, sausages and provisions would be piled indiscriminately together and the looters would swagger away with their plunder.

Experience soon taught the shopkeeper that protest was useless. It was extremely bad policy for anyone to draw down upon himself the attention of the Soviet Government. Especially if he were a man of substance or family. At best it meant imprisonment, more probably much worse.

Nor were the city tradespeople the only persons to suffer. The peasant farmer, with grain in his garners and upon his land and cattle in his barns, soon heard the same dread sentence and saw the fruit of a year's hard toil calmly taken away.

There was no question—or even promise—of payment. It was all in the name of the Soviet.

Not Food and Clothing Only.

Possibly if this policy of confiscation—communization the authorities called it—had stopped at food, fuel and clothing it might have been tolerated. But refugees from Soviet Russia have brought back ugly reports that it did not.

The Grand Duchess Marie, daughter of the late Grand Duke Paul, sister of the Grand Duke Dimitri and cousin to the late Czar, Nicholas II, who escaped to London has a fearful story to tell.

In Soviet Russia, she says, the Central Executive Committee declared the socialization of children for the purpose of bringing them up in the "spirit of Communism."

Torn from their parents before they can speak, they are placed in so-called "children's palaces." In Tula 7,000 children under the age of 10 ere taken from their families. Parents who protested against such aggression were arrested. Many of the unfortunate mothers became insane, others committed suicide. Because of underfeeding and the absence of proper care the death rate among these socialized children is extremely high.

These children are systematically taught to despise parental authority, to indulge in loathsome immorality, to spy on their parents, to denounce them to the Soviet authorities and blaspheme their Maker.

The remarkable thing is that all this has been done by wretched uneducated Russian soldiers who during the war were known for their generosity and kindness toward the fallen foe.

During the last two years of the war B. F. Kospoth wrote a series of exposures of the internal condition of Germany which were startling at the time but were afterwards found to be fullyborne out by the facts.

Mr. Kospoth writes to us from Geneva and his exposure of Soviet conditions in Russia today is based on his own knowledge and information furnished him by hundreds of refugees who found safety and, at least, a measure of comfort in the little republic of Switzerland. He paints a vivid picture of a state of affairs that two years ago would have been regarded by the world as absolutely incredible—the conditions of life that have succeeded the despotism of the Romanoffs, a regime which is now looked back upon by the wretched Russians as almost Paradise itself, by comparison.

Twin Emperors of Russia.

Lenine and Trotsky are still the real rulers—the former austere and mystical, seldom venturing forth, since the attempt was made to assassinate him a year ago; the latter, picturesque and extravagant, travelling in the special trains of the late Emperor and living in the most sumptuous luxury and voluptuousness, surrounded with a body-guard of Chinese and Letts, and attended by a staff of fawning officers in dazzling uniforms. For Trotsky is the military head of Russia, while Lenine is the diplomatic director.

Between the two leaders there is believed to exist the bitterest enmity and it would surprise no one to learn one of these days, that Trotsky's soldiers had shot Lenine. But just now Lenine is necessary to Trotsky to stimulate the superstition of the more illiterate Russians, who think more of the unseen than of the seen.

Bribery and corruption are rampant, Bolshevism has led to the creation of a new class of capitalists whose success is inciting thousands of industrious workmen to leave even their six-hour day and prey upon their fellows. Two years ago Moscow had a population of two million. This has dwindled to 800,000 and of these 300,000 are government employes.

Coffins in Common.

Extravagance is staggering. The budget of Moscow last year equalled the budget of all Russia in 1913. Everything is to be had for money in this first of communistic republics. A passport to go from Moscow to Petrograd costs 10,000 roubles. Permission to remain there costs from 5,000 to 20,000 roubles, the bearer being falsely described as an indispensable employe.

The corrupt Soviet bureaucracy has reduced bribery to a regular commercial enterprise, with fixed prices for the granting of special privileges.

The poorer inhabitants of the cities, meanwhile, fight in the streets for the carcases of horses and dogs, although all luxuries of the season may be bought from employes of the state food department who do a flourishing trade of their own with the foods entrusted to them for distribution.

The spectre of pestilence lurks in every house in Moscow. The daily average death-rate from typhus, cholera and small-pox is as high as two thousand.

There is a coffin-famine. An old woman drearily and lonely drags behind her the coffin containing a dead grandchild. She toils through the filthy streets, up the hill to the cemetery. She opens the coffin, drops the body into a common grave and takes the coffin back for the use of one of her neighbors.

These are merely glimpses of the realistic picture Mr. Kospoth gives us of Russia under the Soviet. Terrifying and saddening enough in all conscience!

And all in the name of the Soviet!

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

The reported approaching marriage of George, ex-Crown Prince of Greece, to Princess Elizabeth of Rumania, has again brought to attention another of the well-known war exiles.

For his present position and permanent exclusion from the throne of Greece, Prince George can blame his father, ex-King Constantine, and his adherence to his father's policy of violation of the constitution of his country and treachery to the Powers bound by treaty to guarantee the integrity and independence of Greece. The explanation is simple. Constantine's wife, and mother of Prince George, ex-Queen Sophia, is sister of the ex-Kaiser William. The Greek court was pro-German, and its policy was to prevent Greece siding with the Allies, the chief of which were the powers that by the Treaty of London of 1830, guaranteed the constitutional government of the people of Greece. Constantine's defiance of his people was borne with until July 12, 1917, when an ultimatum was sent to Greece demanding the expulsion of Constantine, and by the same ultimatum the Crown Prince George was excluded from the succession. George had supported his father's policy and to have placed him on the throne in succession to his father would simply have continued the father's evil regime. Passing over George, the second son of the ex-King Constantine Prince Alexander was chosen King and the choice was sanctioned by the guaranteeing Powers.

Prince George was born on July 19, 1890, and has received some military training. Before the war, when he was the heir to the throne, it was reported that he would marry the Princess Elizabeth of Rumania. It was a love affair, and the adverse fortune of the lover is not, it seems to stand in the way of his intended marriage.

IS LOW CUT GOWN DOOMED?

Is the vogue for low-cut decollette gowns doomed in Canada

Queen Mary frowns upon low cut gowns for afternoon or evening wear and has ordered that long gloves must be worn with the fashionable "baby sleeves" at the Court of James.

It will be remembered that the Prince of Wales made it a point of only dancing with Canadian girls whose gowns were not cut very low.

But it is hard to pursuade women to relinquish a fashion that pleases them.

Queen Victoria undertook to set the fashions for the women of Great Britain of her day. They examined the Queen's models and pronounced with determined unanimity for the fashions which Her Majesty condemned.

R. H. Halbert, Farmer member of the House of Commons for North Ontario, and the first leader of the United Farmers of the Province, announces that the time has come for farm women to set the fashions, and declares that henceforth "there will be less of the decollette business.

Mr. Halbert has put himself on record as being shocked at the decollette costumes worn by city women and has intimated that their country sisters are to set the fashions for them in the future.

Mr. Halbert has a sweeping and tempestuous vocabulary and drives Grits and Tories to cover as a boy drives steers to market. But what does he know about fashions or what fashions women will set? Does he know was is 'decollette' from what is last century Puritan?

He is absolutely wrong in thinking rural women less well or shall one say less becomingly dressed than city women. It is notorious that the country woman of today is usually better and more wisely dressed than her city sister.

Surely Mr. Halbert has taken his notions as to what is being worn from the New York Sunday newspapers or from the movies.

Gowns without sleeves and almost witout bodies may be pictured in the fashion papers, but few women, and no women in the country parts, are wearing them.—The Hostess.

OLD-FASHIONED GAMES

I remember when I was a girl she says, what jolly parties we used to have. We went in for all sorts of games in the evenings and one that never failed to provoke endless laughter was called "Telegrams." Each person is given a piece of paper and a pencil and the ruling spirit—there is always somebody who takes the lead— calls out twelve letters which every one takes down. Then she gives the subject, such as congratulations on a wedding or a birth or telling of an accident, and you have to write out a twelve word telegram. The letters often lend themselves to most ridiculous wording and those with a sense of humor make the most of their opportunities.

Another game which always puzzled people was the "magic guess." It is necessary for the person who goes out of the room to be in league with the person who asks the questions. Whatever article is chosen to be guessed must be decided upon while the person is out of the room and when she comes back the questioner leads her all over the room with "is it this?", or "is is that?". The secret of the trick is. the questioner always puts something black before the article which has been chosen. She may point to a black frame or a black cushion and say, "is it that cushion?"—"No." "Is it that?"—"Yes,' and wonder fills the eyes of like this game and I have seen them playing it after everyone of them knew the secret of it.

Winter evenings can be made such merry things if the game spirit is encouraged.

Two-Party Line Telephone Service

NECESSARY curtailment of new construction during the war, followed by the unprecedented development since the armistice, have resulted in a universal shortage of telephone material.

In order to utilize our supply of equipment to the best advantage, to reduce delay in installations to a minimum, and to avoid refusing service to anyone, we ask those intending to order telephones to consider the advantages of two-party line service.

With the central energy system in use here the operator can ring either of the telephones on a two-party line without disturbing the other. The cost to the user is substantially lower than for individual line service.

The rate for two-party line service is for Business telephones, $26.40, and for Residence, $22.00 per annum.

We will be glad to furnish full information to anyone interested.

READY FOR LIQUOR VOTE

Sask. to Take Referendum Either in April or May.

Regina, Feb. 27. — Indications point to the likelihood of the prohibition plebiscite being taken in this Province about the last week in April or the first week in May provided the Federal Government adheres strictly to the provision of the Canada Temperance Act and provided there is no vital amendment to the Act at the pending session of the Dominion House

TO CONTROL LIQUOR PRICE

Power May be Given to the Board of Commerce.

Toronto, Feb. 27.—Application by the Ontario Government, to have whiskey brought within the jurisdiction of the Board of Commerce may be an outcome of the increase in prices recently put into effect by the Corby Distillery Company. J. D. Flavelle, chairman of the Ontario License Commission stated that the question had been brought before the License Commission, and that he had forwarded to Hon. H. C. Nixon, Provincial Secretary, a recommendation that action to secure a reduction in the price of the whiskey in question, be taken.

CARBON MAKES MOTOR KNOCK

Waste-Clogged Liver and Bowels Cause Thumping Head and Other Misery. Take "Cascarets"

Like carbon clogs and chokes a motor, so the excess bile in liver, and the constipated waste in the bowels, produce foggy brains, headache, sour, acid stomach, indigestion, yellow skin, sleepless nights, and bad colds. Let gentle, harmless "Cascarets" rid the system of the toxins, acids, gases, and poisons which are keeping you upset.

Take Cascarets and enoy the nicest, gentlest laxative-cathartic you ever experienjced. Cascarets never gripe, sicken, or cause inconvenience. They work while you sleep. They cost so little too.

SCHOOL TEACHERS HAPPY

Those in Georgetown Receive 25 Per Cent. Increase.

Georgetown, Feb. 27.—The Board of Education has given a 25 per cent. increase in salary to all public school teachers here. During the past year there has been a marked increase in number of pupils attending and the growth of the town this year promises to be much greater.

Rub Backache Away.

Back hurt you? Can't straighten up without feeling sudden pains, sharp aches and twinges? Now listen! That's lumbago, sciatica or maybe from a strain, and you'll get blessed relief the moment you rub your back with soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil." Nothing else takes out soreness, lameness and stiffness so quickly. You simply rub it on and out comes the pain. It is perfectly harmless and doesn't burn or discolor the skin.

Limber up! Don't suffer! Get a small trial bottle from any drug store, and after using it just once, you'll forget that you ever had backache, lumbago or sciatica, because your back will never hurt or cause any more misery. It never disappoints and has been recommended for 60 years.

HELD IN TRUST

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Sailing from London for America my baggage was carried on board by a steward. One of my pieces—a wicker extension case—had no mark on it, but finding one exactly like mine I carried it to my stateroom

I had no occasion to look into this case till we had been out half the voyage, or four days. When I did I met with a surprise. It was filled with articles used by a woman. Realizing that I had changed baggage with some one, I looked over the contents to discover a name or something by which I might return it to its owner and get mine. Here again I met with a surprise. I found no mark, but came upon numerous little boxes containing jewels which were evidently very valuable. Here was a subject for a job of thinking.

Had the lady placed the jewels there merely to convey them, or did this placing them in a frail and unlocked receptacle indicate that she intended to smuggle them into America? Had they come into my possession through an error, or was I to be used as the smuggler? All the thinking I did on the matter did not solve it. The only thing I could do was to go to the purser and if any one notified him of the loss of a wicker extension case to let me know. The ship having been out four days and no one having reported such a loss, the inference seemed to be either that the lady, supposing that she had her own case, had not examined its contents or—well, the only other supposition was that she would use me for a purpose. I must await developments.

The trip was a pleasant one to me, for I made some agreeable acquaintances. There were a Mrs. Harbeson and her daughter aboard, who sat a great deal on deck. A gentleman who was with them at times I met in the smoking room. We fell to talking one day about the run of the ship and thus became acquainted. Passing the ladies I have mentioned while he was with them, he made a remark to me which led to an introduction to his friends. The mother was quite cordial, but the daughter seemed a trifle ill at ease. However, since she was a pretty girl I labored to make myself entertaining and succeeded in doing away somewhat with her embarrassment or whatever it might be.

I was too circumspect to say a word to any one about my find. I left the jewels where they were in the case, which I shoved under my berth. Not knowing what trouble I might get into in the matter, I preferred, if accused, to be able to take any position that might be for the best. But my intention was to tell the truth.

The day before reaching port I concluded that I must take some action with reference to the goods, which I did not doubt had either been stolen or were to be smuggled, or both, and, going to my stateroom and locking the door, I pulled out the extension case and lifted the top. What was my astonishment to see that it contained my own belongings and did not contain any other property.

There was a mystery indeed. How the jewels came into my possession I did not know; how they left me I did not know. But it was evident that two exchanges had been made and the second one having been purposely accomplished, it was evident that some game was going on. But it seemed to me now that I should never receive an explanation of the incident. Nevertheless I felt relieved that the property had passed out of my possession. Indeed, I had about made up my mind before leaving the ship to turn it over to the purser.

The Harbesons, Mr. Etheridge, the man who introduced me to them, and I all made rapid progress in becoming intimate and before reaching port agreed that we should meet on the evening of our arrival for dinner at a certain uptown restaurant. We bid each other goodby at the dock at noon, and at 7, attired in dinner costume, I met my friends in a private dining room. I was received cordially, especially by the ladies, and after getting warmed up with wine Mrs. Harbeson said to me:

"I have something to tell you provided you will promise to take no advantage of it."

I looked at her sharply. It struck me at once that she knew something about my find on shipboard. I made the required promise.

"My daughter and I," said the lady, "have done a good deal of smuggling, not for profit, but to save money on what we bring from abroad. We stopped at the same hotel as you in London. Believing that we were suspected by a detective on the other side and having some $20,000 worth of jewels to get through the New York customs house free of duty, we were at our wits' end.

"My daughter, passing along a corridor, heard you order your baggage taken to the steamer. You left your room unlocked. She went in and saw your wicker case. We had its duplicate. She put the jewels in ours, carried it to your room and took yours away.

"On the ship we asked Mr. Etheridge to bring you and introduce you that we might the better keep track of one who held our property in trust, and it was he who made the second exchange. Having baffled the detective on the other side, we knew how to fool the customs men in New York."

Sunday Golf.

A certain parson, who had lost the golf club cup after a most exciting finish on the Saturday afternoon, electrified his congregation next day by this variant of the well-known text: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose the last hole!"—Tit-Bits.

Plenty of Redwood.

The annual production of redwood in California is about 320,000,000 feet and at the present rate the timber is being destroyed, it is estimated that enough standing timber remains to last for 150 years.

Drought Broken.

Two Scots were on a journey on a hot summer day. "Hae ye any food wi' ye, McNab?" asked one.

"Ou, ay, a bottle of beer. What hae you, McAllister?"

"Dried tongue."

"Guid! Then we'll gae halves wi' oor proveesions."

The beer was duly divided and drunk. McNab wiped his whiskers: "Noo for yer dry tongue, McAllister!"

"Mon," said McAllister, it's no dry noo!"

How He Felt.

"Has my husband appeared to miss me during the month I have been away, Mary?"

"Well, ma'am, at first he seemed in very high spirits, but toward the end of the time he became less cheerful, and yesterday, ma'am, he was just miserable."

Deals by [illegible]

Long as it is since deals were usually effected by barter money still does not enter into much of the business done in rural parts of Great Britain. The most general transaction by this system is grinding corn. Gleaners instead of paying the miller for converting their wheat into flour or barley into meal allow him to retain a certain proportion of the grain, and in Wales even farmers commonly do likewise. Village blacksmiths in Wales have many similar deals. Frequently one gets a neighboring farmer to haul him a load of coal to his smithy, and thus becomes indebted to him for so many hours' work, the number depending on the distance and whether more than one horse is employed. If before the next harvest the farmer requires any smithy work done the debt may be wiped out, but if it is still owing then the smith discharges it by going into the harvest field himself.—Pearson's Weekly.

Witchery of a Barn.

There is a spirit of poetry about a barn, and unconsciously men are touched by it. In youth it kindles our imagination and fosters our susceptibility to the simple beauty of common things; daybreak, with the fresh sweetness of the wet grass about us as we go up the path toward the great barn still darkly silhouetted against the brightening sky, with the weathercock, high up against the topmost band of pink, pointing to clear. With the opening of the barn door the day's work begins; the horse whinnies at the sound for his corn; the cattle move expectantly in their stanchion rows; the chickens cackle and cluck in the hayloft as they drop fluttering to the floor. Day has begun—day, with all its activities, with all its commonplaceness, with all its mysteries. Something of all this we feel unknowingly as we pull back the heavy bolt and throw open the barn door.—Suburban Life.

Elephants' Tusks.

The largest tusks of Indian elephants measure not over four or five feet in length, outside curve, and about sixteen inches in circumference at the gum and weigh about seventy-four pounds. The tusks, except those of very aged elephants, are solid only for a portion of their length. The hollow is filled with firm, bloody pulp. In young animals the tusks are solid only for a portion of their length even outside the gum and are hollow throughout the embedded portion. With age the pulp cavity decreases in depth till in very old animals it becomes almost obliterated.

CAVAN

(Special Correspondence.)

Cavan, Feb. 27.—The many friends of Mrs. Will. Tinney will be very sorry to learn of her death, which took place on Feb. 21st. Mrs. Tinney underwent an operation a week before and from the first very slight hopes were entertained for her recovery. Mrs. Tinney was formerly Miss Keegan, of Cavan, and leaves several sisters and brothers to mourn her loss to whom, along with her bereaved husband, all extend their deepest sympathy. The funeral took place on Tuesday to the Ninth Line Cemetery and was very largely attended.

Mr. Thomas Beatty, of Otonabee spent Monday with Cavan friends.

Mr. John White, who has had the Howson farm rented for the past ten years, has given up farming and intends moving to Cavanville, having purchased Mrs. Whitefield's residence. Mr. White had an auction sale of his stock and implements last Monday.

Mrs. Nill, Sr., is visiting in Cold Springs.

Mrs. H. Lough, of Toronto, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. John White.

Among those from a distance who attended the funeral of the late Mrs Tinney were Mr. and Mrs. T. Staples of Hamilton; Mr. and Mrs. Casey Valentis; Mrs. Birchard, of Coboconk; Mrs. Ida Ray, of Toronto; Miss Swain, of Toronto; Mrs. Tinney of Cobourg, and Mr. Edgar Burnnam of Peterborough.

Mr Mumford spent the week-end in Toronto.

Mrs. R. Hooton, of Fairmount, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. James Douglas.

Mrs. Whitefield is visiting her daughter in Oshawa.

Mr. Martin, of Toronto, is spending a few days with his sons here.

Mrs. Armstrong, of Manvers, spent the week-end with Mr. and Mrs. Jno. White.

Mr. Gusty Howden, of Peterborough, spent the week-end with friends here.

ALBERTA COAL FOR ONTARIO

Prairie Province Last Year Sent Over 600 Tons.

Calgary, Feb. 27. — Alberta hopes to develop a coal market in Ontario this year. The mines of this Province can produce more than enough coal to supply the whole Dominion but of course adverse freight rates prevent shipments east of the Great Lakes. Not until there is an all water route from Alberta to Ontario can there be any large movement of coal to the eastern province. However, just to show that coal can be shipped, orders in Ontario to the extent of 620 tons were filled last year. This was about double the tonnage of 1918. Saskatchewan was Alberta's biggest customer, taking 1,115,329 tons; Manitoba, 314,290; British Columbia, 95,461, and the United States 121,212 tons. However, the total production, owing to labor troubles, was considerably under that of 1918.

JANE ADDAMS IS NOT GOING TO TORONTO

INVITATION TO SPEAK AT THE UNIVERSITY HAS BEEN WITHDRAWN

Toronto, Feb. 27.—"As it is pretty well recognized that Miss Addams' visit would be the occasion of some form of disturbance or protest out of consideration for her, we have decided that the wisest plan would be to withdraw the invitation indefinitely," said Prof. R. M. MacIver, acting director of the Social Service Department of the University of Toronto.

Miss Jane Addams, of Chicago, a noted authority on social service work had been invited to address the Social Service Department of the university. Several Toronto organizations objected to the invitation extended to Miss Addams, because of the attitude that she is said to have assumed in the United States in relation to the war, and the participation of that country in the conflict. As a result the invitation has been cancelled.

Prof. MacIver does not look with approval on some of the objections to Miss Addams and her address to the Social Service Department of the university, because she was to discuss no other subject than social settlement work on which subject, he states, she is an undoubted authority.

Two chauffeurs in Salem, Mass. meeting at night with the snow on either side banked so high neither could turn out tossed a coin. The loser backed his car half-a-mile till he came to a space wide enough to let the other fellow by.

"DANDERINE" FOR FALLING HAIR

To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a small bottle of delightful "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter for a few cents, pour a little in your hand and rub it into the scalp. After several applications the hair usually stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff. Help your hair grow strong, thick and long and become soft, glossy and twice as beautiful and abundant.

TO DO WITHOUT BANKS

Manitoba Will Finance Rural Credits Without Bankers' Help.

Winnipeg, Feb. 27. — George W. Prout, M.P.P., Administrator of the Rural Credits Act, stated that as a result of a deadlock between the bankers and the administration department of the rural credits societies, amendments to the Rural Credits Act will be introduced to empower this department to open deposit credits and dispense with the financial assistance of the banks entirely. The banks refused to advance money at six per cent. and demand an increase of half per cent.

WHY PASTOR QUIT CHURCH

Rev. F. W. Hollinrake Says Forward Movement Decided Him

Hamilton, Feb. 27.—Rev. F. W. Hollinrake, who is withdrawing at the end of the present year as pastor of the Barton street Methodist church and also from the Methodist denomination, issues a statement giving his reasons. He believes in Premillenialism, which he says the Methodist Church seeks to wipe out as a noxious weed. The church, he thinks, is too much encumbered with machinery that hampers spiritual development. He does not approve of the church's social service work. The Forward Movement he calls the last straw.

"The Devil," he says, "is not alarmed at any or all drives for money, but put on a determined, prayerful drive or souls and see him show his rage!"

THE WEATHER

Some poet (his name I do not now recall) speaks of "Winter lingering in the lap of Spring." While Spring may not be here yet, according to the almanac, yet the season should be making its influence felt by this date. This morning the thermometer was 13 degrees below zero. No lower was reached during the night. Milder conditions are on the way.—W. P.

BARTENDER FLASHING ROLL LANDS IN JAIL

LAVISH EXPENDITURES OF PERFECTLY SOBER YOUNG MAN LEADS TO ARREST

Kansas City, Mr., Feb. 20. — A messenger carried a pair of trousers to a tailor shop and received a $20 fee, a housemaid cleaned up a hotel room and got a $50 tip, a bell boy carried ice water and was given $100. The manager of the Midwest Hotel noted these things. He found an excuse to smell the breath of the guest and pronounced him strictly sober. Then he called the police.

The spender gave his name as J. B. Cavanagh, his age 33, his occupation as former bartender, his Home New York, his destination Los Angeles.

"I made plenty of money the last few months," Cavanagh told the police. "I'm on my way out west to spend it."

He had a round trip ticket from New York to Los Angeles, a roll of new money totalling $2,000 and change in every pocket. He wore diamonds.

The best room in the jail was turned over to him, and Headquarters attaches are showering him with attention.

ANXIOUS ABOUT HOUSING

Ald. Mrs. Hamilton Wants Housing Commission Work Carried On.

Toronto, Feb. 27.—Ald. Mrs. Hamilton, having failed to get the City Council to linger late enough to listen to her motion regarding the carrying on of the Toronto Housing Commission work, came before the Board of Control and was given a hearing.

"It is said that the Housing Commission may close up its work, and I want to know if anything is being done in the way of town planning," said she.

"Better read the Housing Commission's report first and then we'll see what can be done," said the Mayor, and he persuaded the lady alderman to wait a while.

Auto sales of $4,000,000 were made in one day at the Detroit auto show.

PARSON, SHOCKED BY WAX MODEL, CALLS SHERIFF

SEMI-NUDE FEMALE FIGURE IN SHOP WINDOW CAUSE OF TROUBLE

Oklahoma, City., Feb 27.— "She" was clad in those dainty, lacy, filmy "unmentionables" that are oh! so unfamiliar to mere man and "she," in her waxen loveliness occupied a most prominent place in a large show window.

"He"—the Rev. R. U. H. Hawkins—passed by and noticed that all the young fellows cast sidelong glances at "she" and that all the women stared enviously.

Rev. Mr. Hawkins was shocked Nudity paraded on the main street of Oklahoma City. He remonstrated with the shopkeepers unsuccessfully. He appealed to the sheriff successfully.

Ray Young, the window trimmer was arrested on a charge of "indecent exposure of models," and the sheriff was ordered to remove the model from the window. The sheriff demurred, mentioning the embarrassment of carrying the waxen lady down the street. There was a compromise and the model was placed in the shop basement until the court can determine her "fitness."

Young was released on $300 bond pending his appearance in county court.

WIFE, SON, AND DAUGHTER SHARE INCOME DURING FORMER'S LIFE

Ottawa, Feb. 27.—The will of the late Hon. Frank Cochrane has been probated at Ottawa. The inventory and valuation of the estate shows that deceased left property of a total value of $449,190.74 against which are set debts amounting to $[illegible] 315.81.

Subject to the payment of debts, funeral expenses, testamentary expenses, the trustees stand possessed of the estate on the following terms: To pay one-half of income to Mrs. Cochrane during her life; to pay one quarter of the income to his daughter, Edith Cochrane, during the life of Mrs. Cochrane; to pay one quarter of the income to his son, Wilbur, during the life of Mrs. Cochrane; from and after the death of Mrs. Cochrane to divide the assets equally between the said Wilbur and Edith. The will was dated July 17, 1919.

: : AT THE GRAND : :

Bessie Barriscale is starring at the Grand today in an original photodrama of an English girl reared in the harem of an Arab, who was unexpectedly linked to the English aristocracy. A child of the wild Bedouin tribes of Egypt raids a caravan and the sole survivor is a baby girl. Recognizing that some day she will become a great beauty the chief raises her and gives instructions that she is to receive all the necessary learning so that she will fetch a high price in the slave market.

Some years later Sir Dereck Anstruthers, a society idler, is visiting Cairo when he accidently meets Sheka, and both are drawn towards each other. However, a so-called friend of Anstruthers, Vincent, a soldier of fortune becomes jealous and informs the chief of what is going on. The next day Sheka is taken to a secret slave market and put up for auction. Both Sir Anstruthers and Vincent get wind of it and appear at the market in disguise. After bidding against each other a quarrel breaks out between them and Vincent is injured. Anstruthers and Sheka escape through a secret door which the chief shows them and they are married at the first consul's office.

The scene then changes to London where Diana, an old lover of Anstruthers, who had visions of being Lady Anstruthers herself, commences to make mischief. By different guises she takes up much of Sir Anstruthers' time and at the same time the Duke of Wryden, an old bachelor takes quite a fancy to Sheka. One day in the garden he is intent on examining a ring on her finger when Lady Diana brings Sir Anstruthers upon them.

Through some speculating Sir Anstruthers is brought to the brink of ruin and his financial cares keep him from home much of the time. Sheka blames Diana and goes to confront her with it. In reply Diana tells her that it is money that Anstruthers wants and not a "crying, snivelling woman." This statement takes Sheka by surprise and when Anstruthers later tells her that he would give anything he possessed for ten thousand pounds she takes him at his word and goes to the Duke and offers to fly with him if he will send Anstruthers that amount. In the meantime the Duke has made a trip to Cairo and learned of Sheka's history from the Arab chief. He writes a cheque for the money and has just given it to her when Anstruthers arrives in a rage. At this point the Duke shows a ring belonging to his family which corresponds to the ring on Sheka's finger and announces that Sheka is his niece, the daughter of his sister who was lost in Egypt years ago. He also announces that the cheque for ten thousand pounds is merely an advance on her legacy of two hundred thousand pounds. The play is interesting, exciting all way through. It will be repeated tonight.

WEDDING SUPERSTITIONS

Some people in England conside the best time to be married before breakfast between 8 and 9 o'clock.

For a wedding to turn out well the contract must be signed before noon.

In the Orkney Islands the bride selects her wedding day so that its evening may have a growing moon and a flowing tide.

Ovid says:

Let maid or widow that would turn a wife
Avoid the scorn that's dangerous to life;
If you will mind old saws, mind this,
I say:
'Tis bad to marry in the month of May.

A couple married on the Fourth of July will live a life that is largely homeless.

She Doesn't Shut Up.

Mr. Flatte—Did you hear what he called his wife?

Mrs. Flatte—No.

"A delicate little plant."

"Well?"

"Why, delicate little plants generally shut up during a storm."—Yonkers Statesman.

Art in the Soup.

The artist's wife leaned over and looked at her husband's soup after she had handed it to him.

"Oh," she cried, "look at the scroll the fat has made in your soup. Isn't it artistic? Don't eat it. It is so beautiful!"

There has been much correspondence between the American Vice-Consul at Melbourne, Australia, and the Bureau of Entomology, Department of Agriculture, over the complaint that American packing cases and other wooden goods bored by insects are arriving in Australia. The latest report on the matter is by Dr. A. D. Hopkins, Forest Entomologist, who writes:

"Evidently the damage is due to powder-post insects of one or two types or a combination of the two—either a large round-headed borer that infests logs before they are worked up into lumber and continues to work in the wood after it is finished; or Lyctus powder-post the sapwood of seasoned ash, hickory, oak and other hardwoods. Lyctus powder-post beetles are as a rule cosmopolitan insects, and while it is an excellent plan to prevent their introduction from the United States into Australia, from the nature of the products that they attack these insects are already pretty well distributed throughout the world. Insects of this latter type are doubtless those which injured the American pick and axe handles, referred to in the Vice-Consul's report.

"Danger from the introduction of powder-post beetles in packing cases can be prevented by the use of heartwood material of ash, eliminating all sapwood, or by using yellow pine or other soft wood that these insects do not attack.

"Packing cases, boxes, etc., that are found upon arrival of shipments to be infested with insects should be [illegible]."

Totally Different.

"I heard that your engagement to Adela has been broken, and I presume that it was caused by your feeling of delicacy at hearing that she had inherited a large fortune."

A water power method has been invented in Europe for breaking down rock in masses instead of crumbling it with blasting.

A Bit of Forestry.

"Do you know how to tell a hard wood tree from a soft wood tree?" said a forester. "I'll tell you how to do it, and the rule holds good not only here among our familiar pines and walnuts, but in the antipodes among the strangest banyans, baobabs and whatnots. Soft wood trees have needle leaves, slim, narrow, almost uniform in breadth. If you don't believe me consult the pine, the spruce or the fir. Hard wood trees have broad leaves of various shape—the oak, the elm, the walnut, the mahogany and so on."

Duchess of Marlborough Takes an Active Interest In English Public Life

CONSUELO, Duchess of Marlborough, is probably the best known of the American women married to British peers, next to Lady Astor, of course, who will go down in the history of the Mother of Parliaments as the first woman who ever sat in that legislative assembly. The Duchess of Marlborough was the daughter of W. K. Vanderbilt, of New York, and her marriage, in 1895, to the ninth Duke of Marlborough was one of the most brilliant social events that New York has ever seen. Other English noblemen had married American heiresses, but this young man was outstanding as the representative of one of the most famous of noble British houses. Then, Consuelo Vanderbilt had long been a social favorite in her own country, and her wedding was bound to arouse interest. The American duchess soon became a favorite in the Old Land, and her vivacity and wit made her a conspicuous figure in the British court during the reign of King Edward VII, who displayed a great liking for her. The life of the Duchess of Marlborough was not all sunshine. She gave her husband an heir to the title. In fact she was the mother of two sons, but rumor got abroad that the domestic life at Blenheim was not always unruffled. The Duke of Marlborough has none of the brilliancy of his great ancestor. In fact, in public affairs the ninth duke has shown himself a decided mediocrity. In recent years, however, his wife has become more and more interested in the social and public affairs of her adopted country. During the war she was particularly interested in the babies of England, and she started a jewel fund for the establishment of a greater number of maternity and infant welfare centres. To this fund she gave lavish donations of her own jewels. The Duchess of Marlborough has also been elected to the London County Council, and it has been said that she would like to follow her fellow-countrywoman into the House of Commons.

DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH.

"House Law."

Unlike the Hapsburgs and the Hohenzollerns, the British Royal Family have no "house law," and, no matter how vexing they may have been, the sovereign has no power to place his relatives under arrest (as was done with the Crown Prince of Roumania when he married against the regal will). But the British law gives the monarch larger powers than any other head of a family in supervising matrimony. George III. was driven nearly to distraction by the marriages of his brothers, the Duke of Cumberland and the Duke of Gloucester, though both brides came from the titled aristocracy, and in 1772 he induced Parliament to pass the Royal Marriages Act. Under this no descendant of George II. (except the issues of princesses marrying into foreign families) is capable of contracting matrimoney without the consent of the reigning sovereign, subject to a rather important saving which the wisdom of Parliament dictated. A member of the royal family may marry in spite of the sovereign's veto if he or she has reached the age of twenty-five and has given twelve months' notice to the Privy Council. Where these conditions are fulfilled the marriage is valid, unless both Houses of Parliament declare their disapproval.

Extending Genoa's Port Plan.

Port development in Italy is apparently to be standardized by extending to other ports the system inaugurated at Genoa by the establishment, fifteen years, or more, ago, of the Consorzio Autonomo del Porto di Genova. Governmental decrees, at any rate, have just been signed providing for similar management and development at Spezia and Savona, and the Consorzio Autonomo thus receives the seal of approval as an effective organization for looking after the affairs of a port. Foreign shipping, however, will probably hope that the new organizations will accomplish somewhat different results, for Genoa is nowadays one of the most expensive ports in the world, both in port charges and the length of time required for loading and unloading a cargo. On the other hand, the Consorzio Autonomo has proved itself an efficient financial manager and developer of dock and harbor improvements.

PYRAMID IN MEXICO.

It Will Rival Famous Piles of Egypt.

A pyramid that may rival those of Egypt, for size, and prove to be even older than the Nilesian piles, is reported discovered at Teotihuacan, Mexico.

"Long ago two other pyramids, relics of the Toltec people of pre-Columbian times, were found among the volcanic ashes around San Juan Teotihuacan, meaning 'City of the Gods,' a village about 25 miles northeast of Mexico City," says a bulletin of the National Geographic Society of the United States.

"Excavation of the new pyramid may help to lift the veil which dims our knowledge of these American pyramid-builders, members of a bygone race.

"Certain it is that the pyramids of Teotihuacan, which already are widely known, have kept their heads above the vomiting of angry volcanoes for numberless centuries, while it would appear that the cities nearby were without doubt buried in those bygone ages by volcanic eruptions. The Toltecs were by tradition famous mound-builders, and here it seems they mingled with their reverence for the Supreme Being the mythical religions of astral worship. Their earliest temples were devoted to the sun. The moon they worshipped as his wife and the stars as his sisters. No image was allowed within these temples, and their offerings were perfumed flowers and sweet-scented gums.

"The projecting stones of 'El Sol,' the highest pyramid, seen here and there over the pyramid, mark the upward progress of those indefatigable workers until they gained the summit of their ambition. The pyramid was divided into stories by placing a series of truncated pyramids one above the other.

"Two hundred and sixty-eight steps must be climbed to reach the summit. The pyramid is 216 feet in height, and has a base about 761 feet square. The summit is 59 by 105 feet square.

"Many strange idols have been dug up—Dioses of grotesque form and many others. Many beautiful pieces of jade and obsidian, arrow heads, little heads of burnt clay, eathen jars of antique form, and others similar to those in use at the present time. One little piece of cloth that was found is carefully guarded in the museum. What was its use? Many skulls, as well as some skeletons, have also been unearthed.

"Reaching the summit, one is richly rewarded, for a fine expanse of country lies unfolded to the gaze, with just a peep of the snow-capped valcano Popocatepetl far in the distance, while yonder the little town of San Juan appears sleepily dreaming under the shadow of the pyramids. Turning to the right, not far distant stands the Pyramid of the Moon (la Luna), smaller than the 'Sun Pyramid,' but looking very green and attractive, covered yet with its mantle of grass, heavy underbrush, and trees."

The great fire of London in 1666 started in a house on Pudding lane and ended at Piecrust alley. Thirteen thousand two hundred houses were burned, including eighty-nine churches.

When She Would Return.

"I saw your mother going to one of the neighbors as I crossed the street," said the lady caller to her friend's little son. "Do you know when she will be back?"

"No need to speak of that in the past tense," replied her husband meekly.—Philadelphia Ledger.

JOSEPH O'BRIEN

depend on the condition of the patient and how long he had been taking it. If the patient was addicted to the use of drugs, more would be required, and also his disease would have to be considered. One-sixth-grain were the largest doses put up in tablet form. It was quite possible for a patient to take a dose every two hours until relief was felt. He thought there were more drugs being used since prohibition came into force.

In reply to a question put by Mr. Gordon, witness stated that if a patient was suffering from tuberculosis the ordinary patient. As the patient he would require larger doses than got worse and also got used to the drug, larger doses would be required. It was not contrary to good medical practice to give a patient heroin to make him sleep or relieve his cough. That was the correct use of the drug.

The last witness called was Dr. Carmichael, who issued the prescription to the defendant. He said he had examined Joseph O'Brein and found that he was suffering from tuberculosis of the throat and lungs. He learned from defendant himself that he had been suffering from the disease in England and had been in a sanitarium there for treatment. On Feb. 17 he gave accused a prescription for heroin to relieve his cough and allow him to sleep at night. He agreed with Dr. Young as to the use of heroin. From the history of O'Brien, he thought that he might have used the prescription in 24 hours without any serious efects. He did not know of anything that would take the place of heroin for the purpose for which he prescribed it. The defendant told him on his first visit that he had been to Kingston to get into the sanitorium there but that he had been sent back to wait until there was room for him. The witness pointed out that nealy all cough mixtures contained some opiate preparation in them. As far as he knew the defendant had been to his office four times. The examination had taken place on the first visit, but he could not say the exact date. The first prescription that he gave the defendant was for 1 1-2 grain tablets. He could not tell how long it was before the second visit, but it could not have been less than a week as he would not have issued a second prescription in that time. All transactions between himself and O'Brien had been for cash and therefore no record had been kept of them. From what he knew of O'Brien since he would not think that 10 tablets for one day would be serious, but if kept up for 20 days, the patient would have to be addicted to the drug to be able to stand it and he would not knowingly prescribe such a dose.

Mr. Gorden, in closing the defence said that tuberculosis had made O'Brien seek some sort of relief not caring what the means of that relief was. He had been examined by a competent physician and a prescription had been granted. The crown had not shown an improper use of the drug and the defendant had a reasonable excuse for its use.

The magistrate said that before he could convict there would have to be overwhelming professional opinion as to the prisoner's use of the drug and as the Crown had not made a case the defendant was dismissed

VINCENT EASTWOOD JR. VICTIM OF ACCIDENT

AUTOMATIC REVOLVER EXPLODED IN POCKET AND BULLET PNETRATES LEG

Mr. Vincent Eastwood, Jr., was the victim of a painful accident yesterday out at Chemong Park when an automatic revolver in his pocket exploded, the bullet penetrating his left leg. He is resting easily today at his home, but it is too early to estimate the real extent of the injury.

Mr. Eastwood was ski-ing at the Park yesterday afternoon and was alone at the time. On his way home when he had reached the Chemong road he thrust his hands into his pockets to warm them. The revolver went off just as soon as he touched it. The injured man made his way alone to the house of a farmer and the latter drove him to his home in this city. He was given the best of medical care and the bullet was found in his clothing, having completely penetrated the limb.

Mr. Eastwood is a veteran of the late war where he won distinction and badges of gallant service.

THE MARIE CELESTE.

Strange Case of Ship Deserted at Sea.

No mysteries are more stimulating to the imagination than those of which the sea alone holds the answer, and there probably never has been a sea enigma more intriguing than that involving the fate of the human beings, who, on November 7, 1873, sailed from New York for Genoa, on board the Marie Celeste. Fate was never to throw light upon the problem; fiction was to furnish an ingenious and plausible solution.

Commanded by Capt. Briggs, who took with him his wife and his two-year-old baby, the Marie Celeste left New York with a cargo of alcohol in casks. The vessel's two mates and one of her crew were Americans; the four other men in the forecastle were Germans. According to her log she passed an island of the Azores on November 24. Early in December the British barque Del Gratia, bound from New York to Gibraltar, sighted her drifting aimlessly under partial sail.

Hailing the Marie Celeste and receiving no reply the British captain investigated, and found the Marie Celeste mysteriously abandoned. There was plenty of food, plenty of water, plenty of sea room, and no signs of bad weather. The cargo was undisturbed, and in the forecastle were the sailors' chests, filled with their clothing and money, untouched. Captain Brigg's gold watch was beside his berth. Upon his wife's table in the cabin were threaded needle, scissors and a bit of partly sewed material, lying as if hastily tossed aside. The baby's toys were strewn about the cabin floor and on the wall the clock still ticked. There was no suggestion of mutiny or piratical attack; no leakage and nothing wrong with steering gear, rigging or navigating paraphernalia. The only clue was the unfinished entry scrawled upon the log slate: "Fanny, my dear wife——"

Departing hardly at all from the essential facts of the Marie Celeste, Conan Doyle offered his ingenious solution in one of his early stories, "J. Habakuk Jephson's Statement." In fiction as in fact the vessel was named the Marie Celeste, and the investigating ship the Dei Gratia. But in the narrative Captain Briggs became Captain Tibbs; the destination changed from Genoa to Lisbon; she sailed from Boston instead of New York; the cargo was tallow and American clocks in place of alcohol; and in addition to the crew of seven in the story, two of them negroes, there were on board three passengers.

One of the passengers was a mulatto, who, sworn to vengeance upon the white race, had done away with his fellow travellers one by one, had himself been taken off the ship in a canoe from the African coast, and had disappeared in the jungle after sending back his message of defiance through J. Habakuk Jephson, who had been strangely saved from the fate of the others through the chance possession of a sacred stone. Despite the old saying, there are times when fiction outruns fact in strangeness.

Vegetable sponges are used a great deal by the poorer class of natives in Ecuador. They assert they are better in washing dishes and in bathing than are the animal sponges.

The wrestlers and athletes of India develop great strength by living on milk, a little goat's flesh and plenty of food made from flour.

Culture.

Culture is familiarity with the best that has been done or thought. It is the soul's warm friendship of the great spirits, living and dead.—Hillis.

Tennyson's First Poems.

The wind came sweeping through the garden of an old Lincolnshire rectory one morning in the beginning of last century and blew upon a child five years old, who opened his arms to the blast and let it carry him along, crying as he traveled, "I hear a voice that's calling in the wind." That was Tennyson's first line of poetry. The first poem he ever composed was written upon a slate one Sunday morning at Louth. The subject, set him by his brother Charles, was "Flowers," and little Alfred covered his slate with blank verse after the model of Thomson's "Seasons." His next attempt was an elegy upon his grandmother, who had just died, written at the request of his grandfather. When it was written the old man put 10 shillings into the boy's hand and said, "There; that is the first money you have ever earned by your poetry, and, take my word for it, it will be the last."—Westminster Gazette.

Different Doctors.

There are a great many "doctors" who know nothing of medicine. In its technical sense doctor is a university degree, the highest given. It is given in recognition of attainments in many branches of learning, and so there are several kinds of doctors. There is the familiar M. D., doctor of medicine; the LL. D., doctor of laws, the Ph. D., doctor of philosophy; the D. D., doctor of divinity; the J. D., doctor of jurisprudence; the D. D. S., doctor of dental surgery, and many another. So if you hear a man referred to as "doctor" you must find out what he is doctor of before you can determine to which profession he belongs.

Doctor of laws seems to have been the earliest of the doctor's degrees, it having been awarded as early as the twelfth century. Doctors of divinity appeared somewhat later. It was a century before the now familiar M. D. (doctor of medicine) came into use.—American Boy.

Sunstroke on Mountains.

Sunstroke, according to experiments made by Professors Victor Henry and Moycho and reported to the French Academie des Sciences, is due to the invisible ultra violet rays at the extreme limit of the spectrum. If the solar spectrum be examined at an altitude of from 3,000 to 4,000 meters it will be seen that the limit of these rays varies little, but that their intensity is greatly increased. At sea level this intensity is comparatively feeble. So one is much more likely to have sunstroke on a high mountain than in a valley.—New York World.

Better Still.

One of the principal owners of a promising gold mine was expatiating on its merits to a capitalist and prospective investor. He described the vein in which the miners were working, showed him specimens of the ore and backed up his statements with the written opinions of experts.

"Well," admitted the capitalist, "it looks as if it might be a good investment. As my old Uncle Hiram would say, it has 'p'ints.'"

"Pints?" exclaimed the owner, carried away perhaps by his over-anxiety. "Why, sir, we're in quarts right now!"

Buried With Dolls.

In the Chinese morgue one of the strange sights is a number of life size dolls which are burned to accompany the corpses as their servants to the next world. They are doubtless a relic of the time when human beings were thus burned as companions of the deceased.

CITY DELEGATES ARE GIVEN NEW ASSURANCE

THAT WORK ON PROPOSED FEDERAL BUILDING WILL BEGIN ULTIMATELY

A large deputation of city and county officials went to Ottawa yesterday for an interview with the Government to urge that the Department of Public Works undertake the construction of the Pigeon Creek bridge. Incidentally Mayor McIntyre and the other city representatives put in a plea for the construction of the Federal building here. The Mayor this morning sent the following telegram to The Review:

"The Deputy Minister assured the deputation that as soon as the Finance Minister would allow the department to go on with public works the Peterborough Federal building would be completed."

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

McCOLL—DICKSON.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the George St. Methodist parsonage on Wednesday, Feb. 26th, when William John McColl, of Westwood, was united in marriage to Violet Dickson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Dickson, of Indian River. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. J. Thomas. After a short honeymoon in Toronto the happy couple will reside in Westwood.

Last evening the members of the Onward Ladies' (Mrs. Stubbs') Bible class of George Street Sunday school and their teachers spent a very enjoyable social evening at the home of Mrs. Middleton, Meldrum Apartments. A short programme was given by several members of the class after which refreshments were served by the hostess. All present spent a very pleasant evening and expressed the desire to have nother similar gathering in the near future. At the close of the party a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Middleton.

Mrs. Bailey, of Saskatoon, is visiting her sister, Mrs. F. E. Malott, at Trinity parsonage.

Miss Lillian McLeary has been visiting with friends in Norwood.

Mr. J. Torrence, of Toronto, is visiting with friends in the city.

Mrs. R. Lees has been visiting in Norwood, the guest of her sister, Miss E. Water.

Mrs. M. H. Park entertained yesterday at the tea hour in honor of Miss Margaret Eastwood, whose marriage takes place next Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Cressman, accompanied by Miss Jessie Cressman, left yesterday to join Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Cressman and spend the rest of the winter in Pasadena, California.

Mr. A. A. Cook, of the Vermont Marble Co., returned last evening from a business trip West.

OBITUARY

FRANK T. SOLLITT.

The sad intelligence was received from Montreal today of the death in that city of a well-known Peterborough citizen, Mr. Frank T. Sollitt, after an illness lasting only a week. Scarcely two weeks ago Mr. Sollitt went down to Mountfort, Que., on business for the William Hamilton Co., of Peterborough, and a few days later he was taken seriously ill with pneumonia. His wife hurried to his bedside, but he gradually sank until the end came at 3 o'clock this morning.

Mr. Sollitt was born at Uxbridge, Ont., 48 years ago. After a short residence at Prince Albert, he moved to Port Perry where he learned his trade and then took up a position with the William Hamilton Co. of this city. He had been in the employ of this firm for more than 20 years, the last position held being that of outside directing engineer in turbine work, and it was to act in this capacity that he went to Mountfort. Besides being one of the oldest employes of the firm, he is one of the most respected and his fellow employes and employers received the news of his death this morning with great regret.

He has always taken an active part in the social life of the community and was a member of at least three fraternal societies—the Masons, Oddfellows and Foresters. He has held many different positions in all of these lodges and was one of their highest esteemed members.

He leaves to mourn his loss, besides a sorrowing wife, two children, Alexander and Isabel, one sister, Mrs. Mattice, of this city, and father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sollitt, 543 Downey street. The funeral arrangements have not been completed yet, but it is understood that the Masons of Montreal are taking charge of all the arrangements.

The late Mr. Sollitt was a member of the Public Library Board and the flag on that institution is flying at half-mast today in his memory.

Miss Anita Whitney was sentenced at Oakland, Cal., to from one tenced at Oakland, Cal., to from one to 14 years for criminal syndicalism.

Annual Meeting 57Th Chapter I.O.D.E.

The 57th Regiment Chapter held their eighth annual meeting on Thursday afternoon, February 26th the regent, Mrs. Davidson, in the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted. Carried that the minutes of the last annual meeting be taken as read.

The regent and three members were appointed as representatives to the Local Council of Women; Mrs. D. Walker, Mrs. J. H. Eastwood and Mrs. Widdifield. A motion was passed that a letter of condolence be sent to Mrs. Gooderham, our late national president, on the recent death of her mother.

Mrs. Gemmell was appointed auditor for the coming year. While the ballots were being counted the president gave a short address and the secretary's and treasurer's annual reports were read. Moved and carried that the chapter have four large events during the year for raising money: a dance on armistice night, an annual bazaar, a St. Valentine party and some large event after Easter. Thursday April [illegible]th is the night chosen if satisfactory arrangements can be made. The form of the entertainment will be made known later.

The meeting then adjourned while tea was being served. Mrs. E. B. Clegg read an address to Mrs. J. S. Sharpe as an appreciation of her many years service as recording secretary and the executive presented her with cups and saucers.

Officers were elected for the coming year, as follows:

Regent— Mrs. J. C. Davidson.
1st. Vice-Regent— Mrs. E. B. Clegg.
2nd. Vice-Regent— Miss F. Davidson.
Recording Secretary— Mrs. B. Gillespie.
Educ. Secretary— Mrs. C. S. Jamieson.
Echoes Secretary— Mrs. Hounsell.
Corresponding Secretary — Mrs Widdifield.
Treasurer— Mrs. W. S. Hall.
Standard Bearer— Mrs. F. C. Neal
Councillors— Mrs. D. W. Walker Mrs. Cottrell, Mrs. W. Sharpe, Mrs V. Eastwood, Mrs. H. Rush, Mrs. T W. Young, Mrs. J. H. Eastwood, Mrs J. M. Gemmell, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Miss Rubidge.

Report of Corresponding Secretary.

Regent, officers and members of the 57th. Regiment Chapter.

I beg to present the eighth annual report of the 57th. Regiment Chapter I.O.D.E., as follows:

During the past year there have been nine regular meetings. The meetings were omitted in July and August also the December meeting. While the Chapter is no longer devoting its energies to the supplying of comforts and socks to the soldiers a few knitters still send in their quota of socks and these are sent when an urgent appeal comes in. This year the Chapter has been able to give towards local affairs, although the largest sum was sent to aid the War Memirial Fund.

At the February meeting the Chapter decided to make the grant of $100.00 to the Preventorium, an annual affair, also $25.00 was sent to the Grenfell Mission.

In March a birthday tea was held at the home of Mrs. Vincent Eastwood. Everywhere St. Patrick held sway and an excellent musical programme was provided. This tea netted the Chapter $49.50.

Dr. Bernie adressed the April meeting on behalf of the Baby Clinic, which she hoped would be started very soon and the Chapter voted $100.00 towards it also promising assistance if required. At this meeting $100.00 was voted to the 57th Band.

The G. W. V. A held their building fund drive in May and $100.00 was given by the Chapter. On Empire day the cemeteries were visited and the graves of departed soldiers decorated. Also in each cemetery a large flag was placed with a tablet and suitable inscription to commemorate those who had fallen at the front.

Mrs. A. W. Turner was the delegate to the annual meeting held in Montreal and her report was most interesting.

In June a garden party was held at Mrs. V. Eastwood's. The afternoon was most gratifying in its results but unfortunately the evening was stormy.

A moonlight was held in July and a most enjoyable trip down the river was experienced by those partaking.

Congratulations and loyalty to the new national president were sent by the Chapter in September. Several members attended the second Annual District Conference in Hastings that month, and the following afternoon Mrs. Bruce, national president, Mrs Stewart, national organizing secretary and Mrs. Smith, the national educational secretary addressed the open meeting of the Peterborough Chapters, under the auspices of the 57th Chapter, explaining the I. O. D. E War Memorial.

At the October meeting the membership of the Chapter was extended to wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of any member of any military organization and relative of the 66th veterans.

The I. O. D. E. questionaire re secondary education which had been followed up during the summer months, was completed and a delegate, Mrs. Widdifield, was sent to the conference in Hamilton, where the question was discussed and a committee formed to delve into the problem and bring in a report.

A Navy League Tag Day was held in October under the auspices of the I. O. D. E. with gratifying results $25.00 was voted at the October meeting to the Mary R. Gooderham fund for building an emergency hospital in Northern Ontario.

The Chapters' first annual dance took place on armistice night, the money going towards the War Memorial Fund.

In December, the annual bazaar was held with such successful results that the first $500.00 for the War Memorial Fund was forwarded to Toronto. The Chapter has again affiliated with the Local Council of Women.

At the January meeting $50.00 was sent to the Armenian Fund, Mrs Sharpe was appointed delegate to the conference in Hamilton for the organization of a Provincial Chapter. The first I. O. D. E. year book was received that month.

Deep regret is felt by the Chapter in the death of Mrs. Derrick, one of its most able members. The Chapter has lost for a time only we hope, two valued members; Mrs. T. Hay and Miss Hay. Mrs. Hay was a most conscientious worker.

Unstinted praise is due Mrs. J Sharpe for her many years service as recording secretary. Though resigning from that office we know that she will still give her unfailing interest and support to the Chapter, in all its undertakings.

Too much stress cannot be given the I. O. D. E. War Memorial. Though we have given $500.00, if we compare our vigorous chapter with some of the small ones in outlying districts we can readily see how we should give much more to help our weaker chapters make up their share. $1,000 is little enough to expect from a chapter such as the 57th.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MARION WIDDIFIELD
Corresponding Secretary

Regent's Address

To begin with, I want to congratulate the Chapter most heartily on what has been done financially during the past year. We have met all our obligations, comparatively easily. Let us try to raise our principal annual amount by four large annual events and let all other entertainments be mainly for sociability amongst our members. I hope we may be able to return to our original quarters in the Armories for our March meeting when we will feel more at home and will be able to work up our Chapter again as a real regimental chapter. Nothing has yet been done by us, regarding a monument to our fellow men. This of course, is rather a complicated matter and the committee seem to feel as we have so many other obligations, it is better to rest on our oars with regard to this for awhile.

Our main energies in the coming year must be bent on securing funds for our great war memorial. This is the greatest national undertaking in which our order has ever been interested and means a great deal to our Dominion of Canada both in the near and far distant future. By providing university education for boys and girls of deceased soldiers and sailors and members of the air force we are helping to form the characters of our future citizens and only by religion and education can we fight Bolshevism and all that stands for disloyalty and unlawfulness. There will be a postgraduate scholarship, one for each province of our Dominion. Candidates for these will be chosen annually from among the graduates of different Canadai nUniversities, by committees appointed to the Provinces for this purpose. So the work will follow our boys and girls into manhood and womanhood. As Dr. Cody says: "we don't want our youths to go to German universities, as they did almost exclusively before the war and this fund will help to bring this about." "What we need," says Sir Robert Falconer, "is to be able to develop brains and character wherever they are found to save for the country the human qualities that otherwise go to waste. In my judgment." he added, "you are absolutely right and doing a good thing for the country, in considering the [illegible] an resources."

Then, to come down to our individual responsibilities as Daughters of the Empire. When we join we promise to be loyal subjects of His Majesty King George V and to abide by the constitution of the Order. I would like to add to that, that every member be loyal to the officers and the whole Chapter to which she belongs. Let us have co-operation amongst our members, all working together, with the same aim: the good of the whole. Let us live up to our reputation of holding together and all working for the good of the whole Chapter.

Then, also as individuals we have a duty in our own homes of instilling loyalty into the other members of those homes. Examples play a large part in this. As Daughters of the Empire let us try to be examples in using our influence for good in our homes, our city and our general life in the community. I have been sorry to notice since the armistice, how careless our people are becoming again about the respect due to the National Anthem. Let us never forget that that is one way we may show our colors by behaving reverently when the anthem is being sung. Also let us see to it that in and on our houses our national flag is kept in evidence.

In attending movies and theatres we should again be careful of the example we give. The best in [illegible] and music we ought to have, but the worst ought not to be tolerated; each individual has a responsibility in this also.

Another way we can help our country as women, as well as Daughters of the Empire, is by encouraging in every possible way our home industries. Let us gladly do without things we cannot get in our own Empire. These commodities I know are numerous, but surely we are willing as we were during the war to deny ourselves for our country's good. So will we be worthy of the words said of us by men who have returned. Only the other day Brig.-Gen. Mitchell said: "When we think of all the things that helped us win the victory we soldiers realie how much the women at home had to do with it. Let us prove ourselves worthy of this opinion. There are still many lesser ways to fight and we can. if we will bring much influence to bear in fighting against what is now a great menace to our nation, the love of experience, luxuries which for the sake of our country and from loyalty to our King we might well do without. Surely, for our country and for our felow countrymen's sake we ought to try to cultivate more simple tastes and as loyal Daughters of the Empire set an example for others. May this, the oldest Chapter in Peterborough prove, by its members, that it leads to some good and worth while purpose; and let others see that we are honestly trying to help our country, in this difficult time, by denying ourselves expensive and unnecessary luxuries, and by buying what we have to buy—in Canada.

PIONEER IN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH DELIVERS ADDRESS IN ST. ANDREWS

Rev. Dr. Pringle, Veteran Preacher and Chaplain in the Late War, Tells Interesting Story of His Experiences Here and Overseas.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was well filled last night to hear Rev. Dr. J. Pringle, moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, relate his many experiences and lessons learned in a ministry extending over 40 years.

Dr. Pringle, who holds the highest position it is possible to hold in the Presbyterian Church in Canada, has had a wide experience of church life throughout the country. He has preached from the 49th parallel to the ice-bound shores of Hudson Bay and the barren trail of the Yukon and from the Atlantic Ocean to the coast of British Columbia. In fact he knows the Presbyterian Church in Canada through and through and has grown up with it from its infancy nearly 40 years ago. Presbyterians in Peterborough were therefore afforded an unexcelled opportunity of learning more about the church to which they belong and an opportunity which does not come very often. Dr. Pringle battled with the wilderness of the Yukon for years before the war, building no less than three of the churches he preached in with nothing more than his own ax.

During the war he had varied experiences as a chaplain with the Canadian forces overseas, at first being chaplain of the 16th Battalion and later senior chaplain of the Canadian camp of Seaford, holding the military rank of major at that time. The war record of Dr. Pringle's family is not confined to himself. At the outbreak of the war his son was in the Peace River district and walked 420 miles to Edmonton to enlist. In France he rose rapidly from private to the commissioned rank and was killed during the fearful [illegible] of the Somme battle in November, [illegible]. Since being elected moderator of the General Assembly Dr. Pringle has been touring the Presbyterian churches in Canada on behalf of the Forward Movement.

The opening services last night were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Rollins, who was also a chaplain overseas, assisted by Rev. R. Pogue of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. In presenting Dr. Pringle to the congregation Mr. Rollins said that there was nothing that he could say that would fittingly introduce him.

His Third Visit.

"This is not my first visit to Peterborough, but my third," said Dr. Pringle at the commencement of his address. His memory of his last visit to this city was enlivened by the vision of an old school friend of his whom he found sitting in the front pew of the church on that occasion. He was glad to be able to return to Peterborough, not as moderator, but as a brother minister. He was not aware until he reached Peterborough this time that there were now three Presbyterian congregations in the city. He was glad that the church had shown such growth in this city.

Dr. Pringle stated that there was no promotion from the pastor's position. They might make him moderator of the General Assembly but they could not raise him any higher than he already was as a pastor. If the General Assembly had done nothing more by promoting him than to give him the opportunity of seeing the church in Canada as he had seen it in the past few months he was satisfied.

He had lived in the manses of the church and it had been his delight. There were no better cooks than ministers' wives and he spoke as one who should know for he had once cooked for a claim gang of 35 men in the Yukon territory. At that time the manager of the gang asked him what he got for preaching and Dr. Pringle replied, "$125 a month," whereupon the gang manager said: "You get $125 for preaching. I will give you $250 to cook." Of course the offer was refused.

Dr. Pringle told of some pleasant experiences while in New Brunswick. He preached in the parish in which Bonar Law was born and where Bonar Law's father had preached for 32 years. He preached on the Forward Movement there to a congregation, 95 per cent. of which were men. After the morning service the minister said: "Wait fifteen minutes and I will take you home in my motor. I have to attend a management meeting which is considering giving me the new minimum salary of $1500 instead of $1200." Dr. Pringle went to the back of the church and waited. The minister came out and told him that the committee, all of whom were his best friends, had decided that the church could not afford the increase. When Dr. Pringle returned to the parish a week later he found that the congregation had taken the matter out of the committee's hands and had, by canvassing, increased the permanent annual revenue by $700 and granted the pastor his increase.

Dr. Pringle told of the expansion of the Presbyterian church in the West. He had heard it stated that the church had lost its hold on the people, but it was not so. The church had never had such a hold on them as today. It will be 42 years ago next April since he went out to Manitoba at the request of Dr. Robertson. That was in April, 1882, when Winnipeg was a sea of mud with a population of about 5,000. At that time there were two Presbyterian congregations in Winnipeg. There was Knox Church which was bankrupt, and St. Andrew's congregation, which had no church or hall but which held its services in the court house. There was but one Presbytery for the whole of Manitoba and Vancouver did not exist. Then the province was divided into the Presbyteries of Portage La Prairie and Winnipeg, forming the Grand Synod of Manitoba, but the entire synod did not consist of more than 150 congregations. Today in the province of Saskatchewan there were not less than 832 congregations to whom the gospel was being preached. In the Maritime Provinces the success of the church had been wonderful. Dr. Pringle was able to state that not one congregation in the Maritime Provinces had failed to reach its objective in the Forward Movement Campaign. The progress of the church had been far greater than that of the railways or banks and its posts now stretched hundreds of miles beyond the railways in the West. What he had seen of the church had made him an optimist in considering the future.

Forward Movement Not New.

Dr. Pringle stated that the Forward Movement of the church was not new. The church had always been moving forward but what was wanted now was a lengthening of the stride and an acceleration of the step. The Movement did not rise from the offices in Toronto but got its impulse from the tragedy of the war.

He had preached in all sorts of churches in the Old Country and he had come to the conclusion that all the great leaders of England combined could never have driven the country to war for anything but righteousness. The country would not have followed them. Dr. Pringle's own son, just ten days before he was killed, wrote saying: "Dad, if anything happens to me don't say that I died for the Empire. Say I died for what I thought was right."

Two generations hence the war would be forgotten or would be read in books only, but the tragedy of Calvary was a living thing after a lapse of nineteen centuries. The Forward Movement could not end until it had reached its objective which was the exaltation of Christ on earth. In the Forward Movement two things were needed. The first was a new vision of Christ and the second was the vision that Christ had of the world's needs.

Dr. Pringle's address was replete with stories of his experiences both in the Yukon and overseas. He told of a service held behind Ploegsteert in Belgium Nov., 1915, when he was chaplain of the 16th Battalion. The rain was pouring down and the service was in the open and yet two companies of the 14th Battalion came over voluntarily for the service. After the service a communion table was made in a barn with two kitchen chairs and a small barn door.

Speaking of foreign missions, Dr. Pringle said that China and Japan were nearer to Ontario today than Nova Scotia was 25 years ago and unless we Christianized those countries they would soon paganize us.

During the taking up of the offering Miss Helen MacLaren, soloist of St. Andrew's, rendered "Praise Ye the Lord."

Financial Review For The Week

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 28. — Railroad shares provided the only encouraging features of the week in the securities market, other issues continuing to react as signs of tighter credits assumed more definite form. Call money fluctuated between 10 and 15 per cent. against the ruling rate of six per cent. in the preceding fortnight, and time money was increasingly scarce in face of the higher bids. Further notice of restricted monetary conditions was given by the Federal Reserve Board, accompanied by a moderate advance of local rates for short time accommodations based on treasury certificates of indebtedness. Much of the unsettlement in the stock market was caused by very unfavorable annual statements of earnings submitted by the Republic Iron and the Lackawana Steel Companies. In trade circles, however, these exhibits were not accepted as sympathetic of existing conditions in industry.

The return of the railroads to private operation next week furnished the basis for an advance of three to ten points in that group, more substantial gains being made by the shares of so-called reorganized properties. Wall Street credits west and southwest, with a heavy accumulation of these stocks whose speculative possibilities entered largely into their strength and activity. Opinion respecting the merits of the railroad bill continues widely divergent.

VETERANS PURCHASE SITE

Acquire Corner Lot From Indians For Memorial Hall

(Canadian Press Despatch).

The Pas, Feb. 28.—For a nominal sum of a few dollars, the Great War Veterans' Association, The Pas branch have been given the highest priced corner lot in town by the Cree Indians to be used for the erection of a memorial building. The lot is controlled by the Indian Department who fixed a nominal price, in order to comply with the regulations. The lot is valued at $15,000. The Indians in council passed a resolution asking the department to transfer this lot to the veterans, that it might serve as a memorial to the dead and living of both races from the northland. It is estimated that 200 Cree Indians served in the Canadian forces from this part of Manitoba, many of whom lie buried in France, and others returned maimed and crippled for life.

Women of Winnipeg Decide to Raise That Amount.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28.—The Young Women's Christian Association has announced that a campaign will be started for the raising of $100,000 to meet the enormously increasing demands upon the association. This is the first campaign put on exclusively for the "Y" since the initial one at the time of the building of the institution.

SAYS PERSHING APED STYLES OF ENGLISH

AMERICAN CONGRESS TAKES UP QUESTION OF GENERAL'S UNIFORM IN EUROPE

Washington, Feb. 28. — The cut of Gen. Pershing's coat and trousers was debated in the House. He and other American army officers were charged by Rep. Connally (Dem.), Texas, with having "aped" European fashions in their uniforms and in carrying canes.

"Gen. Pershing's coat is split up the back and his trousers bagged like the English uniform," said Mr. Connally.

"He kept his American head," Rep. Wingo (Dem.), Arkansas, interjected, "but I, too, noticed that his tail was very English."

Deploring the adoption of foreign fashions, Rep. Connally moved to abolish the title of under-secretary of state and substitute the former title of counsellor, in the Executive Appropriation Bill, but the motion was defeated, 39-21.

Rep. Greene (Rep.), Massachusetts, referred to former Secretary Lansing's retirement from the cabinet.

"What's in a name?" Mr. Greene asked. "A secretary of state by any name would have a row with the administration.

When the Republicans cheered, Rep. Connally brought a reply salvo from the Democrats by retorting that the Republicans applauded internal difficulties of the Administration.

TIME FOR LOANS EXTENDED

Eligible Men Have Until April 30th to Apply.

The time has been extended in which eligible disabled ex-service men may apply for loans in order to purchase tools and equipment, or to resume interrupted training and educational courses.

Men not now on the strength of the Department of Soldiers' Civil re-Establishment and who are eligible for such assistance, have until April 8 next in which to make application.

Men now on the strength of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment for training or treatment, and who may eligible for loans, have a period of two months after completion of their courses or discharge from treatment in which to apply.

Loans up to $500, without interest are available for those men who have satisfactorily completed a re-training course with the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment and who wish to start in business in line with the training they have received and who are unable to do without such assistance.

Loans of $500, free of interest, may also be granted to those with a war disability who are not eligible for or who have not had, vocational re-training under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, and whose pre-war training or education has been substantially interrupted by war service, and who are in need of such assistance for the purpose of continuing in training or education.

HORSES FOR ONTARIO

Undersized Animals May be Brought Here From West.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—That there is a real market in Ontario for the undersized horses of the Alberta ranches is the good word brought by Walter Harland Smith, manager of the horse department of the Union Stock yards, Toronto, who is in the West looking into possible supply. It is the horse under 1,250 pounds which is so common on the plains of this province and which are so undesirable from a breeding standpoint, that is wanted.

MOTOR BUSSES IN WINNIPEG

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28—Motor busses will be the prevailing system of transportation in Winnipeg within seven years, J. G. Glassco, manager of the city light and power department predicts. He said he believed the present street car system will be obsolete by that time and that rails would be removed from the streets.

SERIOUS INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM JAPAN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 28.—The Daily Telegraph says: "Serious information was received here Friday night regarding the situation in Japan." No details are given by the newspaper.

TO LICENSE AERODROMES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, Feb. 28.—Municipalities in Manitoba are to be given the power under projected amendments to the Municipal Act, to license and regulate aerodromes and to define the areas in which they can be erected or prevent their erection.

NEW RAILWAY MAY TAP RICH MINERAL WEALTH

COMPLETION OF HUDSON BAY LINE EXPECTED TO OPEN OTHER INDUSTRIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas, Man., Feb. 28.—To tap the rich fisheries in Hudson Bay, which Professor Prince, Dominion commissioner of fisheries, describes as more valuable than the Pacific fisheries at Prince Rupert, and to give access to the mineral deposits reported on both sides of the Bay, are leading considerations put forward for the immediate completion of the Hudson Bay railway. Professor J. B. Tyrrell believes that when the railway reaches the Bay it will cause a rush of mining men and prospectors to search every nook and corner of the huge inland sea for the mineral wealth reported upon by various members of the geological department of Canada. Tyrrell himself made one report concerning the prospects of finding mineral on the shores of the bay, and he pointed out that he expressed no fears as to the outcome of an organized search by trained field men.

Originally projected as a grain carrying route, and a shorter one to Europe, the Hudson Bay railway has now devolved itself into a colonization road to tap resources hitherto conjectured at, but of which very little definite information was possessed. Only recently a report was issued describing the vast pulp wood areas south of the railway at a point near Kettle Rapids, and a second area 15 miles off the railway on the Grassy River. These two areas combined with what is already known of lesser pulp areas and the total known pulp wood areas tributary to the railway may contain one hundred million cords. The railway was projected in 1911 and work was pushed until the fall of 1917, when war conditions brought further work to a standstill. The grade, however, was fully completed from The Pas to Port Nelson on Hudson Bay a distance of 424 miles, and the steel laid for 332 miles, leaving a balance of 92 miles upon which to lay steel. Nothing has been done upon the railway since 1917, and unless work is resumed this year, it is claimed the road bed will suffer great deterioration and create an expense of ten million dollars to repair the damage.

LANDS LYING IDLE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—Twenty million acres of good arable land are at present lying idle along the railway lines in the four western provinces, declared Mayor M. A. Brown, Medicine Hat, before the special committee appointed by the Alberta Industrial Development Association.

TO RAISE OR NOT RAISE THE BARBER'S PRICES

THAT IMPORTANT QUESTION HAS NOT YET BEEN SETTLED MEN SAY

The predicted increase in prices which was to have been made by the local barbers on Monday next is not as yet an accomplished fact. There seems to be some divergence of opinion among the hair-cutters as to the advisability of the increase at the present time and there is just a possibility that it will fall through for the time being. Earlier hours of closing are also under contemplation and it is this fact which is holding up negotiations. The master barbers claim that if the shops are to close at seven o'clock as is suggested it would be necessary for the barbers to work right through till that time without supper and journeymen barbers are not quite sure whether they want to do that or not. In any case nothing definite will be known until Monday.

A local barber pointed out today that these suggested changes, if carried out would merely be bringing the Peterborough shops up to the level of those in other cities. In Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford and most other cities 50 cents has been charged for a hair-cut for some time past and 20 cents for a shave. The hours in these cities have also been shorter than here and in some cases Wednesday afternoon holiday is observed all the year round and the shops close early on Saturday nights.

It was also pointed out that barbers' prices have been raised less than any other prices during the war, and they were at the present time far out of proportion to the increased cost of living.

BRITISH PAPERS HOLD VARIETY OF OPINIONS ON NEW IRISH BILL

Times Greet it With Faint Terms of Praise While Unionist Journals Condemn it Without Reservation—"A Weakling With a Bad Family History".

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 28.—The press reception of the Home Rule Bill is rather mixed but Times recognises the Bill as based upon sound principles within limits, but says that it conveys the impression that the framers had not the full courage of their convictions.

The Telegraph, Unionist, says nothing editorially and the Morning Post declares that never since the compilation of the Athanasian creed has there been so ingenious a document. It prophesies that Ireland will remain hostile to the Bill and will not give these islands any peace. It will only transfer the old conflict to a new battlefield.

The Daily Chronicle, Liberal, approves of the Bill and thinks that the financial terms are extremely generous and regards as most vital that part of the measure which enables the two Parliaments to come together at any time by agreement.

The Daily Mail, which has been a severe critic of the Government's Irish Policy, thinks the Bill good, but not good enough as regards dominion powers for the Irish Parliaments.

The Daily Graphic, Unionist, calls it "weakling with a bad family history."

GENERAL RAILWAY STRIKE HAS BEEN CALLED BY FRENCH UNIONS

Strong Military Forces are Guarding Tracks Inside Limits of Paris and Chambers of Deputies Passes Special Act to Meet New Conditions

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 28.—Orders for a general railroad strike have been issued to the National Federation of railroad men. Reports were current last night that this action had been taken, but confirmation could not be obtained until late this afternoon. A Cabinet meeting has been called for seven o'clock tonight. Operating conditions on the Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean lines and other roads affected by the walk out of employees seemed to be slightly improved last night. Traffic was shown to have increased during the twenty-four hours closing at midnight and it was believed that mobilization orders sent to the men of the Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean and State roads would bring a sufficient force to carry on normal traffic

Strong military forces a garrauan

Stong military forces are guarding tracks inside the city limits of Paris and law authorizing the requisitioning of automobiles, motor trucks and airplanes in case of interruption of railroad traffic was passed last night by the Chamber of Deputies.

The action taken, it is claimed by the strike leaders [illegible] issued, was owing to an attack by the Paris-Lyons and Mediterranean Company on the exercise of union rights.

The order advised the preservation of calmness throughout the strike.

LAWYERS GUESTS OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS

ANNUAL DINNER TO BE HELD AT EMPRESS NEXT TUESDAY EVENING

The members of the Peterborough Law Association are to be the guests of the Central Ontario Life Underwriter's Association at their meeting and dinner next Tuesday evening, at the Empress Hotel.

Invitations have been issued to the lawyers in town and His Honor Judge Huycke will be one of the speakers of the evening.

The occasion is the annual visit of the President of the Life Underwriters Association of Canada, who this year is Mr. E. S. Miller of the Imperial Life Assurance Company, Regina. It is expected that Mr. Geo. H. Hunt the Honorary Secretary of the parent body and Mr. J. H. Castle Graham General Secretary of the Association will be present.

LOST VETERAN FOUND

Soldier Blinded in Service Learning Typewriting.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Vancouver, B.C., Feb. 28.—David M. Ross, of West Barnaby, who was badly wounded in France, and who finally disappeared from the knowledge of his friends, even of his own battalion, has been located in Pearson Hall, Toronto, where, totally blind, he is taking a course in salesmanship and typewriting.

FEDERAL AUTHORITY IS SUPREME OVER STATES

UNCLE SAM WILL ALLOW NO LOCAL TINKERING WITH PROHIBITION LAW

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 28.— All persons found violating the Federal Prohibition Enforcement Act will be proceeded against to the "limit of the law," irrespective of any state status legalizing the sale of liquors, it was announced today by Commissioner Roper of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

BRITAIN'S OFFER TO SOVIET RUSSIA AS PEACE TERMS

CONDITION ON WHICH TRADE WITH THAT COUNTRY WILL BE RESUMED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Buenos Aires, Feb. 28. — What purports to be the basis of Great Britain's proposals to the Russian Soviet Government, which James O'Grady, British representatives at Copenhagen, transmitted to Maxim Litvinoff, are contained in a Rome despatch as follows: "Tacit recognition of Maximalist political regime, non-interference by Great Britain with respect to the internal condition of those countries separated from former Russian rule in the West, namely, Finland, Esthonia, Lithuania, Ukrainia and Poland, non-interference by Great Britain in Siberian affairs, the demobilization of the Red army, promise by Bolsheviki to recognize the independence of the Meridional republics, especially Georgia, non-interference by Russia with territories on the frontiers of Georgia and Persia, payment in gold for foods exported or imported between Russia and Great Britain, regime of commercial equality for Russia and Great Britain in autonomous states on the western front."

TEACHERS GET INCREASE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Sask., Feb. 28.—The Collegiate Institute Board has sanctioned a general increase in teachers' salaries of 20 per cent. This move follows upon the recent action of the board in voting a substantial high cost of living bonus to the teachers to tide them over this term.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1920.

PETERBOROUGH'S BIG CONVENTION.

A DELEGATION from the G. W. V. A. waited on the City Council and asked for a grant to help defray the expense of taking care of the five to six hundred delegates who are expected to attend the Provincial Convention of the organization to be held in this city next month. The delegation asked for a reasonable amount and secured it without hesitation on the part of the aldermen. The usual custom of deputations asking for three or four times what it is hoped will be allowed was not followed in this case. The city officials are mainly responsible for the holding of the convention in this city, as an invitation was formally extended and promises made when the choice of a meeting place for 1920 was decided a year ago.

The $1000 which the Council has granted for the purpose will go but a short way in providing entertainment for the number of visitors who will be here. However, the matter of entertainment is not the main question What is giving the committee of arrangement real concern these days is the matter of finding board and lodging accommodation for these visitors. The hotels cannot possibly take care of more than one-tenth of the number expected, and places for the remainder must be found in private houses.

The veterans are not coming here to be entertained and provided for at public expense, nor are they looking for private charity. Every man will be willing and able to pay his way. Maintaining them for the four days which they will be here is a purely business proposition To find temporary homes for five hundred strangers should not be a heavy task for a city the size of Peterborough, even if the task calls for a change in the domestic arrangements of a number of families. If there is not sufficient room available in private residences, every club room in the city should be furnished with cots and turned into temporary sleeping quarters for the veterans. The duty which confronts the citizens in this respect can easily be discharged. All that is needed is something like concerted action. If every one does his part according to his ability every difficulty will be overcome. It would never do for the city to fail now in the matter of caring for visitors who come here on the strength of the invitation that was both official and fraternal.

Any citizen willing to lodge one or more of the visitors is asked to send a notice to that effect to Secretary Whatley at the G. W. V. A. hall on Murray street.

THIS SEASONABLE WEATHER.

THE OLDEST INHABITANT may be able to recall numerous occasions in the past when the thermometer registered a lower temperature than has been reached any time this winter, but it will tax the memory of most men to give the date of a season during which the mercury so consistently maintained a low altitude The cold has been steady since before the holidays. Even the January thaw failed to materialize, this alone constituting an exception in the records of weather.

But the people, much as they may be inconvenienced by the cold, should bear this particular burden patiently. The weather is at least seasonable. January and Febufrary are the months when a low temperature is to be looked for. Better a winter in season, better normal weather conditions at the proper time, than a low mercury at the time of year when heat is required to promote vegetation.

One abnormal season follows another. A long period of excessive drought is invariably followed by one in which the rainfall is above the average, and vice versa. Nature must by hook or by crook strike a balance, and the law of compensation never fails. Better a winter of low temperature than a belated spring.

Th earth is frozen to the depth of several feet. Nature is thus, as every farmer will tell you, preparing it for the work of production. The winter wheat and the meadows are secure under their whte blanket coverng. All conditions portend an early spring and a prosperous year on the farms, where prosperity means good times for all classes in the community. Spring is on the way Every revolution of the earth brings it a pace nearer, and the people should comfort themselves with the hope that better and brighter days are immediatly ahead of them.

ONE WAY TO STRANGLE BOLSHEVISM.

THE DOMINION PARLIAMENT at the session one year ago voted the sum of ten million dollars to support technical education in Canada, the amount to be distributed, under certain well defined conditions, among the provinces according to population. Prof. L. W. McGill, Director of Technical Education for the Dominion, is charged with the duty of seeing after the division of this money.

At a luncheon given by the Canadian Manufacturers' Associaiton in the King Edward Hotel in Toronto the other day, at which Peterborough was represented by W. R. Breyfogle, B. F. Ackerman and Vincent Eastwood Prof. Gill was the main speaker and his subject was Technical Education. The extension of that system of instruction was one of his suggestions for a reduction of the high cost of living, increasing production as it certainly would. Another of his ideas was that technical education would prevent the spread of Bolshevism in Canada.

Prof. Gill is not alone in this position. Sociologists and students of political economy agree with him. Mr. Breyfogle, in his address to the members of the Board of Trade the other night, made practically the same contention.

There is little danger of the spread of Bolshevism in a community where all the citizens are prosperous. Contentment follows prosperity, and the latter is to be achieved only in efficiency in the various vocations of the people. Efficiency is achieved to the full only by actual working experience, but a long start can be secured by training in a technical school. Years of shifting and uncertainty can be saved in the same way. When the boy is ready to start out in the battle of life, he knows for what calling he has been designed by Nature, and has made some progress in acquiring a working knowledge of the duties he will be called upon to perform. Technical training is good for employer and employe alike, saving both as it does from vexatious delay in getting the latter broken in to his work. So many of the present ventures result in failure. The lack of anything like a practical education has been painfully apparent in Ontario for years. The remedy is within easy reach of the people. Give the boy who is to follow a trade the same chance to prepare for his life work as is given the doctor, the lawyer, the minister, or the civil engineer.

Peterborough can secure a share of the Federal grant by establishing a technical school. The greater the outlay authorized by the voters, the larger the amount that will be received from the Dominion treasury.

THE FIRST LENTEN SEASON.

THE OBSERVANCE of the forty days of Lent by fasting and other forms of self-denial has the most illustrious of all precedents. The greaterst Man the world has ever produced, the most outstanding character in sacred or profane history established that form of spiritual life. At the outset of His public career, by way of preapration for His life work, He retired to the wilderness and remained in solitude for the period which so many of His followers observe with religious devotion down to the present day.

It is not revealed to man what really occurred during those forty days in the wilderness, but the belief is justified that they were spent in study and prayer. In that vast solitude there was developed the most lovable nature, the strongest character ,the purest sentiments that the world has ever known. Returning to the world, the Nazarene was ready to take up the work that He was sent to perform. He was able to resist all the forces of evil, to silence the sophistries of Satan. The flowery paths of ease and popular fame beckoned Him. His was the opportunity to use His Divine power to advance His own personal ends. By swerving from the strict line of duty He could have won the worship of the multitude. But He chose the rocky road of sacrifice undismayed by the knowledge that was surely His—that that road led to Calvary.

In the quiet and calmness of the wilderness it is likely that the Nazarene prepared that matchless discourse, the Sermon on the Mount, and surely that triumph alone was worth the sacrifice. For over two thousand years that sermon has stood as the model of pulpit oratory, as the rule of all human conduct, the foundation of the Christian faith. In humble adoration the followers of the Nazarene in this matter attempt to follow in His footsteps. The effort is not likely to be lost even if they fall far short of His illustrious achievement A world sated with pleasure may well pause for a few brief weeks and turn its thoughts upon higher things.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

WHY NOT WIDEN the poor man's sleigh to make a winter road for the other man's auto?

• • • • •

AGAIN PREMIER DRURY wisely shies at a policy mapped out for him by a fame-seeking newspaper.

• • • • •

AT LEAST every strapholder in the city knows where he stands in this street car discussion. So, perhaps does the man waiting on the corner for a transfer.

• • • • •

"WHAT GOOD has come out of the Board of Commerce?" some one asks. Well, so far, Judge Robson has resigned and the end of the others is in sight

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

BRYAN ON THE PAY ROLL.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

The interesting fact is disclosed that William Jenning's Bryan is and has long been on the payroll of the Anti-Saloon League. In the same way some of our Canadian prohibitionists have reason to know that prohibition pays.

POISON ALL ROUND.

(Woodstock Sentinel-Review.)

Facility in phrase-making is sometimes a dangerous thing. There is that man Ivens, for instance, on trial at Winnipeg. He was inspired a short time ago to speak of "a poisoned judge, a poisoned jury and a poisoned sentence," and now in Winnipeg they speak of himself as "Poison Ivy."

SAVE GREATER LOSS.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The hue and cry against the sale of the former German ships is based upon a misconception of the situation or a deliberate misrepresentation of it. The shipping board must sell the ships below the value of the vessels under normal conditions but such loss will be insignificant compared with the cumulative cost of continued government operation.

WRITERS OF SOME FAMOUS BOOKS

(By F. M. D.)

One of the most neglected sections in the Library is that devoted to Biography. It is hard to understand why this should be so, save for the possible reason that the public, even after nine years of constant access to the shelves, have been unable to allocate to it its proper place in and value as Literature. It is all the more strange because there are very few among us who do not enjoy hearing gossip about our neighbours, insignificant as we and they are. Putting it on the lowest possible level therefore, it would be strange indeed if we could not find much that is toothsome and interesting in a gossipy way about those who in their own day and generation grew to be famous in the varied activities of life. But there are far higher considerations than this why Biography should be made a study of by all who read the history of their country and are interested in the men and women who have helped to keep it in the van of the world's progress.

There are few amongst us, I take it, who on reading a book, do not make a mental picture of the man or woman who wrote it. We long to know something of the personality of the individual. Addison and Charles Lamb wrote some of the most pleasing essays in the language. Their names are famous and yet there are comparatively few who could give one even the barest outlines of their lives. Addison was, by general consent, one of the most charming men of his time. He was far from being a great speaker, but men like Swift, and Steele, Young and Pope, and women like Lady Mary Wortley Montague, have all borne witness to his charm. His career lay somewhat along the orthodox lines of those days. He travelled in Europe, was a member of the noted Whig Club, the Kit-Cat Club, and through its means obtained preferment in the government. The Spectator made him famous. There is a very good article on him in the Dictionary of National Biography. Lamb, whose Essays of Elia have never been equalled for the geniality of their humor, had what most people would consider a tragically unhappy life. A tendency to insanity, an incurable stutter, long years of poverty, the care of a sister who in a temporary frenzy stabbed her mother to death, were enough to make the life of anyone a burden. But Lamb rose superior to all his troubles. He made and kept troops of friends, who loved him for his geniality, for his loyalty and for his genius. When you read about him in the Dictionary of National Biography you will feel that the man who could have such staunch supporters as Coleridge, Wordsworth, Southey and Talfourd, was a man of worth indeed. Many are puzzled as to the origin of the title of his best known work the Essays of Elia. It was appended to his first article in the London Magazine. Lamb, on being asked for a signature for it, on the spur of the moment appended the name of an obscure clerk who had once been a member of the staff of the South Sea House.

These names have just been mentioned casually, but it takes only a glance along the shelves devoted to Biography to see what a wealth of valuable material the Public Library possesses. Even a hasty dip into this or that book reveals all sorts of interesting details. There are lives of several of whom one may frankly confess, he had never heard, but an introduction to whose career is a revelation and a delight. Penned in between a portly life of Lord Acton and one of Louis Agassiz, is a biography of modest dimensions entitled "Will Adams." Curiosity as to whether there was any connection between the life of this particular Adams and the notable gentleman who unaided and alone defeated Napoleon at the battle of Waterloo, led me to take down the book and I found that it was a record of the life of the first Englishman who entered Japan and who was the means of establishing friendly relations between the potentate of that country and the King of England. The events narrated occurred in the latter part of the sixteenth century, and read like a novel.

It is very doubtful if anyone living in Peterborough would be able to tell anything about James P. Beckwourth. He was the forerunner of men of the type of Buffalo Bill, and was a famous mountaineer, scout, and pioneer, who became chief of the Crow Indians. His life covers the time when the West was a wild west indeed, for he was born in 1798. The book abounds in tales of thrilling deeds and is graced with a preface by Charles Godfrey Leland, the author of the famous Hans Breitmann ballads.

The life of Mrs. Bishop, nee Isabella Bird, is that of one of the four best known lady travellers of the past century, the others being Miss North, Miss Kingsley and Miss Gordon Cumming. Mrs. Bishop faced her adventures single-handed, traversing the waste places of the East with the most determined courage. Her Life is excellent reading, for it gives us a splendid insight into conditions in Korea and China at the time of which she wrote. The book is profusely illustrated with photographs.

Mrs. Bishop wrote extensively on conditions in the countries which she visited. There are a number of her books in the library. Her philanthropic interests showed themselves in the many lectures she delivered before the Geographical and other societies. She was honored by being the first lady Fellow elected to membership in the Royal Geographical Society.

The Reminiscences of Mark Boyd, one of the early promoters of colonisation in Australia and New Zealand, is an interesting book, for it gives many entertaining anecdotes of people of whom too little has been handed down in print.

These three or four names have been taken from two shelves of the biographical section and as there are no less than forty-five shelves devoted to this one class of literature it can easily be seen how much of interest awaits the man or woman who has a liking for this sort of reading. Purposely, in most instances, the least known lives have been given, to show how varied an assortment the library possesses. The reader may be fairly sure of getting what he wants in the way of biography concerning those whose names have become famous at some period or another of the world's history.

"Old Madhouse," by Wm. DeMorgan.

This is a posthumous story by DeMorgan, the last chapter being supplied by Mrs. DeMorgan. It is a tale of mystery, which would probably have caused as much controversy as Edwin Drood had it not been for Mrs. DeMorgan's explanatory chapter. It is the tale of the mysterious disappearance of a clergyman in an empty house known as the "Old Madhouse." The story shows a great deal of subtlety and though diffuse is full of freshness and charm.

"Sonia Married," Stephen McKenna.

Readers of Sonia will possibly be disappointed in reading "Sonia Married." It is one of those books that however cleverly the author may attempt to make a complete and separate novel of it would be incomprehensible in parts if acquaintance had not been first made with the earlier work. It contains several dramatic scenes and is an interesting but somewhat depressing book. As the Springfield Republican says: "It borders dangerously on exaggeration and melodrama."

"Small-Talk at Wreyland," Cecil Torr.

This is not a novel. It is simply a record of talks with intimate friends in a small hamlet in Devonshire. One writer says it is as typically English as a Christmas pudding. It is packed with wisdom and information. Another writer remarks that "it is a book to be commended, without hesitation or reserve, to every lover of old England."

To everyone who in reverie dreams of old days by the quiet ingle-nook, listening to reminiscences by one's elders, this book is to be commended. It breathes the very spirit of home life and home confidences.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

For almost five years the Hon. Robert Lansing was President Wilson's Foreign Minister, for the equivalent of that post in the United States Cabinet is that of Secretary of State, which Mr. Lansing filled from June 23rd, 1915, until a few days ago, when he resigned at the request of the President. It seems that ever since the Paris Peace Conference the relations between the President and his Secretary of State had not been cordial, and the two men had not been pulling together.

Mr. Lansing was born at Watertown, N. Y., on October 17, 1864. His higher education was received at Amherst College and Princeton University, Admitted to the bar in 1889, he at once began the practice of his profession and within a few years was employed in several cases of an international character, such as the Behring Sea Arbitration and the Alaskan Boundary dispute. For a year before becoming Secretary of State he was counsel to the Department, so that he had to do with the foreign relations of the United States throughout the whole course of the war.

BAYER
BAYER

ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

The name "Bayer" on Aspirin is like 14 Karat on gold. It positively identifies the only genuine Aspirin,—the Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years and now made in Canada.

Always buy an unbroken package of "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which contains proper directions for Colds, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Joint Pains, and Pain generally. Tin boxes of 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

Colonel House, Who Was Wilson's Man of Mystery, Is No Longer Consulted

IN diplomatic and political circles in Washington there has been a lot of speculation as to what has happened to Col. House, 'the man behind the throne,' and the unofficial statesman who is popularly supposed to direct the affairs of the United States. It is rumored that he has lost favor with President Wilson, and that the extraordinary public career of this formerly obscure Texas business man is drawing to a close. An American writer, who keeps in close touch with national events, says: "Careful observers of international and domestic political events base their belief partly on the fact that Col. House has not seen the President since his return from Paris, where he played such an important part in the Peace Conference, nor has he seen the Secretary of State. It is true that both Mr. Wilson and Col. House have been ill, but the colonel has for some weeks been able to attend to business, and he has not been in Washington, nor has he been summoned by the President. There has been no open quarrel between Mr. Wilson and Col. House, but it has been the President's custom quietly to eliminate persons who have lost his confidence. For some time past, it is stated, Col. House has been quite ignorant of Mr. Wilson's plans. Some Government officials think that when the President has sufficiently recovered his health he will summon his former adviser and restore him to the very great favor he enjoyed for seven years, which it is asserted he has now lost because of acts of excessive authority which have greatly embarrassed the President."

COL. HOUSE.

The tendency of President Wilson to quarrel bitterly with his former friends was shown when he recently ejected Secretary of State Lansing from his Cabinet in a manner most humiliating to the man who used to help Wilson frame his famous notes. The quarrel with House, if it has taken place, was not so spectacular, but the Texas colonel appears to have passed into oblivion nevertheless.

The Journey of Hsuan-Tsang.

Sir Aurel Stein has traversed the Gobi by the desert way which serves as the Chinese high road connecting Kan-su with Hsin-chiang. It is the old "Northern Route" which ever since 73 A.D. has been China's chief means of access to her central Asian dominions. It is the way along which Hsuan-tsang, the Chinese sage and pilgrim, traveled in the second quarter of the seventh century A.D., passing through the guarded marches of the northwestern border of China to reach these "western regions" on his quest for knowledge. Sir Aurel Stein states in the Geographical Journal for December that in the course of his party's survey, they were able to verify the accuracy of the precise details of the Chinese pilgrim's story, as found in his "Life," by the agreement they showed with the topographical details which the survey revealed. The incident of Hsuan-tsang's attempt to find the "Spring of the Wild Horses," and of his final resolute resolve, in order to recover his way, to turn to the northwest, is shown by Sir Aurel to have been the best course he could have adopted, though one needing extreme courage prompted by the religious fervor of the great pilgrim. It was the wisest course to follow, provided he knew how to keep his feet stedfastly northwest., In doing this he was aided by that "instinct of the compass," which his "Hai-yu-chi" shows he possessed in a strong degree, and which, Sir Aurel adds, is prevalent among Chinese of whatever condition.

A Good Reason.

The teacher had been explaining fractions to her class. When she had discussed the subject at length, wishing to see how much light had been shed, she inquired: "Now, Bobby, which would you rather have, one apple or two halves?" The little chap promptly replied: "Two halves." "Oh, Bobby," exclaimed the young woman, a little disappointedly, 'why would you prefer two halves?" "Because then I could see if it was bad inside."

Meaning of the Green Bough.

The custom of placing a green bough on the roof of a newly built house is not confined to Germany, but was adopted by the French Canadians who brought it with them from Brittany. The custom originated from the superstition prevalent centuries ago that every tree is inhabited by a spirit; consequently it was believed that every time a tree was felled another spirit was dispossessed, and this was supposed to cause some bitterness on his part against society. Rather than risk having these homeless and disgruntled spirits vent their ill feeling upon the houses under construction or upon the builders a branch was planted on the highest part of the house for their occupancy. They were then supposed to be mollified, and if they remained so until the roof was put on any evil design contemplated would prove harmless, for the spell would be broken.

Brazil Found by Accident.

Amerigo Vespucci made the first map of Brazil, although only of the coast line, and it was the publication of this map that led to the fixing of the name of the new world. Brazil itself was revealed to Europeans in 1500 by an accident—the drifting out of its course of a Portuguese expedition. The country indirectly owes its modern advancement to Napoleon. To escape from the conqueror King John of Portugal fled to his dominions in America and, believing Portugal lost to the royal family, set about putting Brazil upon a civilized basis by throwing open its ports to the whole world.

Irish Wit.

At a luncheon a bishop, resident in the west of England, told the following story illustrative of the native wit of the Irishman: Two English tourists, in the hope of "taking a rise" out of Pat, who was leaning over a gate, got into conversation with him. As they parted they remarked, "Have you heard, Pat, that the devil is dead?" This news excited no comment, but the tourists had not proceeded far when they were called back and solemnly presented each with a penny. On inquiring the cause of this unexpected generosity they were met with the answer: "It's the custhom of the counthry. We always help the orphans."

"WAACS" Demobilised.

Queen Mary's Army Auxiliary Corps, known as the "Waacs," the khaki-clad army of intrepid women who served in various capacities at the front during the war, ceased to exist as a military organization with the ending of the year. The Waacs performed a notable service for their flag and not a few of them were killed or wounded in service.

When King George of England was shooting in Scotland recently Queen Mary led the life of a private individual looking up old friends, paying private calls and making various alterations in and around Buckingham Palace.

THE YAQUIS' REVENGE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, [illegible] by Associated Literary Press.

Every American of us at the silver mines had turned out with the Mexican soldiery to help drive the Yaquis back to their hiding place in the mountains. It was a case of self preservation with us. When the Yaqui was on a raid he made no difference between the property or scalp of an American and a Mexican. He owned the land before Cortez appeared. The process of weeding him out is still going on.

And so when the news came in that the Yaquis had taken the warpath and killed or driven off the men at the Soltalto mine above us we turned out with the 300 soldiers sent up to meet the war party and drive it back.

For three days we fought the Yaquis before we got them on the retreat. It was not enough, however, that we had saved the big mines and 500 almost defenseless people. Orders came to the colonel to push on after the retreating Indians and hold them up if possible and exterminate them. We went with them to see the thing through and because they had need of our rifles and of our sharpshooting. Once among the mountains the soldiers could no longer move in a body. There was constant fighting, but the Indians were continually forced back. By and by they had reached the women and children and their stronghold, and the Mexican colonel rubbed his hands and laughed and said:

"We have got them penned up at last, and not one shall escape. It is the best show we have had for half a century to exterminate them."

The stronghold of the Indians was a series of rifts and caves in the face of the mountain. There was but one path leading to it. That wound over a number of ridges and then dipped down into a basin which had a circumference of about half a mile. The colonel's plan was to advance the whole force into this basin when night fell, and, taking cover behind the bowlders lying thickly beneath the caves, we should be ready at daylight to begin the work of extermination. While a portion of the troopers kept up a fire to prevent the Yaquis from leaving their caves another portion would collect fuel and smoke them to death. We were not averse to dealing the Indians a hard blow and one to be remembered, but we did not go in for the extermination of a thousand souls at once, more than half of whom were women and children.

"Gentlemen, you are not under my command," said the colonel as he rubbed his hands and smiled, "and you will therefore decide for yourselves. When darkness comes my command will march down into the basin. For fifteen years I have been hunting the Yaquis. For fifteen years I have been hoping for just this chance."

They could not charge us with cowardice, but when our decision not to support them in a massacre was made known there were smiles and expressions of contempt.

An hour after dark the soldiers left us and went marching in single file down into the basin. I do not believe the first man had yet descended into the basin when we suddenly caught sight of a signal fire to the right.

The Yaquis were not to be surprised. During the next hour the whole side of the mountain showed signals at intervals, and then there was an interval of three hours, during which not a light was to be seen. At midnight from the center of the mountain a signal fire suddenly blazed out. It did not last more than a minute and was followed by a noise none of us could make out. It was like the roaring of a gale in a narrow gorge of the mountains, and we had been listening to it for perhaps ten minutes when from the dark basin beneath us arose such a cry as few men ever heard.

"In the name of God, what can it be?" asked each man of his comrade, but no one could answer. Down there in the midnight blackness some terrible tragedy was being enacted, but we must wait for daylight to solve it. The roaring, rushing sound came to us after the scream died away, but more softly than at first. From that hour till dawn came there was no signaling, no noise, nothing to prove that there was life in the mountains beyond our little band. The peaks of the mountains stood out first. Then we followed the dawn down till our eyes rested on the caves. In front of them were hundreds of people, but they were standing quiet and peering down into the basin. In another minute daylight had crept down there, and we looked and cried aloud in horror. The bottom of the basin, as we saw it the evening before, had been covered with scrubs and grass. It was a basin still, but the bottom was hidden under ten, twenty, thirty feet of water. There was no outlet, and we could see the waters rushing and swirling round and round as if to find one. And borne on the rush were the bodies of the dead—of the 231 men who had left us a few hours before. Not one had escaped. High up on their side of the mountain the Yaquis had dammed a spring or rivulet and stored up the waters for just such an emergency. At midnight they had let the flood loose, and it had come tearing down at lightning speed to overwhelm the enemy caught like rats in a trap. As we turned away in our horror to make our way down the mountains the Yaquis raised their voices in one long shout of exultation and then were silent. They had reaped their vengeance and were satisfied to let us depart in peace.

Money Signs.

The meaning of the British money signs, £., s., d., representing pounds, shillings and pence, has recently been explained. Edward Lovell, an authority on folklore, gave his lecture on "Folklore of Commerce" at the Hornuman Museum, in which he touched on the subject. Originally the signs did not mean pounds, shillings and pence. The "L"—always the most important letter—is a modification of an ancient symbol representing scales (libra) used for weighing pound's weight; "s" can also be reduced by folklore principles to mean, not shillings at all, but a piece of silver wire for measuring distance, while the "d" is the initial of the Roman coin "denarius." It was made of silver and in early days was equivalent to about 15 cents.

The American dollar sign, he thought, was a blending of the ancient Pillars of Hercules and a Spanish scroll.

The origin of the term "bill" is, of course, well known. It is derived from the French word "bille," a piece of wood. In olden days the process of rendering accounts was by means of cutting notches in a stick, the stick being split through the notches, and one half being given to the debtor. This system, known as the "tally" system, still is in existence in some of the English hopyards.

The word "bankrupt" is an Anglicized form of the Lombady banker's "bancus ruptus." Banking in its infancy was conducted in the open. When one of their members defaulted his bench was seized and broken up to prevent his doing further mischief.

Demolishing Parisian Bridges.

Another old bridge is being demolished at Paris as a sacrifice to the spirit of progress. This is the Pont de la Tournelle, some distance down stream beyond Notre Dame. It was originally built about 1620, the first structure being of wood. The foundations of the present stone bridge date from 1656, although it was widened twice, once in 1777 and again in 1845, to keep pace with the increase of traffic. But the remarkable fact about its destruction is, that while the demolition plans are complete and thorough, there is a vagueness about what will next be done. Is its destruction for the sake of so called civic improvement, or will it simply vanish and another historic landmark of old Paris be only a memory? Or will the municipal council replace it with something fashionable in steel or re-enforced concrete? The pity is that no one can find out why this bridge was chosen for destruction, nor what will replace it. Paris can ill afford to lose her structures of the past.

A "Howler."

Rather extreme measures are advocated in this "howler" reported by a school teacher: "To get rid of dandruff you must first remove the scalp and then rub thoroughly with some strong tonic."

The Land of Long Words.

Humboldt once said that nothing in Mexico strikes Europeans more forcibly than the excessive length of the words. This length, moreover, does not always depend on their being compounded, as in the Greek, the German or the Sanskrit. Thus the Mexican word for that simple thing, a kiss, is tetennamiquiliztli.

But that is nothing, says Mr. Charles W. Domville-Fife in his book on Guatemala, to what the Central American can do. His best efforts eclipse even Shakespeare's often quoted "honorificabilitudinitatibus," in "Love's Labour's Lost," for if you wish to call the boy who carries newspapers, you have but to murmur "amatlacuilolitquitcatlaxtlahuilli," and he may possibly come.

More Darkness.

"I'm all in the dark about how these bills are to be paid," said Mr. Hardup to his wife.

"Well, Henry," said she as she pulled out a colored one and laid it on the pile, "you will be if you don't pay that one, for it's the gas bill."

BANKRUPT AUSTRIA.

"No pleasure trips" is the general order of the day, and yet on entering a Vienna railway station one would think that the Viennese had been seized with a perfect passion for traveling. The booking-halls are thronged, and it is only by dint of standing two or three hours in a queue that it is possible to procure a ticket, the possession of which, even then, by no means guarantees one a place, much less a seat.

Half an hour before the departure of the train the platform gates were opened, and the rush that follows is indescribable. The struggling people push their way through the narrow opening and rush wildly for the train. In a few moments the platform is one dense mass of people, many of whom crowd on to the steps of the carriages and hold on grimly lest they should be torn away. Remonstrance is useless and no one heeds the risk, for they all know very well that things will be no better with the next train.

What, it will be asked, is it that impels the crowd to undertake this wild journeying? It is food shortage! The weekly rations are insufficient, only the "nouveaux riches" can pay for the goods handled by profiteers, and so it is necessary to go into the country to fetch food. Therefore these people journey in the utmost discomfort for half a day or more, and on reaching their destination tramp for hours until they come across a peasant from whom they beg milk, eggs, or butter. To secure a kilo of butter for from 40 to 60 kronen is a veritable triumph; in Vienna the price would be from 130 to 140 kronen. And to find a peasant kind-hearted enough to supply a morsel of meat is the greatest achievement of all, for the Viennese have almost forgotten the very taste of it. Who can afford meat at 100 kronen the kilo?

Then back to the station again with well-stuffed rucksack and often another bag as well. There the earlier scenes are repeated until the train starts, except that, thanks to the bulging rucksacks, there is still less room in the carriages, so that the travelers take to entrenching themselves on the roof. Now it might naturally be thought that on arrival in Vienna the struggle would be at an end. But not a bit of it. First there is an examination to undergo, and as one is bringing prohibited articles into Vienna one must be prepared to see these confiscated at one fell stroke.

It is heartrending to look on while the milk, which some poor woman has sacrificed herself to procure for her children, is taken from her just as she thought she had reached her goal—not to mention the thought of the financial loss. No pleas, no tears are of any avail; the fiat has gone forth, and the official has to obey it. It is a common thing for people to break their eggs and trample on their food rather than hand them over to the authorities. When will better times come for these distressed people?

A Heroic Slave.

There was a humble slave in the palace of the Caliph Haroun al Raschid. The caliph had in his audience chamber twenty rare vases, and it was written in the laws of Bagdad that he who should have the misfortune to break one of these would pay the penalty with his life. This slave one day broke a vase. He was instantly seized, tried and condemned to death. But the caliph had no sooner pronounced sentence on him than the slave turned, and, walking calmly to the other nineteen vases, with one sweep of the arm destroyed them all.

"Wretch," the caliph thundered, "why have you done that barbarous deed?"

"To save the lives of nineteen of my fellow countrymen," the doomed slave replied.

Dying Is Expensive.

The difficulties of dying have been aggravated by the coal shortage; that is, if you will be cremated, says an exchange. In the town of Esslingen, South Germany, candidates for earthly cremation have been forewarned that they can have their wish only when the local crematory has coke on hand. The progressive city of Ulm, Wurttemberg requires to furnish the the necessary fuel along with the dead, if cremation is desired.

Incidently, the cost of cremation has gone up considerably. The cremation fees average around 70 marks, a niche for the memorial urn costs from 250 to 600 marks, according to location, while the urn itself lets you in for from 250 marks up.

Even without cremation, dying is expensive in Germany to-day. The cheapest pine-board coffin is priced at 125 marks and the cost of coffins runs up to 5,000 and 6,000 marks for ornate metal caskets. The cheapest short-distance ride in a hearse costs 50 marks, while professional pallbearers get a minimum wage of 7.50 marks per capita. The cheapest funeral wreaths cost 50 marks, but you cannot get anything grand and showy under 500 marks.

Living would seem to be the lesser evil, and, as a matter of fact, the death rate is going down in Germany.

The Philistine Giant.

Goliath, the Philistine giant, must have caused a lot of trouble for the army quartermasters of his day. How did they get a regulation uniform to fit him, for he stood eleven feet three inches in his stocking feet; if, indeed, Philistines of those times wore stockings.

CANADIANS ABROAD

Ex-Premier Scott and Senator Ross on Tour of World.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Feb. 27.—Hon. Walter Scott, ex-Premier of Saskatchewan, who is accompanying Senator J. H. Ross on a trip around the world for the benefit of the latter's health, states that in a letter received by a friend here that Mr. Ross is distinctly improving in health. They left San Francisco shortly before Christmas, spent eight days in Japan, arriving at Manila, where the letter was sent from, on Jan. 3. They intend visiting Egypt and India, thence across the Mediterranean to Italy, and across through France and England.

INFLUENZA HAS LATER DANGERS

The influenza convalescent who has apparently recovered from the disease and is yet in a strangely weak and depressed condition should be the object of particular care, according to Dr. Louis I. Harris, director of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the New York Health Department. In the opinion of Dr. Harris the after care of the influenza patient is most important. The co-operation of the patient, coupled with the willingness to see that the weakness and depression are a part of the illness, though coming after the disease itself has spent its force, is a big factor in effecting a complete return to full health. On the other hand, the determination to ignore this debilitated condition and to fight against it, will, Dr. Harris says, frequently bring serious consequences upon the patient.

After Effects Bad.

"First, and perhaps the most momentous condition to be considered is the striking depression, mental, nervous, and physical, complained of by most patients. Those attacked by the disease with moderate severity are almost always afflicted with this depression, which should be recognized and dealt with. Those who have had mild cases of the epidemic are little affected by depression, and their quick return to health and strength gives rise to the belief that influenza is trivial. On the contrary influenza in its after effects is anything but trivial, and calls for the application of rules of common sense and sanitation which are the fruit of years of experience.

"Tonic treatment, well chosen diet, and great care in not becoming overtired or allowing the body to be chilled are necessary. Eggs may be eaten, but not more than two a day, for the average adult. Of course, it must be remembered that in many cases this disease tends to direct its force against the kidneys and therefore we instruct patients to avoid eating a great amount of meat, eggs, or beef extracts. Eggs, soft boiled, poached or beaten raw, are advisable in limited numbers. The raw eggs should always be well agitated before taking.

When Good Food Is Bad.

"With milk and eggs as a foundation the patient should eat good nourishing food, including meat, fish and vegetables, simply prepared. Frying, for instance, is out of the question. Good food prepared in an unassimilable manner becomes bad food; especially is this to be noted in cases of convalescence from influenza, for the disease often manifests itself in vomiting, and in intestinal and gastric disturbances, and it is important not to weaken the digestive function by the eating of poorly prepared food or even the best of food in ill-advised quantities. The quantitive distribution of foodstuffs should be so adjusted as not to overtax the stomach but the patient should eat generously and frequently."

As a tonic to build up the blood and stimulate the shattered nerves, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are unsurpassed. These pills actually make new, rich, red blood, which reaches every organ and nerve in the body, improves the appetite, strengthens digestion and drives away the feeling of weariness and depression always following an attack of la grippe or influenza. Those who give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial will be amply repaid by the new health and strength this tonic medicine always [illegible]

DOUBLE FUNERAL MARKS LAST OF TRAGEDY IN THE BYERS HOME

A double funeral took place yesterday afternoon when Mr. and Mrs. S. Byers, who died within twenty-four hours of each other from pneumonia, were laid to rest side by side in Little Lake Cemetery. A large number of friends, fellow employes from the C.G.E. and fellow lodge members attended the impressive funeral services, which were held at the family residence, 183 Lock street, conducted by Rev. J. Rollins of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, assisted by Rev. J. A. McKenzie, of Knox Church.

The floral tributes, which were very numerous, gave evidence of the high esteem in which both husband and wife were held by all who knew them and to the deep shock which this double tragedy had given them. They included beautiful wreaths from the employees of the Canadian General Electric pattern shop and the Independent Order of Oddfellows. The pall-bears for the husband were chosen from the Oddfellows and were Messrs. E. Hardy, Chas. Thornton, Wm. Young, F. Legros, J. Roberts, and H. Williamson.

The pall-bearers for Mrs. Byers were Messrs. Stewart Cox, V. Dimmock, F. Haggart, George Allen and Roy and Walter Byers.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH HAS CONTRIBUTED $30,500

EXCEED THE OBJECTIVE AIMED AT BY NEARLY SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS

This is the record of St. Paul's Church in the Forward Movement the past three weeks: The objective of $25,000 was reached the second week of the canvass, and continued on its upward course until it has now gone beyond the objective nearly $6000, with a few pledge cards still to be returned to the treasurer. This brings to a close the most remarkable canvass in the history of St. Paul's Church.

The committee wish to thank all the contributors to the fund, and also those who gave their generous support to it, which carried the canvass to success and made it a source of pleasure to all those who had a part in it.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN REACHES HALIFAX

SAYS HEALTH IS IMPROVED BUT HE WILL NOT RESUME DUTIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Feb. 28.—Sir Robert Borden arrived in Halifax on the Carmania this morning enroute to New York, where he will be met by Lady Borden, who will accompany him on a trip to the South, which will be undertaken in a further effort to regain his lost health. Sir Robert stated this morning that while he felt much better as the result of his trip to England, he was unable to venture an opinion as to when he hoped to be restored to his normal health. He declined to discuss the political situation either in England or Canada and would make no comment on general conditions.

GROUP INSURANCE FOR COLONIAL WEAVING CO

MANAGEMENT DECIDES TO INTRODUCE THAT PLAN FOR BENEFIT EMPLOYEES

The Colonial Weaving Co., Limited, of Peterborough, of which Mr. R. R. Hall, one of our leading lawyers and barristers, is president, and Mr. A. E. Coulthard, general manager, and who has always identified himself with any forward movement in the interest of Peterborough, have decided along with other welfare work which they are interested in to insure their employees, which number about ninety, in the Prudential Insurance Co. of America. This action on the part of Mr. Hall and Mr. Coulthard only goes to prove that they are interested in the welfare of all those who are associated with them in the Colonial Weaving Co. Limited. It goes without saying that this action on their part will be greatly welcomed by the employees of the Colonial Weaving Co. where the best of feeling exists between the managership of the company and the employees.

A REMBRANDT IN CANADA.

Portrait by Famous Artist Owned by Toronto Man.

The portrait of Magdalena Van Loo, owned by Mr. Frank P. Wood, of Toronto, is one of the most valuable paintings in Canada. It was painted by the great Rembrandt. Its removal from the museum at Colmar was perfectly legitimate. The sum paid for the portrait by Mr. Wood was less than $300,000.

The foregoing is a summary of the statements made by Prof. Mavor of Toronto University regarding the purchase:

"There is not the least doubt about its being a genuine Rembrandt," said Prof. Mavor. "Nobody but Rembrandt could have painted such a portrait. It is evident that the portrait was done in one of the periods of his life when the great master was comparatively wealthy. Rembrandt, like a good many more artists, had a hard time early in life, but when good fortune came his way he spent his money lavishly. He was very fond of jewelry, and took great pleasure in displaying it on his subjects when they sat for him. The portrait of his son, Titus, for which this was a companion picture, shows Titus to be comparatively poorly dressed, and was possibly done at a different period. It is apparent that this portrait of his daughter-in-law was painted when Rembrandt was being showered with commissions. Sometimes his funds were not so bountiful, and he died comparatively poor, though not a pauper by any means."

Prof. Mavor received a letter from a friend, telling him of the arrival of the picture at New York. While there, it was examined by many connoisseurs, and it was not long before Mr. Wood, who was going through New York, heard of its presence, and he immediately went to view it, and shortly afterwards made the purchase. "But he did not give $300,000 for it as the New York newspapers say," declared Prof. Mavor. "I know the figure paid, but I am not prepared to state what it was."

A short time ago a Toronto art critic made the assertion that if the portrait were a genuine Rembrandt, it would be re-lined at least once, on account of the fact that a canvas does not last longer than one hundred years under ordinary conditions. "That is not so," said Prof. Mavor. "There is as much difference between canvases as between various pieces of cloth. There are canvases of great age in some galleries in Europe. The picture may have been re-backed; but this is a matter which does not affect the genuineness of it in the least."

"A Frenchman named Henri Rabat presented this Rembrandt to the Colmar Museum in 1842. It remained there until 1917, when the town sold it in order to buy a famous ancient abbey of the Antonites in the environs, which was the property of a German named Spetz. This man had filled it with paintings and statuary, antique furniture, tapestries, and marvels of all kinds. Upon his death his heirs offered to sell the abbey to the town, and the mayor and municipality judged the purchase to be a good one. But there wasn't any money to pay the heirs their price. This was in 1917.

"Finally it was decided to part with the Rembrandt and a valuable and historic medallion in order to get the necessary funds. These were sold to a Finnish collector, whose home is at Litsen. And this collector sold the picture to the two art firms of this city jointly.

"About six weeks ago Mr. Wood, in passing through New York, was told of the picture being here, and he lost no time in going to view it, and very little time in producing the money to buy it.

"The picture is a portrait of Magdalena Van Loo, second wife of Titus, Rembrandt's son. It was painted about 1665 for a pendant to a portrait of Titus himself, which the great master painted in 1662.

"The portrait represents a handsome woman with rather a thin face, but a most gentle and ingratiating expression. Her hair is done in the old Dutch fashion, smooth over the brow with a tangle of tiny little curls. The light falls from above on face and shoulders, which are bare, and on her arms, folded over a little King Charles terrier. On both wrists pearls are shown, and around her neck is a pearl necklace. A fine chain, which is almost invisible, suspends a large jewelled ornament at her breast. In her hair is another large jewelled ornament which catches the light in the magical Rembrandt manner.

"This picture is painted in Rembrandt's third or latest manner. It is pronounced by connoisseurs to be among the best, if it is not the best, of his paintings of this period of work."

Travel in Newfoundland.

An express train on the Reid-Newfoundland Railway, a narrow guage line, arrived in St. John's, Nfld., on Friday, February 13, after being three weeks on the way across the island from Port au Basques. The train was scheduled to make the 546 miles run in 29 hours. Several storms were encountered and it was snowed in frequently.

Passengers reported that at some exposed points the snow drifted to a height of 20 feet. They were on scanty rations much of the time, with [illegible] the [illegible] food.

BROWN WAS FAST GOING DOWN HILL

ABOUT TO QUIT WORK, BUT TAKES TANLAC AND FEELS FINE NOW.

"I told my wife one day that if I didn't find something pretty soon that would help me I would just have to quit work," said Bertram Brown, familiarly known to his friends as "Bert," who is employed by the Piercery Supply Company and resides at 46 Maynard street, Halifax, N. S., while describing his condition before taking Tanlac. Continuing, he said:

"For the past two years I suffered from the worst sort of stomach trouble, and finally became so weak and felt so tired all the time I could hardly get about. I had no appetite to speak of and could not eat the least thing without simply forcing it down, and for a long time I could not even do this at breakfast, and would go for weeks without eating a single mouthful in the morning, for I knew if I did I would suffer from it all day long. What little I did manage to eat would sour and ferment and I would bloat terribly and my heart would palpitate dreadfully. I also had such cramping pains they would almost draw me double, and such a burning sensation that it felt like there was a coal of fire in my stomach. I would have such severe attacks of heartburn they would nearly drive me wild; I would have blinding headaches, and would sometimes become so dizzy I would have to catch hold of something to keep from falling. I was extremely nervous and could get but little sleep. I would roll and toss from one side of the bed to the other all night long, and would get up in the morning completely tired out. I also suffered from constipation and was simply a bad fix every way, and for two months before I started taking Tanlac there was hardly a minute when I was free from pain and I was so weak I could hardly stand on my feet.

"One day I was talking to a friend of mine and telling him how bad I felt, when he told me how much good Tanlac has done him, and advised me to go right down to the drug store and get a bottle, as he felt sure that it would do me good also. Well, I took his advice, and I hadn't taken but a few doses when I noticed it was helping me. I have taken six bottles altogether, and I am entirely over my stomach trouble. I have a fine appetite and never suffer any bad after effects from anything I eat. My nerves are in such good condition I sleep as sound as a log all night long and always get up feeling greatly refreshed. I am regaining my lost weight and strength and my work is a pleasure to me. I have not had a headache since I began taking Tanlac, and never become dizzy, and I think Tanlac is the greatest medicine ever put on sale in Canada, and I am always recommending it whenever I get an opportunity."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by The Warne Drug Co., and by the leading druggists in every town.

WHO WILL HONOR GOD SUNDAY?

Who will honor God tomorrow by dedicating the day to His praise and glory? Only once in a generation does Sunday fall on February 29th, so to many the opportunity will come but once in a lifetime. So the motto "The Extra Day for God," has been selected as being particularly appropriate.

The services at George Street Methodist Church will be of a special character and the pastor will be in charge both morning and evening. His subject in the morning will be, "A Truth Which Everyone Needs to Know," and in the evening he will speak on "The Man Who Was Near But Not Near Enough." The Sunday School will meet as usual and the adult friends are invited to attend the session. Appropriate music will be supplied by the choir.

It is the pastor's desire that every church member and adherent will make an effort to be present at both services. A cordial invitation is extended to strangers and those who have no particular church affiliation but who are willing to honor God by dedicating tomorrow to Him.

DEAL IN SULPHIDE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Pas, Man., Feb. 28.— From reliable sources it is learned that the deal for the sale of the great sulphide ore body at Glin-Glon may be closed at any time now. The parties have got together, and a definite price fixed to the satisfaction of both sides. The terms also include, it is stated, the commencement of development work immediately with a force of men, for which supplies and machinery will be taken in before the end of March.

TWO MILLION FOR PUBLIC WORKS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Feb. 28.—About $2,000,000 will be included in the budget of the public works department, it is expected, and new buildings and bridges in different parts of the province during the coming year. The final figures are now being made up for presentation to the Legislature.

A GHOST PILOT

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Tom Singleton, to use a homely expression, was a boating inebriate. He spent all his vacations on Casco bay, on the Maine coast. There is something more in that bay than handling a boat, and that is handling what the boat is liable to bring up against. The waters are literally full of rocks.

Tom early fell in with a fisherman named Wilkins—Captain Wilkins he was called, as all men who sail their own boats in that region are—who took a fancy to the youngster because they both loved the water. Wilkins usually went out after dark, set his nets and returned about sunrise the next morning. Tom was so in love with the water that he would go out with the captain one or two nights in the week. That's what made the captain love Tom. Both were awed by the solemn grandeur of the starry dome above them. Both loved the mystical moonlight—so Tom named it—and when they got caught in a rising wind and all was black about and above them, if there was not a pleasure in it, there was a pleasure in getting ashore and in the memory of it.

But there was one weather condition that appalled Tom, and it was this that caused him to confine his excursions alone to short sails in fair weather—he dreaded a fog.

And why shouldn't he? Often when the sun shone brightly on a partly submerged rock and the foam of a gigantic wave breaking over it he would exclaim, "Just think of running on to that of a dark night or in a fog!" And the captain would say, "I've been sailing in this bay for thirty years in dark nights, in foggy nights, in all kinds of nights, and I never struck one of 'em yet."

"How do you do it?"

"I dunno. Reckon I do it as you git out of bed in the middle of the night and go downstairs for a drink of water or something, without a light."

One day when the two were sailing together Tom said that so long as he lived he would spend his vacations on Casco bay and if he grew rich he would spend the whole of each season there.

"I won't be with you when you're running your own yacht, Tommy," said the captain, "but if you ever get in a bad fix I'll help you out."

"What! After you're dead?"

"No one dies. We simply change conditions; we don't need legs and boats and such like."

When the mackerel became so scarce that it didn't pay the captain to go out nights he and Tom would cruise about among the beautiful islands of the bay, living aboard the boat. They had butterfish for breakfast, cod or lobster or clams for dinner and mackerel for supper. And as for sleeping when at anchor in a cove, with the wavelets soothing them to slumber against the sides of the boat, they kept awake only because it was so delightful.

Well, the day came when Tom Singleton was able to keep a small yacht of his own and spend the greater part of the summer cruising in her. He took her to Casco bay—he owned a cottage on Bailey's island—and enjoyed sailing to his heart's content.

But, though he knew a great deal more about navigating a boat than when a youngster, he was not up to the rocky bottom of Casco bay. Moreover, he didn't have Captain Wilkins to rely on, for the captain's old hulk was buried in the cemetery on the highest part of Orr's island, where one can see the ocean in many different parts. So Singleton was obliged to sail his own boat, confining himself to fair weather.

But if the yachtsman could tell about what the weather would be he couldn't predict freedom from fog. The coast of Maine is nearly as bad for fogs as the banks of Newfoundland. They come suddenly, and sometimes they stay a long while.

One bright morning Singleton started with his wife and children and a few friends from Bailey's island for Papham beach. They had made the voyage outward and were returning past Seguin light when a fog bank came rolling in from the eastward and enveloped them. Singleton could steer only by compass, and what is compass steering on the coast of Maine? The fog was heavy and promised to be of long duration.

Tom heard a swish of waters to port. He knew the sound and steered just in time to avoid one of the big submerged rocks of that part of the bay. The party passed a couple of hours in terror; then it began to grow dark.

The women and children were mostly in the cabin or on the forward deck. Tom had the tiller. He began to feel a resistance when he turned it, and, this continuing, he yielded to the force. He heard waters surging to port and starboard, but seemed to pass, by some unseen seamanship, between or around all dangers. He let go the tiller, and it moved not by the waves, but apparently by the unseen force.

What was Tom's astonishment at last to find himself in the narrow crooked gut between Orr's and Bailey's islands and going through safely! When he got out into the sound the fog suddenly vanished and he was enabled to steer for the dock.

No one can convince Tom Singleton that a spirit hand was not on the tiller during that perilous voyage. And he remembers Captain Wilkins' words:

"If you ever get in a bad fix I'll help you out."

John C. Olmstead, a landscape architect, is dead at Brookline, Mass. To planned the grounds of the Chicago World's Fair and the Exposition grounds at Winnipeg.

GREY COUNTY'S CENTENARIAN.

To celebrate one's hundredth birthday is not the good frtune of many people and to come to the hundred and fourth mile-stone still able to enjoy life and to be interested in the every-day affairs of the community is decidedly unique. Yet up in Grey county, near the town of Owen Sound, lives a little old lady who, on January 10, was 104 years of age. Her name? Why anyone from that district will tell you of Mrs. Ann Brown, of The Glen, Sydenham, Grey county's only centenarian, and who is said to be the only surviving witness of the coronation of Queen Victoria.

Born in the quaint old village of Topcliffe, in Yorkshire, England, her early days were spent in the quietness and seclusion of the little country town. Her earliest recollection is of her grandfather preparing a feast on the village green for the men of the Topcliffe Company of Regulars, just returned from campaigning against Napoleon Bonaparte in Belgium and France. The first venture from the protecting shelter of her grandfather's cottage was to the great city of London. When a dark-eyed young maid of twenty summers she went to visit her mother in the great city, traveling from Hull in one of the first steamboats. On arriving in London she found that everything was in a state of bustle and excitement in preparation for the coronation of the young Queen. Her step-father was an upholsterer in the employ of the royal family and, to please his shy young visitor from Yorkshire, secured a pass for her into Westminster Abbey to witness the ceremony of the coronation. On the great day, June 28, 1838, she took her place with hundreds of others inside the Abbey and waited breathlessly for the great event. According to Mrs. Brown the appearance of the Queen was rather disappointing. She had been picturing to herself a tall beautiful woman, and instead she saw a girl, two years younger than herself, rather short, and quite ordinary-looking.

In 1862 Mrs. Brown made another journey from her home in Yorkshire to visit the First World's Fair, promoted by Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's Consort, and held in the Crystal Palace, London. On the death of her husband in 1863, Mrs. Brown decided that she could better her fortunes in a new land. With indomitable spirit she set out with her five small children for Canada. For three years she resided in Owen Sound. In 1866 she took up 120 acres of land in the township of Sydenham, four miles from Owen Sound. Here she has lived ever since, often under disheartening and difficult circumstances. In spite of the primitive condition of the country she wrested a living from the soil and raised and educated her little family.

During the visit of the Duke of Devonshire to Owen Sound in June, 1918, His Excellency visited Mrs. Brown and chatted with her for some time. She is still quite active, goes about the farm, reads a little, and writes in a clear steady hand. During the war she knitted nearly a dozen pairs of socks for the local branch of the Women's Patriotic League. Her vitality is wonderful, and she has many friends in Grey County who hope that they may be able to congratulate her upon her 105th birthday.

Cut and Run.

"Cut and run" originated in a peculiar custom of the Egyptian embalmers. A low caste was employed to make the first incision in the corpse, a process viewed with much dislike by the people, who held him accursed who should mutilate the dead. As soon as the fellow had made his "cut" he had to run through a storm of curses, stones and sticks. He "cut" for a living and had to "run" for his [illegible]

Cuss Words in Print.

The London British public is not so sensitive about a cuss word or two these days.

Lately some of the reformers and reconstructionists have been sowing their wild oaths all over their speeches, and they're being reprinted in the press just exactly as they fell from the orator's lips.

"Hell" in the newspapers of to-day is "hell," not "h--l," which was an anaemic rendering of a fine expletive, considerate of the feelings of old-time readers.

Gen. Ironside came back from Russia and told every reporter who approached him, "I think a damn sight too much has been said about Russia already," and nobody thinks any the worse of Gen. Ironside nor of the newspaper for writing damn instead of d--n.

They All Have It.

Everybody at our house
  Has the world unrest:
Ought to hear 'em start to grouse
  Soon as up and dressed.

Father won't go near his store,
  'Phones his orders down;
Tells his clerks to charge 'em more
  Now he owns the town.

Mother runs a lot of clubs,
  Heads the Anti-Beers:
Fills the house with long-haired dubs
  With long-haired ideas.

Sister's nerves are in her feet,
  Powder's on her nose:
She says shimmying is sweet,
  And she needs new clothes.

Brother plays the idle snob,
  Surely does know how:
Swears he will not take a job
  Under ten good thou'.

Me-unrest? Back to the farm!
  I drove army plugs:
Had six shots thrown in my arms—
I'm immune from bugs.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers You.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become sluggish; they become overworked; get backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

"THE CRY OF A LOST SOUL"

Subject of Discourse at Murray St. Monday Morning

The above is the subject announced for Murray Street Baptist Church at the evening service tomorrow. At the morning hour a message from the president of the Baptist Convention, Rev. John MacNeill, D.D., will be presented.

The Baptist people are showing that the splendid giving in connection with the Forward Movemnet was only an incident in the campaign. Now that the matter of grateful giving has been attended to, the president of the convention presents a subject in an altogether different line, which will appeal to every one who knows the grace of compassion.

HARTLEY DEWART FOR CHANGE IN STATUTE

WOULD ALLOW MUNICIPALITIES SELF DETERMINATION AS TO SUNDAY CARS

Mr. G. N. Gordon received a letter from H. Hartley Dewart, the leader of the Opposition in the Legislature, saying that he would be glad to support an amendment to the law allowing cities to vote on the question of whether the ratepayers desired that Sunday street cars should be opperated. Mr. Dewart put his reasons for supporting this amendment on the ground that the public should be trusted to manage their own affairs, and undue restrictions should not be placed upon municipalities in matters of purely local concern.

TYRONNE POWERS NEXT SEASON TO PRODUCE TWO FAMOUS PLAYS

WILL BE SEEN IN "BUNCH OF VIOLETS" AND "THE MIDDLEMAN

The remarkable success which has attended the transcontinental tour of the famous English actor, Tyrone Power, so far in "The Servant in the House," has encouraged Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., the All-Canadian theatrical organization, under which Mr. Power is touring, to go ahead with arrangements for a similar tour across the continent by Mr. Power next year in two famous plays well known and popular everywhere—"A Bunch of Violets" and "The Middleman."

Special productions will be built in Canada for both plays, and special companies engaged to support Mr. Power. The great reception given these two works throughout Canada when they last were played by E. S. Willard, affords a good index as to the propriety of their selection as the next vehicles in which Mr. Power will be presented.

The delightful sentiment of "A Bunch of Violets" has made a fragrant play for all theatre-goers who like clean drama. This is what Trans-Canada Theatres, Ltd., aim to give the Canadian public.

The dramatic strength and the intense humanity that are found in "The Middleman" similarly commend that drama to those who find in the theatre something more than a place in which to idle away an empty hour or two.

Plans for an imposing list of other productions for next season by Trans-Canada, Ltd., will be announced in due course.

Bookings made by Trans-Canada booking office for their own and affiliated houses for this and next season include "Chu Chin Chow" for return dates; Dais Belasco's "Tiger Rose," "Zeigfeld Follies," "Al. Jolson." Tyrone Power will be seen in "The Servant in the House" at the Grand.

ORGANIZATION OF THE OFFICER OF THE 57TH

IS NOW COMPLETE AND LIST WILL BE SENT TO HEAQ-QUARTERS

The organization of the officers of the 57th Regiment has been completed and will be forwarded to Kingston, for approval by Militia Headquarters, in the course of a day or two.

There are still a few vacancies for platoon commanders and the appointments of medical officer and paymaster. These two latter appointments are to be filled by officers of the C.A.M.C. and C.A.P.C. and officers are in view for these appointments.

It will be noted that in the slate of officers here published that all the company officers are active young men of sterling qualities who have all seen service and are highly qualified for their appointments.

Capt. Winterbottom has been appointed adjutant and is employed permanently, while Sergt.-Major Instructor Dunkerly has been appointed S. M. and Instructor to the Regiment. It is expected that a permanently employed orderly room clerk will be on duty also.

Recruiting will commence on Tuesday evening, March 2nd, and every Tuesday and Thursday evening thereafter. It is expected to commence drilling at once. Special classes will be started in the various branches of infantry training.

OUTSKIRTS OF EMPIRE.

Many Natives of New Guinea Have Not Seen a White Man.

"Strange though it may appear, there are thousands of British subjects living to-day in various parts of our possessions who have never seen a white face, nor even heard of the mighty institution of which they form part—the British Empire. Their world of living things ends when earth meets sky."

Thus E. W. Pearson Chinnery summed up the situation, when invited by a representative of the Christian Science Monitor to tell something of the yet little known land of New Guinea on which he is an authority. Mr. Chinnery has been engaged in administrative exploration work in all parts of the territory since 1909, save for the interruption of the last two years when he left to enlist in the Australian Flying Corps.

After the war was over, Mr. Chinnery entered Christ's College, Cambridge, as a research student in anthropology. Since then some interesting papers have been read by him before the British Association, Royal Anthropological Institute, Royal Colonial Institute, Horniman's Museum, and other great bodies.

Among the least known of the isolated corners of the Empire beloved by Mr. Chinnery, are those hidden away in the mountains and valleys of the interior of British New Guinea. As an officer of the magisterial staff of Papua, he has explored to introduce the culture of civilization to many thousands of its inhabitants. Little is known outside Papua, he explains, of the results achieved by district officers. A comparatively small portion of Papua is under control; but even so the future of the territory is assured, for the area under settlement and development has given indications of great promise. Petroleum fields have been discovered; minerals (copper and gold) and rich agricultural products are exported; while the portion under cultivation increases annually.

The chief asset of this young colony, however, according to Mr. Chinnery, is its native population. Those people who have already absorbed the elements of civilization supply labor for the plantations and other industries upon which development depends. But as settlement expands, so the need for labor increases, and to meet its demands the administration is forced to increase the area under control.

For the purpose of extending government influence, the territory is divided into administrative areas, each in charge of a resident or assistant resident magistrate. Detachments of armed native constabulary (Papuans) under white officers, are stationed in each division under the control of the district officers, officials charged with the development of those races in their districts which are under control, and with the responsibility of exploring the unknown portions and introducing civilization among their inhabitants.

Mr. Chinnery estimates that during the term of his service in this capacity the seeds of civilization were sown among no less than 13,000 people. Of this number, he says, 11,000 had never seen a white man other than himself.

An officer, Mr. Chinnery says, is said to have sown effectively the seed of civilization among savage races, when he has induced them to abandon such practices as homicide, head-hunting, and cannibalism, and has been able to appoint one of their number in each district to represent government authority, and to bring all cases of wrongdoing before the magisterial courts for adjustment.

It is on the foundation of such practices as the above mentioned, Mr. Chinnery says, that the native builds his whole social and religious structure. Interference which may destroy the very essence of his welfare, must, he thinks, be carried out in such a way that the stability of cultural institutions will not be impaired. As he says, this is no small task, for in the first place the district officer must gain the full confidence of his people, and establish the proper relationship between Government and subject.

He must also devote intensive study to their cultures, and to the modes of thought which produce customs antagonistic to civilized standards. He must offer, in place of these, a choice of substitutes which will be equally effective in perpetuating their welfare, and while they are struggling to readjust themselves, he must be ever at hand, patient and helpful. He must always remember that his intrusion among them has shattered the faith built up by many generations of tradition, and that in its place are cultures wholly alien to them, of which he is the central figure.

When he has guided them safely through the initial stages of transition, and has retained their confidence throughout; when they consult him day and night on social and domestic matters, accepting his judgments; when they welcome him in their villages; then—but not before—says Mr. Chinnery, he may be reasonably certain that he has effectively sown the seed of civilization.

No Cause to Worry.

A physician on a liner made a great use of sea water among his patients. Whatever their trouble, a dose of the briny liquid was given them. One day the doctor fell overboard. A great bustle consequently ensued on board, in the midst of which the captain came up and inquired the cause. "Oh, it's nothing, sir," answered a tar, "only the doctor has fallen into his own medicine chest."

Galway a Port of Call.

Interest is being revived in a proposal to make Galway, Ireland, a port of call. The Dublin corporation, which in 1917 passed a resolution in favor of the creation of a great harbor at Galway to deal with American and Canadian trade, has returned to the subject and passed another resolution in similar terms.

Dyeing In England.

A demonstration in London by the Knox Guild of Design and Crafts showed the beautiful results produced by ordinary methods of dyeing. Some woolen stuffs woven by members of the guild with primitive apparatus were dyed with privt, bracken, gorse and other well-known plants and even with soot from the chimney, the last producing a beautiful old gold tint.

Line of Swiftest Descent.

What is the line of swiftest descent? To any one not acquainted with the laws of higher mathematics a proposition such as this would appear absurd, the most obvious answer being a straight line. However, it has been proved by mathematicians that the line of swiftest descent is a curve called the cycloid. It is this curve that the eagle unconsciously utilises in his wonderfully swift swoop to his prey. The analysis of the curve is simply a straight line motion combined with a circular motion. The best illustration showing this is a cartwheel as it rolls along the ground. Any point on the rim of the wheel is describing a cycloid, and no point is at any time describing a circle or going in a straight line. A peculiar thing is deduced from this knowledge, and that is that no point on the rim of a wheel rolling on a surface goes round the center of the wheel, for the center is describing a straight line, and all the points on the rim are describing cycloids; thus as no circular motion exists, the statement holds.—New York Press.

Lord Saye and Sele.

Among curious titles must be reckoned that of Lord Saye and Sele, which sound like a firm determination to stand by what has been said, even to delivering a duly attested and sealed deed—an irrevocable "what I have said, I have said," in fact. But this odd double title has nothing to do with saying and sealing, says an exchange. It was in its origin the Barony by Writ of Saye, created in 1313, and extinct or in abeyance by 1399. It was revived in 1447 in favor of a Fienens of Hurtsmonceaux, who took the additional title of "Sele", which comes from one of the Seals in Kent—perhaps the village of Seal, near Sevenoaks. The title of "Saye" was assumed by reason of a descent from that family through the new peer's grand-

Girls in Great Britain Are Now Studying Charm As Husbands Are Scarce

FREED from war work and war worries and no longer having to fight for the vote, a considerable proportion of the feminine population of Great Britain is beginning to analyze the effects of the new independence which has come to them.

In fact, the new craze among London society women is self-study. By interesting themselves in analytical psychology these women believe they can stethoscope their own natures and discover how many personalities are lodged within themselves. After finding the best one, they thereafter submerge the other personalities, of which many women are said to have three distinct varieties. But there is a vastly larger number of women more interested in arguing a woman's right to choose her own mate. This last is the burning question because more than a million girls are doomed to be husbandless here because of the shortage of men.

In one paper there is now proceeding an animated argument about the attractions of tall women and short ones. The short ones say that the tall women are not so affectionate. The tall ones reply that their seeming austerity is only a part of their general beauty.

Dr. Alfred Schofield has found a new species of women which he calls "latchkey girls," or economically independent women who will want to select their own mates.

Mrs. Belloc Lowndes, the author, says that as a Frenchwoman she believes "arranged marriages" are immensely successful and that Cupid ought to be retired in favor of fathers and mothers.

Although the seven women appointed magistrates by the Lord High Chancellor at the end of December were the first of their sex to be thus designated in Great Britain, the first woman to actually sit as a judge in a police court was Mrs. Ada Jane Summers.

Elected in 1912 as the first woman member of the Stalybridge Council, she was made Mayor of that Cheshire town last November and thus became Chief Magistrate of the police court there. As such she took her seat recently and was welcomed by a full bench of magistrates.

"I did not find it an ordeal," she told an interviewer. "I am not nervous—though I am not a speaker; the cases were trivial. I was glad they were so simple the first morning, and also," with a smile, "that I was able to let them off."

Asked if she had any decided views as to whether sentences should be severe or not, Mrs. Summers replied: "No. It depends on the case and the culprit, doesn't it? I think an old offender should be punished severely, but I do not agree with punishing children. I think the parents are to blame more often than the children. I shall be interested in those which concern women. A woman understands about a woman better than a man."

WINTER WEATHER HARD ON LITTLE ONES

Our Canadian winters are exceedingly hard on the health of little ones. The weather is often so severe that the mother cannot take the little one out for an airing. The consequence is the baby is confined to overheated, badly ventilated rooms, takes cold and becomes cross and peevish. Baby's Own Tablets should be given to keep the little one healthy. They are a mild laxative which regulate the stomach and bowels and thus prevent colds. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Paris at Night.

To a traveler arriving at night Paris reveals a glamour and conceals a mystery—the excited, gesticulating porters that greet the train as though they were there to welcome friends and eager to serve them; the uncertain lights of the train shed, the dinning in the ears of a strange language—a beautiful strange language—and the wild, exhilarating flight in a trunk laden taxi through unknown streets.

There is glamour, if you will, in the lights of the restaurants, in the dizzy crowds and in the broad, brazen avenues teeming with a race of people who like to believe that every day is a holiday, but there is mystery in the silent by streets, lined with high blank walls and darkened windows, where a footstep echoes dismally and the beat of a horse's hoofs resounds like musketry, and there is mystery, too, in the stretches of fragrant gardens, with their treetops reaching up dark masses into the golden glow that hangs like a halo above the City of Lights.—Gordon Arthur Smyth in Scribner's.

Judging a Camel.

One way to popularity with Arabs, it appears, is the acquirement of expert acquaintance with the camel, its character, habits, personal appearance, and history. Such knowledge, to be sure, is not a complete equipment for winning the confidence of Arabs, but, according to Lowell Thomas, describing, in Asia, the ascendancy that an English archaeologist, now known to the world as Col. Lawrence, gained over the desert tribes, it is a great help. Mr. Thomas, incidentally, has learned a good deal about the "ship of the desert" himself, and whoever reads his article in Asia will be that much better prepared to enjoy the menagerie of next summer's traveling circus, even if he never has occasion to "talk camel" with a surprised and delighted Arab.

The finest breeds of camel, one learns, come from central Arabia, where there are six different species, none of which has more than one hump. And another name for this one-humped camel is "dromedary," which comes from the language of the Greeks, and means "a camel that runs." By his hump, moreover, shall ye know a camel, and this useful part of him should be of hard, fatless muscle. Nor should your camel be either too fat or too thin. Long legs are desirable and a small waist. Over good ground a first-class Arabian dromedary can trot as fast as 22 miles an hour, canter up to 28 miles, and gallop at 32. But for a whole day's journey seven miles an hour is his reasonable gait, and if you are starting on a journey of some hundreds of miles, it is best to be patient and keep your camel at a walk. On one occasion, however, when speed was necessary, Col. Lawrence did 300 miles in three days on camel-back.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

PUGILIST'S MANAGER SAYS MILL GOES TO MAN WITH DEMPSEY'S SIGNATURE

Heavy Weight Champion Declares He Will Not go to Europe to Fight the Frenchman.

Paris, Feb. 28.— That a fight between Georges Carpentier and Jack Dempsey, for the heavyweight championship of the world will go to whatever promoter succeeds in signing Dempsey to a contract is the gist of an interview with M. Descamp, Carpentier's manager, which was published by Sporting, a weekly publication.

"I have given my signature to C. B. Cohran, of London, Theodore Vienne, of Paris, William Fox of New York, and Tex Rickard, as I shall give it to anyone who can bring me sufficient guarantees, always, however, with the provision that Dempsey's signature be obtained," said M. Descamps.

"Mr. Cochran is a personal friend of mine. That is why I gave him the preference after Carpentier's match with Beckett. But up to this date he has been unable to secure Dempsey's signature. Meanwhile I have received a telegram from Jack Kearns, manager of Dempsey, saying that Dempsey had not signed with anyone. He also advised me strongly to deal with Tex Rickard and asked me to go to the United States, where he said Kearns and Rickard were awaiting me. Carpentier and I will leave March 13.

"I am not forgetting that Cohran holds Carpentier practically bound until the end of the year, but inasmuch as he has not succeeded in securing Dempsey's signature, and when he realises that this will be impossible, he is too good a sport to stand in our way of putting the fight through, because should Dempsey sign with either Rickard or Fox the contract Cochran has with us becomes null."

Vienne, the Paris promoter, has virtually given up hope of holding a bout between Carpentier and Dempsey in France, owing to the exchange rate situation, and Sporting says it is the opinion of Descamps and all sporting men in Paris that if the fight takes place it will be in the United States.

To Indict Jack and Jack

San Francisco, Feb. 28. — The return of the Federal Grand Jury looking into the record of Jack Dempsey during the war is being awaited here with interest, as it is reported that an indictment will be filed by the jury for both Dempsey and his manager, Jack Kearns.

Will Fight in United States

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 28.—Jack Kearns, manager of Jack Dempsey, heavyweight pugilist champion, denied today that he had communicated with M. Descamps, Georges Carpentier's manager, and said that he would not negotiate for a championship match with Carpentier until the Frenchman arrived to the United States.

"It is a mistake that I cabled to M. Descamps or communicated with him in any way," said Kearns, commentig on an interview with Descamps, published today in Paris. The European champion's manager was credited with saying that Kearns cabled that Dempsey had not been signed by any promoter and urged that negotiations be opened with Tex Rickard.

"There will be nothing doing from us until Descamps and Carpentier get to New York," said Kearns. "Then we will really see who has Carpentier. We do not care to run into litigation by signing up until we know who has the Frenchman.

"One thing is certain— the fight will be in the United States and not in England or France. We will not not go to Europe. That is final."

FATHER OF POLE VAULT, DEAD

Princeton, Feb. 28.— George Goldie, Princeton University's first physical director, who died at his home here Monday, as widely known in athletic circles both as an athlete himself and a trainer of athletes. He was 78 years old.

Mr. Goldie at one time was the holder of the world's records in the standing broad jump. He is said to have inaugurated the use of the pole in jumping for height, and was known as "father of the pole vault."

Mr. Goldie came to Princeton in 1869 from Montreal, of which city he was a native. He remained here until 1885, when he became the first coach of the New York Athletic Club. In 1893 he returned to Princeton and was actively associated with the university's athletic affairs until 1911, when he retired. During his first period with Princeton he turned out several championship gym teams and was the originator of a number of swings and twists among them the now abandoned "ladder." From 1869 to 1885 he held the five and the three-year all-around championship titles of the United States and the Caledonia Club of Canada.

YANKS ARE FAVORED BY MANAGER OF TIGERS

JENNINGS THINKS ADDITION OF RUTH INSURES NEW YORK 1920 PENNANT

Scranton, Pa., Feb. 28.—Just back from the meeting of the big leagues in Chicago, Hugh Jennings, manager of the Detroit Americans, found time to say a few words by way of discussion of the development at the conference of the moguls.

Hughie said the Yank owners virtually assured Gotham of the 1920 pennant by buying up the demon swatter from Boston. Asked if he thought the acquisition of Ruth meant a great deal to the Yanks, the leader of the Tigers smiled and said:

Hughie Guesses Well.

"Well, sir, if the Yankees don't win the pennant this year I am a very sad guesser and Cap Huston is even a sadder one. With Ruth and the others, New York looks to have the strongest team in the league.

"A great deal depends upon Ruth and also a good deal on the start of the Yanks. It was said by Frazee that Ruth was inclined to kick over the traces and be the law unto his own self.

"There are several other temperamental chaps on the New York team, and if things do not start off right there will be disputes that will tend to form the club into cliques, each likely to be full of glee if the other falls down.

Need Good Start.

"If, however, the Yanks start off by winning the first six or seven games, the chances are that these petty jealousies will be reduced to a minimum and things will probably sail along nicely. But once let there be any friction and the team will go to pieces and go fast.

"No, an all-star team does not necessarily mean a pennant. I have in mind the old Chicago team of the Brotherhood days. Every man on it was a star. Yet the club finished in fourth place.'

"I will say that the Yankees on paper look to me to be a better club than the White Sox, and that right now Cleveland seems to be the only team likely to beat them, though Detroit is in good shape and will be heard from right from the start."

Surprise Coming.

Jennings said in his opinion it was about a 50-50 victory for the warring factions of the American League, but the best thing about it all is that peace has surely resulted. He says that nobody but the moguls themselves know what went on behind those closed doors, and some day, if the real truth does come out, there are going to be a whole lot of surprises that will cause some gasps and some laughs.

Jennings said that he did not believe that the board of review, composed of Col. Ruppert, of the New York team, and Clark Griffith, of Washington, wil lamount to much except to act as advisers to President Johnson—a sort of check as it were.

An Instrument of Providence

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

I was walking on the beach, watching the waves come rolling in before a gale and throwing up driftwood, when a bottle was tossed at my feet. I extracted a paper from it on which was written:

We are going to pieces. Whoever gets this go to Norman D. Carlisle and tell him he will find my will in my desk in secret drawer.

This was all—no date, no signature, no address as to where Norman D. Carlisle would be found.

That night I went to bed thinking about the message. Suppose it was genuine. Somebody was enjoying property that belonged to another. But it seemed to me that if it were genuine the writer would have given at least the city in which the person for whom it was intended lived. If the perpetrator was doing the thing for sport or to pass the time or because he hadn't any more sense he would have given it.

And yet perhaps that's just what he wouldn't do. He might not like to particularize. On the other hand, a man who is about to be dumped into a roaring ocean might leave something out that he should have put in.

I was impelled to find Norman D. Carlisle. I didn't wish to engage in looking for a needle in a haystack, but I couldn't resist the feeling that it was my bounden duty to do so. There were then some 80,000,000 people in the United States alone. The name was Anglo-Saxon, and the person might be somewhere in the great British countries. Nevertheless when I found that I couldn't let the matter alone I went into it methodically. I put a personal advertisement in one newspaper in every city in the United States whose inhabitants numbered 500,000 or over for the said Norman D. Carlisle. I received several replies signed Norman D. Carlisle, the middle name usually differing. I wrote each of them, asking if he had lost a relative at sea, but they all answered in the negative—that is, so far as they knew.

After six months I put in another advertisement for Mr. Carlisle and received a reply from a Norman D. Carlisle living in a town of about 50,000 people. He had seen the ad. while in the city where it had been inserted. I asked him if he had lost a relative at sea, and he replied "No." I dropped the matter so far as he was concerned, but later he wrote me that he was a lawyer and had had a client who had sailed from Rio de Janeiro in a vessel that was catalogued among missing ships.

After some correspondence he sent me a check for expenses, and I went to see him. He made an engagement for me to meet a lady in his office, and I was introduced to Miss Edith Parks, twenty-one years old and comely. She appeared to be a lady, but was shabbily dressed. I was informed that her uncle had been lost on the missing vessel from Rio. I brought out the paper I had found, which I had carefully kept, and as soon as she saw it she said she believed that it had been written by her uncle. Some of his letters were produced, and all doubt was removed. The message, though scrawled hastily in a trembling hand, was found to correspond with the uncle's writing.

I was then told that Miss Parks had been brought up by this uncle, who was wealthy, he being unmarried and without children. After he had been declared legally dead the courts had set about administering his estate and had already found forty persons who were heirs at law.

Since Mr. Weatherby, the man who had been shipwrecked, had given Miss Parks to understand that she was to be his heir it was likely that the will mentioned in the message gave his property to her. But the desk—where was it? Mr. Weatherby's furniture had been sold a year before. Who had bought the desk? No one could tell.

Since I had gone so far in the matter I did not propose to be beaten now. Advertising having availed, I advertised for the person who had bought a desk at a sale of the effects of Cyrus Weatherby. In due time I received a reply from the purchaser. I wrote him that a niece of the deceased wished to redeem it and asked him to fix a price. He said he would sell it for $100. Miss Parks had no money to pay for it, so I mailed the man a check for the amount. The desk was sent to me, and, taking it into a cellar, I chopped it into kindling wood. Among the rubbish lay the papers in a secret drawer, and, taking this up, I found one marked "Last Will and Testament of Cyrus Blake Weatherby." I read it and found that he left all his property to his beloved niece Edith Parks.

That same evening I called on Miss Parks with the will that changed her condition from poverty to wealth. She sat like a statue staring at the paper as though she were looking through it rather than at it. I asked her what she was thinking about, but she did not hear me. I repeated the question, and, apparently awakening from a dream, she said:

"It doesn't seem possible that uncle, about to die on a boundless ocean, too wrought upon to give my address, could have reached me among the millions of people of the earth."

I did not tell her so, but she soon came to recognize me as the instrument chosen by Providence to find her.

After awhile she rewarded me by giving me herself.

A rural darky in Georgia, of little experience in traveling, presented himself to the ticket agent at the railway station and inquired the price of transportation to Macon. "Three dollars and forty cents," said the agent. "Oo!" exclaimed the darky, "dat shore is high! I'd ruther walk." And off he started. He had not proceeded very far when the train came along, whistling as it neared the station. "Yo' needn't whistle fo' me," muttered the darky, as he trudged along. "I made yo' an offer oncet an' yo' wouldn't take it. So yo' kin go on, train. I ain't a-comin' wif yo'."

LOCAL MARKET TODAY

Heavy roads and colder weather resulted in a smaller market than usual this morning. Consequently prices were higher all round. Eggs were stationary at 70 cents a dozen, although one or two attempted to get 75 cents, but later on came down to the 70-cent level. There were but three people selling chickens on the market this morning. Two were asking 35 cents a pound, and the third, with slightly better looking chickens, asked 40 cents. All classes of meat were up slightly in price, the increase being a cent a pound in most cases. The following were some of the prices being charged this morning:—

Dairy Produce
Butter, pound, 67c and 68c.
Eggs, dozen, 70c and 75c.
Chickens, pound, 35c and 40c.

Meat
Pork, pound, 27c and 29c.
Beef, pound, 18c and 21c.
Lamb, pound, 32c and 35c.

Garden Produce
Potatoes, bag, $4 straight.
Turnips, bag, $1.
Carrots, peck, 40c.
Parsnips, peck, 40c.
Beets, peck, 40c.
Onions, peck, $1.25 and $1.35.
White Beans, quart, 25c.
Cabbage, per head, 15c to 30c.
Apples, peck, 90c.

OBITUARY

GEORGE CLARK.

The death took place at Springville this morning of George Clark, a life-long resident of the direct and a well-known and successful farmer. Mr Clark had been suffering from bronchial trouble for more than a year and lately his condition had become much worse so that his end was not unexpected. He was born at Springville 60 years ago on the same farm where he died. He and his brother have worked the same farm all their lives. He never married and took little interest in affairs outside of the farm, but was always looked upon as an expert farmer.

There survive two brothers, J. D. and Martin Clark, and one sister, Mrs. John Burns, all of Springville. The funeral will probable take place on Monday.

THE WEATHER

This morning was ushered in by six degrees below zero, an overcast sky, with hoar frost on the trees and fences. During the night twenty below zero was reached. This will surprise some who were not out, but those who were will not question the figures. A number of people have asked me as to the dates of low temperatures here in Peterboro. The following are the lowest: Feb. 10, 1912, 30 degrees below; Jan 19, 1904, 30 below, Feb. 17, 1896, 38 below; Feb. 18, 1892, 34 degrees below.—W. P.

EMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO

Increase in Placements is Reported by Department

The Employment Service of the Department of Labor of the Ontario Government reports an increase of placements for the week ending February 14. During this week 1891 applicants were placed of whom 1017 were soldiers and 874 civilians. The greatest number placed was in general laboring, where positions were obtained for 1064 applicants. In lumbering 184 were placed, and in the manufacturing of metals, 100.

In the Women's Department 124 applicants were placed. Of these 59 were in domestic and personal service and 48 in commercial lines. 185 women were placed in 276 casual jobs.

I KNOW IT IS TRUE

About ten years ago a farmer of Dummer Township, well past fifty, was used up with rheumatism. He was cured, and has remained so, by taking Gallagher's Kidney Remedy. If you could only see the splendid herbs—Buchu Leaves, Mandrake Root, Juniper Berries, and many others—all put in a big boiler, steeped, and the tea drawn off, you would say with me that it would be good for one's whole system, whether needing a Kidney Remedy or not. A little Blood Purifier at night to keep the stomach, liver and bowels active, and the Kidney Remedy before meals to keep the kidneys right and help the stomach, and there you are on the road to good health.

Your friend,
JACK SPEILL.

BUTTER BY MAIL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Saskatoon, Sas., Feb 28.— Butter is being sent through the Saskatoon Post Office in fairly large quantities to England. This traffic has grown throughout Canada in a surprising manner, and has taken such a place in the parcel post business that the postal authorities in Ottawa have issued regulations instructing the public how butter must be packed.

NO TRUTH IN RUMOR OF QUARANTINE FOR THE Y

INMATE OF THAT INSTITUTION NOT SUFFERING FROM CONTAGIOUS DISEASE

During the early part of the week one of the residents of the local Y M. C. A. was taken sick and the rumor was current in the city to the effect that the "Y." was to be quarantined. The patient was placed under the supervision of the Medical Health Officer, who yesterday gave him a clean bill of health as far as contagious diseases are concerned. The ailment proved to be merely a severe cold but all precautions were taken by the Y. M. C. A. authorities in case it developed into anything of a more serious nature.

The Young Men's class will meet for a supper at the Y.M.C.A. at 6:45 on Monday evening. There will be the regular speakers for the occasion and a good time is promised for all.

AT KNOX CHURCH TOMORROW

Rev. James Rollins and L. Joffe Will Be the Speakers

The services at Knox Church tomorrow will be conducted as follows: In the morning Mr. L. Joffe will preach. His subject will be "The Quality of Faith, the Bulwark of the Church." Mr. Joffe has spoken on this topic effectively in other cities and it is hoped that there will be a good turn-out of the members of the congregation.

In the evening the preached will be the Rev. James Rollins, the esteemed pastor of St. Andrews.

AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

Lewis Joffe, Converted Jew, Will Preach in the Evening.

The minister's morning subject will be "Reconstruction."—not from the national but from the individual point of view.

At the evening service, Mr. Lewis Joffe, who has been heard with great acceptance in several of the city churches will preach on "The Crux of Christ."

Mr. Joffe is an Israelite, who accepts Christ as the hope not only of Israel but of the world. This handling of such a subject at the Crux of Christ is bound to be fresh—informing and interesting to the Western world.

A Government report says lack of moisture is beginning to tell on the Kansas wheat crop and danger of serious loss of planted acreage is threatened.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE PETERBOROUGH FAIR

Editor Review:— A few years ago it was proposed that the Fair Grounds should be purchased from Mr. R. A Morrow and kept for a permanent fair ground. The matter was submitted to the people and voted on; the result was that the project was snowed under, not because the people disapproved of an agricultural show, but because they are opposed to paying out their money for what always has been, and what they considered would continue to be a continuing niusance.

When not in use as a fair ground for three days in each year it was a nuisance.

It consists of 20 acres of land stretching for 1800 feet across the city absolutely dividing the north from the south by a belt of land 436 feet in width closing up all roads and streets. It would close up 160 lots so to be free from city taxes, shutting out improvements of every kind, preventing the erection of a quarter of a million dollars' worth of buildings and making it necessary to travel around this 1800 foot block to go to the south part of the city, or from the south to the north. When not in use for a fair the ground is used for a lot of horsemen to trot horses on, and for a couple of days each summer as a circus ground, and on other days and nights as a rendezvous for tramps and night birds.

Mr. Denne proposed that a lot of money be expended on the ground for new buildings. This will call for money from the taxpayers; every new building will fasten this incubus on the land and make it constantly more costly to keep up and more difficult to pull up stakes. If the city must have a fair, all right, but decide early so that the people won't be hampered Buy 20 or more acres a couple of miles out of town on the line of one of our railways. They go out from the centre thus: South on the old Cobourg and Peterborough line, southeast on the C. P. R., north-west on Lindsay branch west on C. P. R., south on G. T. R. to Millbrook

Surely the fair directors can get suitable land within two miles of the city for one-tenth part of the cost of the Morrow land And such fair ground would not cut the city in two and injure the city.

This present fair ground with its unsightly fence and enclosed darkness is not a good thing for the city. It is no oranment and it hurts all the property around it. I would attempt to controvert all that might be said in favor of a yearly fair, though whether it is forth the cost is another matter.

Let this town not fasten down an eternal nuisance on the shoulders of the city—cut the knot now when it is easy done and you will never cease to be thankful for your act in getting this burden off your shoulders

RAW SUGAR COSTS LESS

No Excuse, Dealers Say, For Another Increase in Prices.

The opinion among the local retailers as to the possible results of the recent action of the Board of Commerce in releasing sugar from control is that it should not have the effect of increasing the cost of that article to the consumer but was more likely to result in a reduction in price if anything. One retailer gave the information that at the present time the cost of raw sugar was $2 a hundred less than it was a couple of months ago and there was therefore no justification for the refineries to increase prices. Whether they would or not, however, was another question.

FIUME UNDER SIEGE; STRICT BLOCKADE IS MAINTAINED

PEOPLE SAID TO BE STARVING AND READY FOR A CHANGE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Fiume, March 1.—"The siege of Fiume has begun with a stringent blockade against commodities, including foodstuffs. We shall exercise an iron blockade against the forces of Gabriele D'Annunzio," stated General Caviglia of the Government forces. "Perhaps we may appear to be lenient towards those occupying Fiume, but it is not so. I am not offering the slightest atom, but the children must be cared for. That is why I allowed twenty children to leave Fiume for Milan."

A prominent banker who had previously been a strong supporter of Italian annexation stated people were starving and are now ready for an international city, occupied either by a British or an American garrison.

LINER BOHEMIAN WENT ASHORE IN SNOW STORM

PASSENGERS RESCUED AND BROUGHT TO HALIFAX TODAY ON TUG

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, March 1.—The liner Bohemian, which left Boston last Saturday, went ashore this morning in snow storm at Sambre Ledges. Tugs have rescued the passengers and are bringing them to the port. The vessel carried sixty-four cabin passengers, a crew of two hundred and a valuable cargo. She had been expected to dock at Halifax for a few hours today to take on more cargo and coal. The passengers were taken off early this morning and brought here by the tub Reebling. No further word has been received of the condition of the ship which grounded on [illegible] Rocks, known as the Blind Sisters. A number of tugs are standing by the wrecked steamer.

VISITORS FROM UNITED STATES TO THRONG KAWARTHA DISTRICT

Motor Boat Owners Will Use Trent Water Way During the Summer of 1920—Ryerson Richie Returns From Visit to Exhibition in New York.

Mr. Ryerson Ritchie returned on Saturday from New York, after having spent much of his time at the Motor Boat Show in the interests of the Trent Waterway, the formal opening of which concerns Peterborough, and in fact all of the communities from Trento nto Port Severn.

The New York Motor Boat Show is one of the great annual exhibitions which is held at the Grand Central palace, and ranks in point of interest next to the Automobile Show.

Manufacturers of motor boat engines and accessories and the designers and builders of the small craft as well as the palatial power yacht, meet here for inspection, research and conference. Throngs of people, interested in cruising, visit the show every year and make of it a great boat-sales market.

To Senator W. H. Bennett of Midland is due the credit for interesting Peterborough and Orillia. He prepared several interesting illustrated articles, which were published in the American monthly magazines devoted to power boating, which have attracted much attention.

Through the Senator's efforts the Department of Railways and Canals sent a special representative in the person of Mr. A. W. Despard of the Canadian Exposition Commission. Mr. Despard was constantly in attendance to give information to interested inquirers. He rendered admirable service and will report his observations and recommendations to the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. Ritchie met and talked with scores of people who intended to make the trip through the Trent Waterway this season, and later on, when the canal is open for larger craft. Thirty-five foot boats only can navigate the waterway through to the Georgian Bay this season. Much curiosity and interest were shown by the New York people and by visitors from all over the country, and there is no doubt whatever that the charms of the Kawartha district will attract more American visitors than the district is prepared to receive.

Peterborough and Orillia were specially advertised by the distribution of attractive booklets at the Government booth and also by courtesy of engine and boat exhibitors.

It was evident that the local method of advertising Canada's great recreation waterway is not adequate. If the waterway is to be properly advertised it should be done through the co-operation of all the interested communities with the Federal and Provincial Governments and by means of preparation and propaganda comprehending the entire area that is reached by the 236 miles of waterway.

Steps should be taken at once by PPeterborough and Orillia and other enterprising communities to form an association not only to secure the development of the entire system, but primarily to arrange now for a proper celebration of the formal opening of the waterway in the early summer of 1920.

It would be absurd to advertise the Trent Waterway merely as a summer resort. In reality it has great commercial and economic advantages for the entire section. The attractiveness of this beautiful chain of lakes and rivers may, however, be the means of making its commercial value better appreciated. To realise, however, anything like the commercial advantages for which the Trent Waterway was built, active co-operation and practical business aggression are necessary.

The whole area needs to be studied and designed so that it will become not only interesting to the pleasure-seeker, but be a source of profit to the interested people and communities reached by it.

C. G. E. TO SPEND MILLION IN IMPROVEMENTS

Mayor McIntyre has received the following letter from Senator Frederic Nicholls, president of the C. G. E.:

"My Dear Mr. Mayor,—

"I have noticed by the Peterborough press that it is mentioned that provided the bylaw extending our fixed assessment is carried that we will spend at least $500,000 on additional buildings and equipment. When I was present at the Committee of the Whole of your Council I mentioned that our plans had not been fully prepared and that I was not in a position to state definitely how much would be involved in these buildings and equipment, but that they would cost at least half a million dollars. Since that time our plans have assumed definite shape and I am at liberty to tell you that the estimated expediture now amounts to double the amount specified or at least one million dollars.

"Thinking the citizens of Peterborough may be interested, I am forwarding you this information.

"Yours very truly,
"(Sgd.) FREDERIC NICHOLLS."

APPEAL JUDGE CONFIRMS CONVICTION OF THE STRIKE LEADER IN WINNIPEG

Says That R. B. Russell Was Properly Found Guilty of Seditious Conspiracy to Overthow Government of Canada.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Winnipeg, March 1.— Written judgments of the Court of Appeal in the case of R. B. Russell, strike leader now serving a two-year term of imprisonment, have now been filed, Chief Justice Perbus said:—

The accused has been found guilty upon all counts set forth in the indictment. There was amply sufficient evidence to justify the jury in making the findings. In fact they could not have honestly arrived at any other conclusion. So far from being a legitimate strike, the combination was in fact, a jury has found, a seditious conspiracy. To aid a brother trade union in its strike for higher wages or to obtain higher wages for all, was not the real object of the combination. What took place before the strike shows that the accused and his associate Reds aimed at something much more drastic. Their ultimate purpose was declared in their public speeches was revolution, the overthrow of Constitutional Government in Canada and the introduction of a form of Socialistic or Soviet rule in its place. This was to be accomplished by a general strike, force and terror, and, if necessary, by bloodshed."

J. C. ELLIOT TO HELP ATTORNEY GENERAL

FARMER MEMBER FOR WEST MIDDLESEX SECURES TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT

(Special Correspondence)

Toronto, March 1.— J. C. Elliott, of Glencoe, M. P. P. for West Middlesex, in the last Legislature, has been appointed to the Attorney General's Department, as special Legislative Counsel, Hon. W. E. Raney announced this morning. The office is for the duration of the coming session of the House. Mr. Elliott's duties will be to assist in the various legal matters which will arise during the session.

GENERAL STRIKE CALLED BY MILAN WORKMEN

ORDER FOLLOWED A CLASH WITH POLICE WHO INTERFERED WITH MEETING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Miland, March 1.—As a result of a collision beteen a crowd and the police here yesterday, in which officers fired on the mob, mortally wounding two civilians, a general strike was declared at midnight. Work was suspended throughout the city today. The clash occurred in connection with a meeting of the demobilized troops. Police fired when stones were thrown from the crowd.

TURKS DECIDE TO CEASE WARFARE ON FRENCH TROOPS

REPORTED CASUALTIES AMONG LATTER IN RECENT ENGAGEMENTS EXAGGERATED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, March 1.—The general situation in Cilicia is improving, according to a despatch received by Temps, which states that Prince Fesal, son of the king of Hadjas, has ordered Arabian elements which had joined the Turkish nationalists to withdraw. Temps also learns that Mastapha Kemal Pasha, Turkish Nationalist leader, has issued an order against further attacks on French troops. The French command, according to other advices, is continuing to take measures to prevent the co-operation of Turkish and Arabian bands. Important forces have been concentrated in the Killis region, which divides are inhabited by Turkish-speaking people from Syria. An official statement declares the despatches indicating considerable French loss in the vicinity of Marash to be exaggerated. The total casualties were little more than 100, the statement says, and of these only a few were killed.

MR. CRERAR IS LEADER OF CROSS BENCHERS

SAYS THAT FARMERS PARTY IN THE WEST HAS BRIGHT PROSPECTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 1.—Judging from the arrivals of members of both sides of the House, the prospects are that when the Commons meet this afternoon there will be practically a full House. Hon. T. A. Crerar, former Minister of Agriculture, is now looked upon as the acknowledged leader of the cross-benches in the House of Commons. His desk has been placed at the foot of the chamber on the opposition side, where the cross-benchers are located in a group. Mr. Crerar stated that conditions in the West as far as the Farmers' Party was concerned were distinctly encouraging.

PASSENGERS SPENT FOUR HOURS IN OPEN BOATS

BUT WERE RESCUED BY TUG AND SAFELY LANDED AT HALIFAX

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, March 1.—Passengers of the steamer Bohemian, which stranded on the Sambro ledges, off Halifax harbor, early this morning, were landed here shortly after 8 o'clock from the tug Roebling, which had delivered them from open boats in which they had spent four chilly and somewhat anxious hours. The boats were silently anchored to the Bohemian as she lay on the ledges. Thick water and heavy snowfall were responsible for the disasterd, but there was practically no sea running. The Bohemian struck on her bow. Three hatches are full of water and the vessel is settling rapidly. If the weather holds fair, it is said, there is every possibility of salvaging her.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN REACHES NEW YORK

MET AT DEPOT BY LADY BORDEN AND CANADIAN OFFICIALS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, March 1.—Lady Borden, Hon. J. A. Calder, Hon. J. D. Reid, L. C. Christie, legal adviser to the Department of External Affairs, and Col. J. A. Cooper, chief of the Canadian bureau of information here, were among those who assembled at the dock to meet Premier Borden upon his arrival on the Carmania this afternoon. Mr. Christie was with the Premier in Paris during the peace negotiations. The Carmania was reported off Ambrose Channel lightship at 10:40 a. m., and was expected to dock early this afternoon. Sir Robert will hold a conference with the two members of the Cabinet and Mr. Christie this afternoon. He will leave for the South with Lady Borden tomorrow or Wednesday.

DR. CARMICHAEL IS DISCHARGED NO DEFENCE EVIDENCE NEEDED

Charge Against Well Know Physician of Prescribing Heroin Contrary to the Act Falls Through, Crown Failing to Make out a Case.

The adjourned cases against C. A. Moncur and Dr. Carmichael were resumed at Police Court this morning. In the case of C. A. Moncur the prosecution attempted to prove that Mr. Moncur had not kept a proper record of drugs sold, as required in the Opium Act. For the defence it was admitted that heroin was supplied on the dates charged, but it was claimed that the information in the book referred back to the prescription which was filed, and the two documents together constituted a complete record as required by law.

Crown Attorney Hatton claimed that the law had been violated in that Mr. Moncur had failed to record the name of the doctor issuing the prescription, or the signature of the person introducing purchases; and also in some cases that the name and address of the purchaser were not entered. Magistrate Dumble reserved judgment in this case and adjourned it for one week.

Dr. Carmichael Discharged.

Dr. Carmichael pleaded not guilty to the charge of supplying prescriptions to Joseph O'Brien and others for drugs to be used for other than medicinal purposes.

There was a lively passage-at-arms between Crown Attorney Hatton and Mr. Wearing when the case opened as to the particulars of the charges as supplied by Crown Attorney Hatton to Mr. Wearing for the defence.

Joseph O'Brien was called as a witness for the Crown. He could not remember the date of the first prescription he got from Dr. Carmichael, but it was in the afternoon between 1 and 2 o'clock. He told the doctor about his condition and his history in the army. The doctor examined him. The doctor gave him a prescription for heroin, and he had it filled at a drug store. He thought that the last time he went to Dr. Carmichael was on February 17. He wanted the heroin for himself only. All the heroin he got in this way he used himself. When he was arrested on February 19th he had used all of the last heroin he had secured. Before going to Dr. Carmichael he had been under the care of Dr. Wood. He had been examined in England, and as a result of this examination he did not go to the front, but was returned to Canada. Kingston was the first place in which he got any heroin. He had been taking heroin treatment for nineteen months. He had been in Kingston, Fort Capel, Sask., and Gravenhurst hospitals with tuberculosis, since he returned from England.

O'Brien found that heroin relieved his cough and allowed him to sleep. It was understood between himself and Dr. Carmichael that he should go to a sanitarium. His usual dose was one-sixth grain. Witness stated that he was taking a vocational course in automobile work at Fontaine's garage.

Dr. Harvey was called next by the Crown Attorney. He occasionally prescribed heroin himself, but not whenever asked for it. He had only prescribed heroin once or twice in the last month or two. He usually prescribed from one-tenth to one-sixth of a grain in a dose. The number of tablets he included in a prescription all depended on the circumstances of the case. The witness described the effects and uses of heroin. He thought that heroin was one of the safest derivatives of opium. It had the effect of making a patient sleepy, and would give relief to a cough. The treatment which Dr. Carmichael had given O'Brien was likely treatment under the circumstances. The only person who would know the proper amount to give him would be the physician attending him. Even if a man just came in once with the disease, the witness considered that he was under his professional treatment.

Dr. Young gave evidence to the effect that, in his opinion, Dr. Carmichael had acted in the most effective way in treating as he did for O'Brien. Even more could have been prescribed without any ill effects. He considered that taking heroin for a month would be quite long enough to form a habit for it.

At this point Mr. Wearing asked for a dismissal of the case without hearing the defence, on the ground that no case had been made out by the Crown. He claimed that the medical testimony introduced by the Crown was evidence for the defence.

The magistrate upheld this view and dismissed the case.

C. HOLLAND KILLED IN ELEVATOR ACCIDENT AT BONNER-WORTH'S

Well Known Resident of This City Meets Sudden Death at That Branch of Canadian Woollens, Ltd.

A regrettable accident occurred at the Bonner Worth Woollen Mills at about 8:45 this morning. It is impossible to say just what happened but when employees of the firm went to use the elevator they found that Charles Holland, one of the employees, was wedged between the sides of the elevator and the ground floor. From the position of the elevator, the asumption is that Holland was attempting to bring the elevator level with the floor of the basement and that he pulled the wrong rope and the elevator started a quick ascent, throwing him off his balance and at the same time catching him between the sides of the elevator and the floor. The elevator is not a passenger elevator and employees have instructions against using it for that purpose as it is made for the carrying of freight only and consequently is not equipped with the protection that would be required in a passenger elevator. No cries were heard and it was more or less by accident that the tragedy was discovered.

Mr. Holland was dead at the time of the discovery and it is thought that death was practically instantaneous, as he was badly crushed about the head and chest.

Dr. Greer the coroner was immediately informed of the tragedy and ordered an inquest, which will take place at eight o'clock tonight. Up to the present the selection of jurors has not been completed.

Well Known Resident.

The unfortunate victim of the accident, is a well known resident of this city, having resided here for the past 30 years or more and has lived in the district all his life. He was born at Emily, 55 years ago, but spent the greater part of his life in and about Peterborough. For ten years or more he worked for the J. B. BcBain Flour Milling Company and later for the Peterborough Cereal Company. He had been with the Bonner-Worth Company for the last nine months only. He was always held in high respect by his fellow employes and his employers who will learn of the tragedy with the greatest regret.

He is survived by a wife, two sons, Percy of Windsor, and Gordon of Toronto, one daughter, Hazel, at home, one brother Fred Holland, of this city and two sisters, Mrs. John Walsh of North Dakota and Mrs. Patrick Hickey of Peterborough. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been completed.

FIVE LEADER IN PARIS STRIKE ARE ARRESTED TODAY

CHARGED WITH INTERFERING WITH LIBERTY TO WORK—STRIKE BREAKING DOWN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, March 1.—Five active strike leaders in Paris railroad unions were arrested this morning. Great excitement among unionists ensued when the news of the arrests became current. All those under detention are charged with "interference with liberty to work and provoking disobedience." Five thousand persons have volunteered for service on the railroads during the strike.

Two hundred chauffeurs have placed themselves at the disposal of the public works ministry in carrying out a revictualing system, according to the Matin. Hundreds of students have been placed at posts on different railways where they are being given practical instruction. Premier Millerand made the following statement today: "The situation is satisfactory. Reports from companies and prefects bring confirmation of amelioration of conditions on all the systems."

TO RUN AS PROTECTIONIST

Liberal Candidate in Montreal Division Favors Tariff.

Montreal, March 1.—Wilfrid Gagnon, son of Narcisse Gagnon, proprietor of Aird & Son, registered, boot and shoe manufacturers, will be a candidate for the bye-election in the St. James division this city. He will run as a Liberal, but on a protective platform. There is little prospect of a candidate under Unionist or Conservative colors contesting the division and the other candidate at present is Captain Horace Plante, who will run as a Liberal either with or without the support of a convention, but who has strong support in his candidature.

It looks probable, therefore, that the contest will become one involving the fiscal policy of Canada.

London March 1.—Forty girl hosiery hands sailed from Liverpool for Canada on Saturday. Their passages were paid and it has been said they were fofered 5 pounds a week at the Mercury Mills, Hamilton.

FURTHER PROGRESS IN AMALGAMATION

MEETING OF CHEESEMAKERS WAS HELD AT MADOC LAST WEEK

The proposal to effect an amalgamation of the cheese factories in the Central Ontario district was considerably advanced at a meeting of dairymen representing some eight factories in the Madoc district, which was held at Madoc last Thursday afternoon. Those present at the meeting were largely presidents, salesman and leading shareholders, directors and patrons of the local factories and a number of the reeves and deputy reeves of the adjoining townships. The chairman of the meeting was Mr. J. A. Carkey of Madoc, the county director for the U.F.O. in Hastings county. After a discussion lasting about three hours during which all phases of the project were touched on, the meeting voted unanimously in favor of the amalgamation and also in favor of calling factory meetings as soon as possible to give the patrons an opportunity to become identified with the movement, should they so desire.

At a meeting held at Eldorado, near Madoc, the same evening, at which three factories were represented, a full discussion of the project took place and again the meeting voted unanimously in favor of it.

MAGISTRATE DUMBLE AND THE FAIR.

IT IS TRUE, as Magistrate Dumble states in a letter in the local press Saturday, that at the municipal election a few years ago—in 1915, to be correct—the ratepayers voted on the question of purchasing the Fair Grounds from Mr. R. A. Morrow, and that the proposition was rejected. Everyone who understands the situation appears to be convinced that the bylaw was defeated not by reason of any popular opposition to the Fair, or to the maintenance of it in its present quarters, but because of the general conviction that the then existing arrangements could be continued indefinitely. Mr. Morrow, it was understood, was willing to extend the lease so long as the property was used as the site for a Fair.

It is just as true, as Mr. Dumble adds, that the grounds as at present kept up, are something of an eye-sore to the city, but this is a condition that the directors of the Exhibition have for years been striving to remedy, and the prospects for success were never brighter than at present. There is no reason on earth why the grounds should be used for Exhibition purposes three or four days in the year, for a racing event on occasion, as a place for a circus to give its show once or twice during the summer, and the scene of holiday making now and then. The grounds can be fitted up as a public park for the benefit of that rapidly growing section of the city, which today lacks any adequate breathing place for the benefit of the inhabitants. That is the object the directors have in view, that is the end for which they are working, in spite of every form of discouragement with which they may be confronted.

To abandon the present grounds and buy a site for the Fair away from the city is not a new suggestion. The idea has been entertained and abandoned. It would be a difficult matter to secure a location as convenient for the patrons of the Fair, whether they come from city or country. This is especially apparent when the present street car service is taken into consideration. It would be an easy matter to move the Fair equipment from the present grounds to a new location, but it certainly would be impossible to move the race track, which is now acknowledged to be the best half-mile circuit in Ontario, and which attracts the leading horsemen from all over the Province.

If the directors purchased a site out in the country, the same objections that Magistrate Dumble finds with the present location would still prevail. The place would be used for only a few days in the year. It could not be utilised for park purposes even if the necessity existed.

The populous and growing south section of the city has no park except the block of land in front of the King Edward School, which enjoys that tile only by courtesy. This property was purchased by the city from a former School Board that made a venture in real estate when they acquired the site for the King Edward School. No attempt has been made to improve it aside from the erection of a band stand.

Ald. Gainey will bring up in City Council a proposition that King Edward Park be divided into lots and put on the market, the receipts from the sale of these to be utilized for the improvement of the Fair Grounds which can thus be fitted up as a popular resort to be kept open to the public the year round, a skating rink to be one of the winter attractions. For this suggestion the alderman is assured of the support of a sufficient number of his colleagues to ensures its adoption.

The city has already taken the first step in voting the Fair Board a grant of $3000 this year, the money to be expended in the erection of new buildings. This means an increased allowance from the Provincial Treasury. There is no reason why the present location of the Fair should hurt all the property around it, as Magistrate Dumble intimates. When it is properly fitted up as a park, every real estate holdnig in that vicinity will beyond all question increase in value.

GROUP INSURANCE.

EXCESSIVE LABOR may occasionally cause the death of a member of the human family, but such instances are as rare as the demise caused by over kindly treatment. With the majority of workers the disintegrating process due to such a cause is likely to be so slow as to lose out in the race with natural ailments and the agencies of old age.

Work may kill its scores, but worry has brought about the untimely end of millions. The man afflicted with physical suffering fails in the efficient performance of his duties. The individual vexed by mental troubles is in the same condition. Brooding over what is to happen to himself if he reaches an incapable old age, or to his growing family in the event of his untimely removal has hastened the end of many a worthy person.

There is nothing like contentment to prolong life. Saving a man from such worries as the above is the best means not only to increase the length of his days but to add to his working value. One of the agencies that can be employed to this end is the group insurance plan that is now being introduced in so many of the industrial plants in this city, the latest to adopt it being the Colonial Weaving Company, and the other party to the contract the Prudential Life Insurance Company. The plan not only encourages thrift among the employes, but makes for continuity of service, of benefit to employer and workmen alike. It helps to dispel one of the many worries of human existence. It is a system which cannot fail to establish better relations between Capital and Labor.

Ther is, however, something in human nature that regards with suspicion any blessing that has been secured without individual effort. No man ever received the gift of a horse without undertaking at least a secret examination of its teeth or securing an expert to look over its limbs for possible blemishes. Still, this suspicion does not in any way mar the spirit in which the gift was made. Group insurance will not lack for detractors, but its general adoption will bring the world several degrees nearer the industrial millennium.

AIR HOLES IN LEGISLATION.

> "By the time that the U. F. O. get through governing the Province there should be lots of laws that we can knock holes into."

THIS IS THE SENTIMENT of a well-known local lawyer who is something less than human if he regards the prospect, with an eye to future business, other than with the liveliest satisfaction.

Perhaps the forecast will prove correct. But the present statutes have been framed by Legislatures and Parliaments in the membership of which the legal fraternity predominated. Every such statute is popularly supposed to contain holes sufficiently large to admit of the free passage of the proverbial coach and four, that, too without rendering it necessary for the passengers or the roof to even duck to save themselves.

If the Drury Government can surpass the record in this regard then they will certainly have to go some.

SUNDAY STREET CARS.

THE OPERATION of Sunday street cars is designed for the benefit of the working classes in the city, those who are too poor to afford the luxury of a horse carriage or other vehicle. Members of the Trades Council declared in favor of the idea, only two delegates voting against it. This being the case, one would naturally think that the resolution asking for the required legislative authority would have been introduced in the City Council by one of the Labor aldermen.

To Ald. Gainey belongs credit for the initiative in this matter, as he was the first member of the Council to bring it up in that body. Ald. Gainey is just recovering from a three weeks' illness, and during his enforced absence Ald. Gordon stepped into the breach and fathered the resolution which has been forwarded to the Legislature.

FIRST FLIGHT ALONE INTO THE CLOUDS

(By Frank Keen.)

For months I had been training in one of the many training squadrons which were dotted all over England during the latter part of the war. My instructor, finding me a rather slow and nervous pupil, had been giving me some extra instruction, when, one fine day I expressed the opinion that I could now handle a "Bus" alone. He had his doubts, but eventually promised me that if I would rise early the next morning I could venture into the clouds alone.

At six o'clock the next morning the weather was glorious except for a slight haze, which, however, is usual in England at that time of year. Patiently I waited near the hangars for more than half an hour, when my instructor finally turned up, in a slightly bad humor at having been made to rise so early for what he termed was a wild-goose chase, as he felt sure that my courage would fail me at the last minute. This time, however, I was determined to accomplish my first solo flight, and in a few short words convinced the instructor of my determination.

The mechanics had already drawn out an "Avro" from the hangars, and as I mounted in the pilot's seat they were standing by awaiting orders to start the machine. "Switch off; petrol on suck-in," I yelled, and like an echo the answer was repeated by the attending mechanics. Then "Switch on," called the mechanic, and like a parrot, I replied, as I turned on the switch, "Switch on." After a few preliminary chugs the engine started humming, and I tested for every fault that I could think of. Gradually I got the engine down to a steady purr, and waved my hand as a signal to all to stand clear. Letting the engine out to its limit, I headed for the south, and gained speed, until the absence of any friction told me that I had left mother earth behind and was alone in the air. A sense of great power came over me. Here was I guiding a powerful machine through the air. There was no sense of danger, but only a feeling of great excitement. I began to make some of the gentle turns that the instructor had taught me, and then, getting bolder, I made a vertical turn, and finally, when I discovered that I had risen to an altitude of 1,500 feet, I commenced a spiral, and the whole earth went spinning around at a tremendous pace. Coming out of it was easy, as any one will know who knows anything about that type of aeroplane called an "Avro." The difficulty commenced when I found myself flying a straight course again. The alarming discovery suddenly dawned on me that I was absolutely lost. True I had my compass, but then in the excitement of performing different evolutions I had neglected to notice which way I was flying, and to make matters worse the early morning mist still prevented a clear view of the ground below.

I knew from past experience that the school machines were never fitted out for a long trip, and that in a short time I would be forced to make a landing somewhere on account of shortage of "gas." Landing on the ordinary school drome would be bad enough for a beginner, but the thoughts of having to land in some unknown field filled me with terror. To venture closer to the earth in an effort to locate myself might mean that there would not be enough "gas" left to rise again and choose a landing field, and I would then be forced to take "pot luck" in some backyard. The air speed of the machine was 70 M.P.H., and I had been in the air roughly about an hour, I figured, so that at the most the drome should be within sixty or seventy miles, but which direction I had not the slightest idea.

The drome was located a few miles out of that quaint old town of Salisbury, and the spire of the famous cathedral, stretching high into the heavens, was always a boon to inexperienced flyers. Once reach that spire and the drome was in sight. Eagerly I scanned the horizon for that spire, throwing my machine into a wide, gentle turn for the purpose, but the mist effectually blotted out every landmark. Truly I was in a difficult plight, and every minute might mean that I was drifting farther and farther away from "home," to say nothing of exhausting my supply of gas.

To the experienced pilot this event would have been forgotten before he reached the drome, but to a flyer on his first "solo" it was an unenviable sensation. In England the morning mist sometimes clears off for a bright and clear day, but more often than not it thickens into one of those dense fogs for which the country is noted.

As time went on a new danger became evident in my mind. Scarce sixty miles to the south of Salisbury was the mouth of the English Channel, probably forty or fifty miles wide, and no pleasant prospect as a landing ground. At this point I was relieved to notice that the mist was beginning to clear. In a few minutes I looked below to see a sheet of water; in front of me I could vaguely discern the coast of France.

This discovery, while it presented an immediate danger, at least gave a solution of my problem. Making a complete turn so that I left the distant coast of France at my back, I headed for what I thought would be Southampton. A few minutes later the coast was reached and a large town appeared directly underneath me. My faint knowledge of the topography of the South of England told me that this was the Channel port of Southampton. Barely had this town been left behind when I saw to my great joy the familiar landmark of the Salisbury spire a little to my left front. Heading directly for it, I commenced to scan the horizon for a sign of the drome, and my efforts were rewarded with success when I saw in the distance the familiar little cluster of huts and hangers which marked my landing ground.

Just at that minute the engine commenced to splutter and then stopped altogether, but I had the presence of mind to face my machine towards the drome and commence a gentle glide. The question remaining now was whether or not I had sufficient height to reach the drome in safety or be forced to make a landing in some nearby field. With my little experience I could not answer this question for myself, neither did I relish the prospect of a forced landing, so I decided to take a chance on reaching the drome. Gradually the houses and roadways beneath me became bigger and bigger, and still the haven seemed a long way off. Now I could even make out the people walking about in the streets as I passed over little hamlets and villages. It was impossible to glide any slower, as even now the looseness of the controls told me that I was on the point of losing flying speed, and the result of that would be to crash to the earth below.

At last, when but fifty feet from the ground I passed over the last fence that divided the flying ground from the neighboring country, and landed just like a bird—hop, hop, hop. There had been no time to consider the direction of the wind, and I found that I was landing across wind and was in danger of having the undercarriage swept from underneath me. Following out my instructor's words as best I could remember, I gave the machine a slight tilt into wind, and pulled up before the hangars, to receive my instructor's congratulations on having effected a perfect cross-wind landing.

Needless to say, I did not enlighten him to the fact that it was an accidental landing, nor did I mention that I had lost my way, as these facts would be detrimental to my chances of continuing "solo" flying. Although there have been more serious events happen to me since then, that one stands out most clearly in my mind as my first trip alone in the clouds.

Lloyd George has challenged Winston Churchill's eccentric headgear, says a London dispatch.

It was a magnificent challenge and when the prime minister emerged from No. 10 Downing street, crowds surrounded him.

It is a rare speciment, is Lloyd George's new hat.

DAYLIGHT SAVING NOT LIKELY THIS YEAR

Although it is likely, says the Bridgeburg correspondent of the Buffalo Courier, that the Dominion as a whole will be without daylight saving this year, there is a strong indication that a number of the towns in the Niagara district will not go back to the old plan, through the action of their municipal councils.

The measure came in for much appreciation last year by town dwellers, practically all of the opposition that developed coming from the ranks of the city residents.

Dominating Voice.

The voice of the rural section, however, will likely be dominant at the two Houses of Parliament in 1920 in regard to the daylight saving measure, and it is quite likely that should the measure be brought up it will be defeated.

The fact that the Canadian Government last year placed daylight saving on the statute books, not directly, but through its co-operation with the Canadian railways and in other ways, making it national time, was never forgiven by the farmers. Some farmers in the Niagara district last year, in fact, many farmers absolutely refused to go by the D. S. schedule of time, and still worked by the old time.

Favored by Many.

But to the town dweller daylight saving is no longer an untried experiment. It is something that has been tried out and found successful to the highest degree. Increased gardening, increased hours of daylight—all have proved themselves so satisfactory that many of the cities and towns of Ontario, contrary to general expectation, will adopt daylight saving as a local bylaw this year.

While pages have been written as to why the farmers should not object to daylight saving beyond the fact that trains leave an hour earlier by the sun than they did before, the fact remains that the farmers are bitter against it.

Defeat Certain.

While the U.F.O. controls Ontario and not the Dominion, without a doubt the United Farmers' party will be sufficiently strong after the next election in the House to make them feared to a larger extent than at the present time, and the Government will hardly want to offend such a large and solid section of the country by foisting daylight saving legislation on them if they do not want it.

On the other hand there is little likelihood that daylight saving will again become a law in the United States next year, and Canada is largely following the action of the republic to the south in this direction.

On the other hand, a number of municipalities in Ontario in the elections in January voted on the measure, and in no town where it was put to the voters was it defeated.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

For length of term of office as a Provincial Premier, the Hon. George Henry Murray is making a record. A few months more in office and his term will be the longest in our history, and the record made by the late Sir Oliver Mowat will be relegated to second place. Sir Oliver was continuously Premier of Ontario from October 25, 1872, to July 9, 1896—a few days more than 23 years and 8 months; Mr. Murray has continuously been Premier of Nova Scotia since July 20, 1896—a little more than 23 years and 7 months, and he is still in office—likely to remain there for some time.

Mr. Murray was born at Grand Narrows, N.S., on July 7, 1861. He was educated there as well as at Boston University, and was called to the Bar of his native Province in 1883. Six years later he was in public life, having been appointed to the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia on March 1, 1889. His attempts to enter the House of Commons were unsuccessful, and turning again to the provincial field he was elected to the House of Assembly. High promotion awaited him. The Ministry of which the Hon. W. S. Fielding was Premier, was in power but upon the success of the federal Liberal party at the elections of June, 1896, Mr. Fielding resigned the provincial premiership to become Minister of Finance, and Mr. Murray was called to the head of the administration of Nova Scotia. From that time to the present he has been Premier of his native province.

Mr. Murray has given Nova Scotia a clean government, carried on with diligence, and, according to the views of the men who compose the cabinet, with the best interests of

REINDEER IN CANADA

HERDS MAY BE PLACED ON "BARREN LANDS."

History of an Undertaking Which Was Suggested by the Success of Americans In a Similar Field—Dr. Grenfell Was the Pioneer, and Now It Looks as Though Action Will Be Taken.

THE introduction of reindeer into Canada has always been an attractive subject to anyone who has realized the enormous area of our so-called "Barren Lands," and who knows that the sole way to utilize them is by placing there the only domestic animal that can live in that climate, where horses and cattle would quickly die a miserable death.

Reindeer, it is true, seem at first sight to be identified with romance because of their connection with the childish idea of Christmas. But, in other ways, they are most eminently practical.

To think of animals of the deer family living and growing fat in temperatures that drop as low as 50 degrees or 60 degrees below zero, without any shelter from the wintry blasts; of their needing no harvesting in summer to insure the supply of food for the winter; of their ability to secure food for themselves from beneath the snow, by means of their palmated horns — found in both sexes; of their giving birth to their young in the snow;—is to bring one face to face with one of nature's miracles.

Let us consider their introduction into this continent from that Old World from which it is possible to learn so much.

The Education Department of the United States saw the benefits which would accrue to the natives of Alaska, thanks to the far-seeing vision of Rev. Sheldon Jackson, and his ideals were made practical by the importation of 1,280 reindeer from Siberia, between 1892 and 1902.

So rapidly did this herd increase that in 1917 there were 98,582 deer living in Alaska, apart from those killed for food, and lost by accident, all due to the importation mentioned.

The financial statement, also shown in the report of the Governor of Alaska, gives the total valuation of, and income from, these reindeer as $3,247,345, against a total outlay of the Government of $317,000, or a gain of 926 per cent. for the 25 years, being an annual average of 37 per cent. A pretty good investment from a merely financial point of view!

But the moral and physical benefits far surpass the purely commercial gains, great as these are. The natives have become more than self supporting—from hunters, they have become herdsmen. They have balances in the savings banks in Seattle. They have sewing machines, pianos, and Victrolas. They have ceased to be savages.

Now for the experiment on the opposite corner of the continent, namely that in Labrador, which has proved equally successful.

That well known philanthropist, Dr. Grenfell, imported 300 reindeer from Norway into Labrador in 1907, realizing what they would mean to the natives, then barely existing in wretched conditions. This herd had increased by 1911 to 1,200 head, apart from those killed for food, and lost by accidents. This proves that both extremities of the continent are admirably suited for the breeding and domestication of reindeer. What about that central portion of our far north, lying between Alaska and Labrador? Is is equally suitable for reindeer?

This question is answered by the existence of immense herds of wild caribou, which are called truly by Mr. Emile Miller, in an article in the Bulletin de la Societe de Geographie de Quebec," published a couple of years ago, the "brothers of the reindeer." These caribou, both the wood and barren lands animals, are, indeed, simply wild reindeer. They are, however, much smaller, and, of course, less valuable, than the domestic variety. They roam through the "tundra," as these districts are called, in countless thousands, and, sooner or later, will be made use of for purposes of food.

By those who know, the Barren Lands are called the "paradise of the reindeer."

As for reindeer in Canada itself, for Labrador is not, politically, a part of the Dominion, although physically it is an integral portion.

It must be admitted that the first, and, so far, only experiment in introducing these animals into the Dominion, proved a failure, but there are good reasons for such an unfortunate result.

The history was briefly told in an article in the Canadian Municipal Journal, in April, 1918, and the story, which he calls the "Odyssey" was given more fully by Mr. Miller, in the Bulletin already quoted. The lesson from this disastrous experiment shows how the reindeer should not be handled.

In 1912, the Federal Government purchased from Dr. Grenfell 50 reindeer, in Labrador. These were sent by rail from Sydney to Edmonton, and the survivors of this long ride in cars, were sent by scows, to a point near Fort Smith. There, these wild, nomadic animals were carefully corralled within a fenced enclosure, and there they were kept as prisoners, until the scourge of flies drove them crazy, and they escaped over the fences. The few that were retaken were brought back and again imprisoned. And it was only after two years that the tiny remnants of the original herd were sent further north, where they should have been at first, in a country in which their special food was to be found, and where the cold air prevented the flies from being troublesome.

Being interested in this subject, I secured an article from Mr. F. S. Lawrence, F.R.G.S., who is so well known as the exponent and advocate of the Peace River District of Northern Alberta, and this appeared in August, 1909.

When the Food Controller was urging the need of increasing the food supply a couple of years ago, I secured up-to-date information, and prepared an article which appeared in the same journal in April, 1918. This led to my acquaintance with the North American Reindeer Company, and later, to their making me the Canadian representative of the company.

It was interesting, at Ottawa, to find every official keenly anxious to [illegible] some movement towards the introduction of these valuable animals into Canada. And the company found generous treatment on the part of the Government, for it obtained a concession of free grazing rights for 0 years over an area of some 65,000 square miles, east of the Hudson Bay, on condition that it would bring in 1,500 head, and allow of the purchase of a certain proportion by the Government after the herd was properly established. Of course, it is true that this large area of ground is, at present, of no value whatever, nor can it be made useful, except as a ground for reindeer breeding. The company has not any annual rental to pay, as erroneously reported.

When success has been secured, it means that these "barren lands" will be used by the only domestic animal for whom it is possible; that the food problem—not alone for the natives—will be made easier of solution; and that the vast areas of minerals that are known to exist will be brought into use.

But beyond this, the native population, now living in misery so great that occasional lapses into cannibalism are occurring, as told to the Synod at Toronto by Rev. W. J. Walton, a missionary from the east of Hudson Bay—will be put into comparative comfort.

To the Mounted Police the reindeer will be a means of preserving life, for the dreary, and sometimes fatal trips with dog trains, will be fewer.

To Canada as a whole, it will mean that an enormous area of her territory, now useless, will be brought into the line of production.

As to the method of bringing in these deer from Alaska, it has been decided to drive them in the whole distance. This, to those who do not know reindeer, seems a wild idea. But as they are migratory, and easily led by driven deer, it is merely using their natural habits for wandering, and directing in which direction their wanderings shall point.

But some one with a fluent pen will be needed to record the history of the "Iliad" of the reindeer from Alaska to Hudson Bay.—Rod and Gun.

A New "O Canada."

I have heard the song "O Canada" criticized on the ground that for a national song it was too distinctly Canadian, that it lacked an Imperial note, and this point was deemed of some importance at a time when the whole Empire was straining every nerve in the war against a barbarous enemy, writes Hon. W. S. Fielding. I am far from agreeing that the criticism was just. The Englishman, the Scot, the Welshman, or the Irishman is not deemed less loyal to the Empire when he sings of the beauty or the glory of his particular portion of the kingdom; nor should anybody lack appreciation of the singing by Canadians of "O Canada!" either in the original French form of Hon. Mr. Justice Routhier, or in the form of one of the several English translations that have been made. Out of the criticism, however, this thought came to me: Why should not the stately music of Mr. Lavalee, with which all Canadians are now familiar, be the vehicle of a song at once Canadian and Imperial—a song of Canada, telling of the beauty of its scenery, the richness of its resources, the charm of its history, and withal, the pride which Canadians feel in their citizenship in the British Empire? The accompanying song is presented as an endeavor to respond to the question.

O Canada! 'neath Northland's brightest skies,
From loving hearts our songs of praise arise.
What grandeur in thy rugged heights,
What charm in wood and stream,
What beauty in the myriad lights
That in thy heavens gleam!

Refrain:
O Canada! let heart and hand
Yield loyal service in this freeman's land!
For freemen's rights and freemen's duties stand!

O Canada! where health and wealth intwine,
Where Northern blasts bear fragrance of the pine!
From soil and mine and lake and sea
Come riches for thy dower,
Cascade and river joyously
Bring wondrous gift of power.

O Canada! thy page in story glows
With chivalry of fleur de lis and rose,
Adown the vista of the years
Heroic forms advance,
In light and shadow, smiles and tears,
The hopes of Albion-France.

O Canada! thy sons will proudly share
Service that links with Empire's world-wide care.
Britannia's far flung lands are bound
With slender silken cord,
Yet strong as steel the tie is found
When foes take up the sword.

O Canada! for thee the day-star beams,
Youth visions see and elders dream their dreams.
In Empire's splendor thou canst share,
Thy wealth is labor's crown,
Shall not a land so rich and fair
Win honor and renown?

O Canada! may we our trust uphold!
Life's minor things must not our hearts enfold.
Not all the wealth of earth and sea
Can win thee worthy fame,
If service of our God and thee
Be not our highest aim.

Amazonas Larger Than Quebec.

The Province of Quebec with an area of 706,834 square miles, is the largest province or state in North America. The State of Amazonas, one of the United States of Brazil, has an area of 732,439 square miles, or more than the combined areas of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island. It is the largest division of a country in all America.

SHE COULD NOT STAND OR WORK

Portland, Ind.—"I had a displacement and suffered so badly from it that at times I could not be on my feet at all. I was all run down and so weak I could not do my housework, was nervous and could not lie down at night. I took treatments from a physician but they did not help me. My Aunt recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I tried it and now I am strong and well again and do my own work and I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the credit."—MRS. JOSEPHINE KIMBLE, 935 West Race St., Portland, Ind.

Thousands of American women give this famous root and herb remedy the credit for health restored as did Mrs. Kimble.

For helpful suggestions in regard to such ailments women are asked to write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

Welshman Will Endeavor To Mould the Opinions Of the People of Ireland

IT is curious to note that in the battle between Britain and Ireland, if we may call it a battle, the British leader is a Welshman; and a rising leader of the Irish is also a Welshman. This is Mr. Hamilton Edwards, one of the new proprietors of the Freeman's Journal, of Dublin. His partner is Mr. Martin Fitzgerald, a retail liquor dealer and long a champion of an independent Ireland. It is not surprising to find Mr. Fitzgerald investing some of his surplus wealth in a paper dedicated to the cause to which he has so long been committed, but it is rather amazing to find Edwards in such company. Hitherto Edwards has been known to such as know him at all as a brilliant newspaper man, a protege of the Harmsworths, and more lately the owner of a racing stable in Ireland. His career has been an interesting one so far, according to T. P. O'Connor, who writes about him in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and may in the future be even sensational. If he has become an adherent to Sinn Fein he will prove one of the most influential of that body, for he is one of the best-equipped of newspaper men, and is bound to greatly increase the power of the Freeman's Journal.

He was a discovery of George Newnes, the famous publisher who owed his great success largely to his instinct for picking out brilliant subordinates; but George Newnes had had the failing that he was unable to keep them. As O'Connor says, Newnes was large in big things but small in small things. He lost Arthur Pearson because he would not advance his salary, and Pearson became one of his most formidable rivals. He also lost Edwards because he permitted Harmsworth to tempt him away. Edwards had done good work for Newnes, and he was to do still better work for Harmsworth. He became, in fact, one of the mainstays of the Harmsworth organization, and a shareholder in several of the publications of the present Lord Northcliffe. Later on, when the chief proprietor wished to reconstruct, or to buy out his partners, Edward's "bit," amounted to about a million dollars. Mr. Edwards was then forty-five years old, in his very prime, and bursting with energy, but being unable to find the particular occupation that he desired, he eventually went to Ireland and set up a racing stable, just like another of Northcliffe's proteges, Mr. Kennedy Jones. There he has lived for the past three or four years, and it may be that like others before him, he has become more Irish than the Irish.

Apparently the old lure of journalism has mastered him, but it amazes his friends to find him in the Sin Fein camp, for when he lived in London he was a Tory of the Tories. He was a member of fashionable Tory clubs; in dress he was a dandy, and his associations were chiefly with the "ruling classes." There is a possibility, of course, that he would endeavor through the Journal to win his readers to the old Nationalist views, but in view of the passions and tumult in Ireland to-day this would appear to be a forlorn hope. It would be curious if he were to try the experiment of changing the Journal from a paper of opinion to the sort of paper that Mr. Edwards knows most about, the sort that built up the Harmsworth fortunes and his own. After all, is it any more remarkable to find a Welsh Tory one of the moulders of Irish opinion than to find an Irishman like Northcliffe one of the great moulders of English opinion? Of course, Northcliffe does not belong to the "honest party" as the Jacobites used to call themselves, although he is favorable to some sort of Home Rule scheme, and his antipathy to Lloyd George and his recent "break" with Sir Edward Carson will probably lead him to take an extremely liberal view of what constitutes Home Rule.

Ordinarily a newspaper proprietor is as cautious as any other capitalist with his property and will no more hazard its prosperity for his own whims and personal fancies than would the owner of a manufacturing plant. Northcliffe is in a different position. The great papers with which his name is associated, the London Times and the Daily Mail, are his [illegible]. If they should be wrecked to-morrow, profitable though both of them are, and particularly the Mail, the Northcliffe fortune would continue to grow. He can be very romantic with them if he choses. The Harmsworth millions are founded on the rock of Answers and are nourished by a score of other papers, the names of which are unknown even to a professional journalist like "Tay Pay."

The career of Lord Northcliffe, to which in some unaccountable way we seem to have drifted, has been an amazing one. In the past ten years he has perhaps exerted a greater influence than any other man who might be named. Thirty years ago he was the editor of an obscure cycling journal. When he started Answers the capital was $3,000, much of it borrowed. It was a pure gamble, and indeed some notable British publishing successes are to be considered as lotteries rather than newspapers. The owner is really the croupier instead of the editor. Their ideal business manager would be a bookmaker. This is not to deny the keenest kind of ability to men like Newnes, Pearson and Northcliffe, who have made great successes of them, for the field has been an open one and still remains open for anyone who thinks he can cut any considerable kind of swath in it.

An Ancient Pall.

Among the treasures in Fishmongers' Hall, London, England, is a pall which, it is said, was used at the funeral of Sir William Walworth, the doughty chief magistrate who slew Wat Tyler. It is the work of nuns, and despite its great age is in a state of excellent preservation.

ROBINSON CRUSOE'S GUN.

Has Been Going Rounds of Museums, and Is Insured for $10,000.

London museums are full of the weapons of kings, generals and famous men, but Robinson Crusoe's gun is still in private hands. It has just returned to London to the custody of its owner, Mr. Berens, after a tour of the museums of the British Isles.

It is true that Robinson Crusoe is a fiction character, and that Defoe invented him, but any schoolroom in the kingdom can tell you in one breathless phrase that Crusoe is founded on fact and really was a living person. The original Robinson Crusoe was Alexander Selkirk, and this is the gun with which he was put ashore on the desert island of Ivan Fernandez, 400 miles from the Chili coast.

Life at sea in the days of William of Orange and Good Queen Anne was no smoother than it is now. Alexander Selkirk behaved as badly to his ship's captain as he did to his father, and was put ashore on the desert island as a reward for wickedness. He was landed with a bag of bullets, a pound of powder, and a flint-lock musket.

Mr. Randolph Berens has his musket to-day. He came by it by pure collector's luck. He was visiting Oxford and the Ashmolean Museum in 1882. The porter of the museum showed him round. Mr. Berens remarked that there were few antiques to be bought in Oxford then, and the porter agreed, but mentioned that he had been offered an old flintlock gun which was still in his lodge.

Mr. Berens examined the piece, and was surprised to find that roughly chip carved on the stock was the name A. Selkirk, and in smaller letters, Largo, N.B. On the other side was the date Anna R. 1701. According to our history books of to-day this date is wrong, but according to the old calendar it is correct.

On the wooden heel of the butt is the legend:

"With three drams powther, three ounce haile,
Rame me well and pryme me;
To kill I will not fail."

Mr. Berens bought the gun for 25s., and did his best to trace its history. He found that the piece came from near Clapham, and it is known that Alexander Selkirk owned a tavern there, but died at sea, aged 47, as lieutenant aboard his Majesty's ship Weymouth in 1723.

The weapon has been exhibited at the city of Bristol and other exhibitions, and is insured for no less than £2,000.

GREATEST SLUGGER LAID BASIS FOR CAREER IN BALTIMORE REFORMATORY

Ruth Became Protege of Priest in Charge of Baltimore Institution, Who Taught Him to Pitch and Pray.

George (Babe) Ruth was born in Baltimore twentysix years ago next February 7. He is 6 feet 2 inches tall and weighs 198 pounds. At an early stage he indicated by the manner in which he handled his rattle that he would later throw a baseball with his left hand and bat from the left side of the plate.

The story of his boyhood reads like a romance. At the age of ten he was sent to a reformatory, and a newspaper story bearing, upon this event is headed: "Playing Hookey Made Ruth Great Pitcher."

It was at this reformatory that Ruth first showed ability as a baseball player. He became the protege of the priest in charge of the school and learned how to pray and pitch.

His wayward tendencies were, somewhat curbed and he became somewhat of a favorite. His ability as a player commanded the respect of his fellow inmates, and it is to be noted in this connection that he also showed some ability as a boxer.

Ruth's first public appearance as a player was with the St. Joseph College team in 1913. He was signed by Baltimore of the International league in 1914, and late that year was sold to the Boston Red Sox.

Six years ago Ruth was at St. Mary's Industrial School in Baltimore and it was there that Jack Dunn, manager of the Baltimore team, discovered him.

He was commended to Dunn's attention by Dave Driscoll, coach of the Seton Hall College team and at the invitation of Brother Gilbert, head of the shchool, Dunn made a trip to the reformatory for the purpose of observing Ruth in action.

Dunn was so strongly impressed by Ruth's playing that day he persuaded the head of the school to allow Ruth to leave and join Dunn's team. This was done on condition that Dunn adopt Ruth and keep his eye on the boy.

The following year Ruth signed a contract to play for Baltimore at the rate of $100 a month. Dunn promised him another $100 if he made good. Ruth did make good, and before the season ended the cost of living increased and he was paid a monthly salary of $200.

Late in 1914 he was so'd to the Red Sox for $2,700. His purchase price was also reported to be $15,000. The difference cannot be accounted for by this biographer.

It has been said that he is not only the world's greatest sulgger, but is the greatest showman known to baseball. He has been compared to Rube Waddell, one of the most eccentric figures of the diamond, but Waddell never was the drawing card which Ruth was last year.

He pitched his first no-hit game when he was eighteen years old. He has the ball with which he struck out the last batter up in the game, and he has the ball with which he broke Ed Williams' home-run record at the Polo Grounds. His record breaking blow carried high up into the upper tier of the right field stand, and a fan realizing the value of it as a souvenir threw it out on the field to Ruth, who acknowledged its receipt and a tremendous outburst of applause by tipping his hat and bowing graciously.

CAPT. RUDDY LAYS DOWN RULES FOR SWIMMING

HEAD OF FAMOUS WATER POLO TEAM FAVORS THIS EXERCISE

Joseph A. Ruddy, captain of the New York Athletic Club water polo team and one of the leading swimmers of the United States, is a strong supporter of swimming events. He says:

If a swimming enthusiast would unduly praise its value, you might feel inclined to ascribe it to partiality. However, this would not apply in my case, because I have actively followed nearly every branch of athletics and gymnastics for the past twenty-six years, and, furthermore, prominent physicians with whom I have discussed the subject have confirmed my belief that swimming is unparalleled as far as its benefits to humanity are concerned. I am basing my assertions on the following points:

Swimming develops every muscle of the body symmetrically and evenly. It develops the heart and lungs and at the same time it insures hygienic features like no other exercise.

The best method of learning to swim is naturally to employ a good instructor. This can be done at any of the public baths free of charge, where, in my opinion, the most competent set of instructors can be found. The best stroke for beginners to use is the crawl or trudgeon, either of which is just as easy to learn as the old-fashioned breast or side stroke.

The strides that have been made in competitive swimming in the last twenty years are wonderful, particularly over the short distances. Many years ago England was the leading country in the speed swimming, possibly to 1902, when Australia took the lead. However, if one glances over the list of records today he is fully justified in claiming that the United States is entitled to first rank. It was in 1902 that two Australians swam 100 yards inside of a minute. The first American to accomplish this feat was my swimming mate, Chas. M. Daniels, of the New York Athletic Club.

The principal points of swimming are to try to learn a good stroke and have some one who is competent correct you until you have mastered it. Never overdo things, and alwasy stop when you begin to feel tired. Here are a few general hints after you have learned to swim. The best time to swim is one hour before your meals or two or three hours afterward. Never enter the water when the body is overheated or wet from perspiration. It is best to keep the body in motion while in the water, as standing about is liable to cause chills.

Finally, when I speak of swimming I naturally include diving, for both should be practised. The art of diving does much for men and women, bringing self control, making the body pliant and flexible, bringing every muscle into play, just as swimming does.

EX-SALOON KEEPERS ARE MUSIC DEALERS

PHONOGRAPH SHOPS SPRINGING UP IN ALL PARTS OF UNITED STATES

Chicago, Ill., March 1.—"Tom and Jerry Fox Trot," the Sloe Gin Shuffle," and "Brandy Blues," are tunes that you may soon be spinning out on your talking machine.

Whiskey bottles, long since emptied, are being converted into xylophones.

Cellarettes, now untenanted, will be shipped back to the factory, to reappear as phonograph cabinets.

Bartenders are forgetting their wine lists and learning the names and tunes of syncopated melodies.

All these are possibilities because since July 1, almost a platoon of former liquor men here have entered the phonograph business, either as jobbers or manufacturers. With booze under the ban, these former contributors to internal revenue are to seek new fortunes in dispensing close harmony in canned music, instead of the closer harmony that accompanied the bottled variety of goods. And instead of revenue men, they have only the luxury tax collector to face.

Many of the former liquor dealers have followed the lead of two millionaire Chicago distillers, now manufacturing phonographs. More than a dozen phonograph concerns started recetly are reported to be owned by former liquor men. This jump from booze to music is not confined to Chicago, among other cities reporting similar activity being Cleveland, where a brewing company has converted its plant into a talking machine factory.

"Many liquor men when forced into some other line of activity apparently decided that there was a phonograph business," said E. A. Fearn, manager of a talking machine company of Chicago. "So many former liquor dealers have gone into the business that every time I hear of a new talking machine concern, I always inquire what branch of the liquor industry they were formerly engaged in.

"Several of the former brewers are making near-beer and others have engaged in the ice and ice cream business, but I cannot understand how so many of them selected the phonograph field for their future activity."

It may not be long before one of these former drink mixers who is dealing out phonograph records, forgets himself and shouts out to the crowd:

"Everybody have one on the house."

Paradoxical though it may seem, it's the idle tongue that works overtime.

FARMERS' OPPORTUNITY IN THE EXPORT MARKET

SHOULD RAISE LIVESTOCK TO MEET THE DEMAND IN EUROPE

The Canadian farmer today wants reasonable proof that any increase he makes in livestock will find its market. That is the crux of livestock farming. The farmer wants a return for his investment of capital, labor and care.

Month by month the evidence is accumulating that there is a market which the Canadian can reach of which the fringe has scarcely been touched. Prospects for exports of meats become clearer every month. Devastation of war in Europe left a deep cut in the supplies which will take years to restore, if indeed, they will ever get back to a prewar level.

"A table compiled for the International Institute of Agriculture by Mr T. K. Doherty, L. L. B., given in the Agricultural Gazette," shows that, excluding Russia, there was throughout Europe between 1914 and 1918 a drop of six million head in cattle; nine and one half million head in sheep and the enormous total of twenty-four and a quarter million in hogs. The last named is a loss of almost fifty per cent. Despite material increases in some countries, mainly on the American continent, in that period there was a world decrease in swine and sheep though a net increase of seven per cent in cattle.

There is another factor which will have a more direct appeal to the farseeing Canadian farmer. It is that for years before the war the decline in the world's supply of livestock had been proceeding so steadily and irresistibly as to amount to little less than "slow starvation" in meats. This was not confined to one country; it was universal.

Our Canadian position is typical. Between 1908 and 1916 sheep and cattle declined from twenty per cent to twenty-five per cent and hogs remained about the same for the nine years. A similar tendency was noticeable in the United Sattes where between 1908 and 1917, despite an increase in swine, there were marked decreases in cattle and sheep.

Put in plainest English, this means that there has not been in the world for several years a sufficient number of meat producing animals to meet the demand. Especially is the demand for meat great in Great Britain, which is becoming more and more a manufacturing country. Precisely there have our Canadian meats, notably bacon, already won a high place; the product is preferred and the access to the market is easy. The lesson is obvious. More livestock should be produced on Canadian farms for export to market already waiting for our supplies. These meat exports will be a factor of increasing importance in maintaining the general prosperity of the Dominion. The two simplified tables below show the quantity and value of farm products exported in the five-year period, 1914-1918, and give an outline of the trade which could be done were the right type of livestock produced in sufficient numbers within the Dominion:

Canadian Meat Exports

WINKS AT SUNDAY BASEBALL

Minister Says It is No Worse Than Sunday Golf

St. Catharines, March 1.— In addressing the Chamber of Commerce banquet, Rev. Dr. Frank Garland Ohio, told of the splendid community spirit which exists in Dayton coincident with its rebuilding after the flood. A great factor is the recreation opportunities afforded the people.

"Sundays," said he, "we have our baseball games, thousands of folks quietly enjoying themselves. I don't encourage Sunday baseball, but as a minister I wink at it. I do not offer any objection. Why should I? For if the rich man is allowed to have his golf on the Sabbath, why should we deprive the poor man of his Sunday baseball when he has infinitely less time for recreation? I don't say its right but under the circumstances I cannot say its wrong."

RULING GIVES JOY TO THE CLUBMAN IN UNITED STATES

SUMMER COTTAGER ALSO CAN MOVE HIS LIQUOR STOCK AS HE FLITS

United States senators and representatives and the wealthy—in fact all those fortunate persons with two or more domiciles—can transport all the whiskey, wines or other intoxicants they desire from one to the other in interstate or other commerce, without fear of the constitutional amendment or the Volstead enforcement Act.

It was learned that Commissioner of Internal Revenue Roper has issued a formal ruling on the subject permitting such transportation from domicile to domicile at the owner's will, and some members of Congress at least have taken advantage of the ruling.

The official decision never has been made public, but it was learned that it has been standing some time and has been used to advantage by those who were informed of it.

Under the law a person may have intoxicants in his domicile, and it is held that a domicile may be moved. Wealthy persons with more than one domicile and members of Congress raised an issue as to whether their supply could be moved from one place of occupancy to another.

Permit Unnecessary.

Because of the number of appeals Commissioner Roper issued a formal ruling. This ruling is general and provides merely that the liquor may be transported from one domicile to the other. No permit is necessary, and the "supply" can be moved with or without household furniture from one place of occupancy to another.

To insure safe conduct and non-interference, however, permits for such moving may be granted by the Prohibiiton Enforcement Commissioner, and members of Congress have availed themselves of this permit privilege.

The word "domicile" is used in both the law and the ruling, and liquor cannot be moved from one place to another unless this is an actual change in domicile, but many men who had supplies at clubs, where they lived a part of the year, are greatly relieved, as those persons of means who migrate with the seasons or who have a summer and winter home.

Joys of the Summer Widower.

A man living at a club in the summer while his family is at the seashore or in the mountains can take his locker supply home when the family returns. He can take it back to the club when the family leaves him upon his own resources again. In fact, that strong drink can follow the family around on the long range from Palm Beach to Bar Harbor just like the hatbox or the wardrobe trunk.

Some dry voting members of Congress from wet States are situated favorably and have an unfailing supply in Washington, though the Reed bone dry Act was clapped on the Capital nearly a year ago. Congressmen had somewhat of an advantage even without the Internal Revenue Bureau ruling, as the law provides that they cannot be interfered with in travel to and from the national capital, but under the ruling they do not have to travel to keep the supply where they want it.

CONFIDENCE IN TURLEY

Answered Complaints in Regard to Handling of Soldiers' Questions.

Toronto, March 1.—Provincial Secretary W. E. Turley, attended the weekly meeting of the Joint Branch Executives of Toronto in the Central Branch, G.W.V.A. Club House. Some of the representatives expressed dissatisfaction with the attitude of the Provincial secretary on certain soldiers' questions. In reply, Mr. Turley gave one of the strongest speeches of his career, it is said, and so convinced the executive members present of his sincerity that when a motion of confidence was put to the meeting for a vote, only two men out of forty-five present dissented.

HAIG WARNS VETERANS

Political Parties Seek to Bribe Them, He Tells Returned Men.

London, March 1.—"If we put our case rightly, we shall have all the right-thinking people of the Empire behind us," said Lord Haig, presiding today at a grand council meeting of the Comrades of the Great War. He warned the returned men to have nothing to do with any of the political parties, as the latter were attempting to bribe them.

How Bolshevism Works

Now and then some British or American adventurer comes back from Russia and gives an account of how Bolshevism works. The accounts vary; sometimes they are contradictory. We must not judge Bolshevism in Russia until the evidence is all in. We have enough of it to know that for a country like Canada Bolshevism would be a plague and a curse. But this is not to say that it lacks all features that would make the system agreeable to Russia. At one time the general belief was that the Bolshevists were a mere handful of murderous visionaries who had usurped authority in Russia, and that they were conducting affairs in that country as the mahout governs the elephant. The original opposition to the Bolshevists was based on the belief that they were governing Russia against the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the Russian people. That opinion has moderated. There is little evidence to show that the masses in Russia are getting any worse government than they deserve, or that they are not in favor of the sort of rule that Lenine and Trotsky are giving them. That rule is, against certain classes, absolutely inhuman. Economically it would be speedily ruinous to any country not self-sufficing. In Russia it has been going on for nearly three years, and it cannot be said that the Russian masses are against it.

Major Robert Davis, formerly an American Presbyterian clergyman, has returned from Russia after a years' sojourn. He tells what he knows of Bolshevism, merely that the facts may be known, and disavowing any purpose of praising, excusing, condemning or judging it. He was in Kharkof and there observed how Bolshevism works out. The city has a population of 800,000, and is one of the most modern in Russia. When it was taken by the Bolshevists more than a year ago, it was announced that a rigid equality should prevail. The first step was to remove the bootblack stands from the streets, because the sight of one free soul kneeling at the feet of another free soul was repulsive to true democracy. Porters at the railroad stations were abolished, because it was degrading for one man to carry the suitcase of another who was equally able to carry it. The next order was to the hospitals. They were forbidden to treat Bright's disease, because it was a "sugar disease," not cultivated by workingmen. For the same reason gout was placed beyond the pale of medical science, since those who suffered from it were of the bourgeoisie.

Men were forbidden to raise their hats to women, thereby acknowledging the superiority of one sex. All women were ordered to wear the peasant's kerchief, as bonnets signified class distinctions. Pensions of 300 roubles and more a month were abolished, since a pension of this amount indicated that the recipient must have been an upper-grade court or army servant. All titles, whether of courtesy or heredity, were abolished, and "citizen" and citizeness" substituted. Next followed the disappearance of all newspapers and the closing of the hotels, the latter were commandeered by the Bolshevist officials. The newspapers were suppressed because they were not "red" enough. Their places were taken by three specially prepared Bolshevist journals. No books could be sold without the stamp of a Soviet censor. The sale of food was restricted. Nobody could get in or out of Kharkof without a permit. Sickness broke out. The hospitals were filled; the hospital corridors were filled with cases of spotted fever. Water was scarce, all as a result of the incompetence of the Bolshevist officials who took over the administration.

The affairs of the city and of the Ukraine were conducted from the headquarters at Kiev. The president of this was a Bulgarian spy, captured by the Roumanians, and eventually liberated by the Bolshevists. Kharkof was allowed some semblance of self-government. It was permitted to elect two hundred and forty members to the local Soviet. Women could not vote, but only soldiers, workers and members of the Commune. This Soviet then delegated its powers to twelve members, which in turn passed on its authority to an inner council of five. The inner council was the real "works." The president of this inner council, who had almost czar-like powers, was a former millhand. He was at first inclined to be lenient to the bourgeoisie, but later, for fear that Trotzky would suspect him of lukewarmness and probably have him shot, he became the fanatical persecutor of the better classes. Finding ready money lacking, the Bolshevist chiefs levied off Kharkof in kind. People were forced to contribute to the cause according to the number of rooms they occupied, to the number of suits of clothes they had, and according to the luxuries or comforts like motor cars, victrolas, typewriters, musical instruments and so forth in their possession.

The Bolshevists busied themselves in rearranging the school system. They prohibited the teaching of grammar as superfluous. Geometry and physics were both abolished because they were theoretical. All old history teaching was abolished except as it threw light upon the "liberation of peoples." The law school was similarly abolished because the new laws would be made by the Soviet. Several ancient holidays and feast days were abolished, but substituted for them were various days that had special significance for the Reds. The regular professors at the college, unless they could prove their devotion to the Commune, were dismissed.

Super-Detective of the Punjab

John Paul Warburton, who died at Kasauli the other day, was one of the greatest detectives of history, one of the most powerful of British servants in India, a terror to evildoers throughout the Punjab. He is referred to by Kipling as the magician whom Strickland was "foolish enough to take for a model," and everybody who has read "Plain Tales From the Hills" will remember Strickland who for a time became "Miss Youghal's Sais." Of Warburton Kipling said: "Now in the whole of Upper India there is only one man who can pass for Hindu or Mohammedan, hide-dresser or priest, as he pleases. He is feared and respected by the natives from Ghor Kathri to the Jamma Musjid; and he is supposed to have the gift of invisibility and executive control over many devils. But this has done him no good in the eyes of the India Government." Some time later the Indian Government did officially recognize the great work that had been done by Warburton, and it is presumed that when he died he had no reason to feel that he had been neglected. But even if this were not so one would gather from Kipling that Indian civil servants have got into the habit of being unrecognised and that they would be rather embarrassed if their merits were officially proclaimed.

Warburton was an Afghan. His mother was a lady famous for wealth and beauty and a near relative of the King of Kabul. Her husband was a high court official. But she fell in love with Robert Warburton, an ensign of artillery, and with him she eloped, taking along her little son, Jahan Dad Khan. They remained in hiding until the husband realising that she was lost forever, divorced her. Then she became Warburton's wife, and the new husband became the adopted father of the boy, whose name was changed to John Paul Warburton. In course of time the adventurous couple had a son, who became known to fame as Sir Robert Warburton, author of "Eighteen Years in the Khyber." The half brothers both entered the Indian service, John Paul's natural inclinations taking him to the police department. He understood the Indian character as no Caucasian could have done, and to this advantage of birth he added a genius for the detection of crime, a fearlessness and a fine sense of honor, that made him respected as well as feared by the criminal classes of India. He became known as "Wa-ar Button Sahib," which was shortened to "Button Sahib," the name about which countless legends have grown in the past half century.

The most amazing gift of Button Sahib's was perhaps his reading of native faces. Time and time again, after glancing at fifty suspected persons, he would unerringly declare the guilty man, and naturally enough as time went on his mere presence would cause the superstitious criminals to confess themselves. A correspondent of the London Times reports an instance related to him by a friend who was riding with "Button" through a big Hindu fair. Suddenly "Button" stopped and ordered a policeman to bring before him an ordinary-looking man who was some little distance away. The friend asked "Button" what he wanted with the man, and he answered that he was sure he was a criminal. Sure enough when he was searched a set of burglar's tools was found upon him, slung by fine cords over his bare shoulders, under his clothes. Warburton had never seen the man before. There was nothing to mark him out as a criminal, but to the uncanny gift of the Afghan detective guilt must have been written on his face. Such exploits traveled all over India almost as swiftly as though they had been published in the newspapers, and year after year Warburton's fame increased.

His influence in a crowd was marvelous. Once at Amritsar when the Mohammedans and Hindus clashed and a bloody riot seemed imminent, Warburton leaped from his carriage with the coachman's long whip in his hand, roaring like a lion "Scoundrels! What would ye do?" The entire mob fled as one man, stumbling over each other in their frantic efforts to escape. At Patiala, while the plague riots were raging in 1902, Warburton walked unarmed and alone into a fanatical and frenzied mob, and turned the tide of feeling by his mere presence and name. At the risk of his life he rescued the medical officer and hospital staff from a burning house in which they had taken refuge from the rioters, who were demanding their blood and who were waiting for them to burn to death or to come forth to certain murder. Once at Samarkand a party of Indian civilians came across a Hindu who was waiting patiently there for Warburton to die in order that he might return to India. It was not the British raj he feared, but this single Afghan whom millions of Indian natives believed to be the master of innumerable devils.

Warburton died in his eightieth year, of shock following a riding accident. The Times correspondent says. "He was a great gentleman in the old sense of the word. The thing that most struck those who came into contact with him was that though his whole life had been spent in the detection of crime, he preserved a remarkable simplicity of character and a very great faith in human nature to the end." The writer questions whether it was politic for the Government to permit the knowledge of Warburton's death to become general, so great was the influence of his name, but it seems not unlikely that a return to the scene of his activities after death will not appear to the superstitious to be a feat beyond the powers of Warburton.

A Fire Burning 25 Years.

There has been a fire burning on the water front of the Hastings Mills on Burrard Inlet, B.C., for twenty-five years. Through rain and storm, winter and summer, the flames gleam brightly and black smoke rises. Ever since the mills started there has been this bonfire, fed by the endless sawdust carriers. At other mills throughout the province the sawdust is treated the same way. The matter is being investigated with a view to making use of this enormous waste.

Grades of Lemons.

There are a good many interesting points about lemons. There are several qualities that combine to make a prime or fancy brand of lemons. A first class lemon must be free from specks, have a smooth skin of a pale yellow color and be very hard. Take a magnifying glass and you will see that the little black specks on the lemon, that look like seeds are really parasites. They are called lemon lice, and a curious fact is that as soon as the lemon is cut from the tree these parasites die immediately.

The best fruit comes from a little place near Naples, Italy, called Maiori. The next in grade comes from Sorrento. Those from Messina and Palermo are about the same quality and rank next, and those from Catania are inferior. The Maiori lemons are very carefully cultivated. They are on the trees even while the snow is still on the ground but are kept covered with matting to protect them, not only from the cold but from the scorching rays of the sun. They are nearly white when picked, very graceful and regular in shape and are exceedingly smooth and hard.—Spatula.

The Capitol.

The capitol at Washington fronts east and stands on a plateau eighty-eight feet above the level of the Potomac river. The entire length of the building north and south is 751 feet 4 inches, and its greatest dimension from east to west is 350 feet. The area covered by the building is 153,112 square feet. The dome of the original central building was constructed of wood, covered with copper. This was replaced in 1856 by the present structure of cast iron. It was completed in 1865. The entire weight of iron used is 8,909,200 pounds. The dome is crowned by a bronze statue of Freedom, which is 19 feet 6 inches high and weighs 14,985 pounds. It was modeled by Crawford. The height of the dome above the base line of the east front is 287 feet 5 inches. The greatest diameter at the base is 135 feet 5 inches. The rotunda is 97 feet 6 inches in diameter and its height from the floor to the top of the canopy is 180 feet 3 inches.

Man's Fear of Lightning.

It is hopeless to try to quiet human fears of the thunderstorm by statistics showing that lightning kills far fewer persons than measles or motorcars. Lichtenberg, the eighteenth century physicist, who was a satirist as well as a specialist on electricity, wrote in vain his article on "Fear of Lightning." At that moment there was dysentery in Gottingen, and six persons were said to have died—"more than twice as many in a few days as lightning has killed in our town in more than half a century, and yet the public seem remarkably easy on the subject." How different it would be, Lichtenberg reflected, "if the dysentery rose above the horizon in the form of a big black cloud, changing day into twilight, and whenever it selected a victim exploded with a violent thunderclap."—London Chronicle.

Steel Rail Inventor.

The first modern steel rails of the type which made high speed railway operation possible were designed by Plimmon Henry Dudley, who was born at Freedom, O., in 1843. He became a civil and metallurgical engineer, and after four years as chief engineer of the city of Akron, O., he turned his attention to railroading and transportation problems. His first invention, the dynagraph, was made in 1874. He perfected the track indicator in 1880 and three years later designed the first five inch steel rail used in America. In 1892 he introduced the first six inch 100 pound rails. Another of his inventions which made the famous "fliers" of today possible was the stremmatograph, an instrument for obtaining and registering strains in rails under moving trains.

PHRASES BORN OF LATE WAR TO BE DROPPED IN U. S. MILITARY SCHOOLS

Strictly American Doctrines of Tactics to be Aim of Training Section of General Staff

Such phrases as "over the top" and "liaison," which were a common part of the parlance of war literature and conversation, are doomed to disappear from American military phraseology and will not be included in the army text books of the future. The new field service regulations of the United States army and the manuals of the various arms of the service, now being prepared by the general staff, will differ in but minor details from the regulations in force before the world war, and will show practically no traces of the passing vogue of foreign methods.

The formulation of a strictly American doctrine of tactics, and the establishment of a system of uniform instruction in all military schools is the aim of the training section of the general staff, according to high officers here. So-called "trench warfare" was only a passing episode in military history, in the view of the officers, while the fundamental principles of war are the same as those employed by Napoleon at Jena and by Grant at Gettysburg.

This policy was stated to students of the present class at the army service schools at Fort Lavenworth, Kansas, by Brig.-Gen. Hugh A. Drum, director of the line school, who was chief of staff of the First Army overseas.

"Our experiences in the European war have been sufficient and the results so creditable," Gen. Drum said, "that we have little or no need to borrow tactical doctrines from a foreign country. Gen. Drum said that such terminology as "open," "position," "stabilized," and "trench" warfare would not be recognized or employed, as the same tactical principles apply to all of those so-called classes of warfare.

Just as Gen. Pershing insisted on training the American Expeditionary Forces for "open" warfare, so at the service schools, Gen. Drum said, "the inculcation of an offensive spirit, which must be the primary object of the course, is best obtained by the study of open warfare offensive situations."

At the same time, it is the plan of the general staff to make due allowance for new weapons developed in recent years, especially infantry weapons such as the one-pounder guns, automatic rifles and machine guns. These weapons have made necessary the creation of several new units and slight modification of old infantry formation.

Foreign words will be eliminated from the terminology of the manuals. For example, "information" will take the place of "liaison." "Liaison officers," a war product, will be known hereafter as "information officers."

The service schools will compile their own text books, Gen. Drum said and German authorities studied before the war will be discarded.

While the use of new weapons has caused some changes in organization, it must not be forgotten, officers emphasize, that infantry remains the principal branch of the army and that other services are auxiliary arms. In this connection, it was recalled that Gen. Pershing, in a letter to the chief of the air service commenting upon the functions of airplanes, said that "an air force by itself cannot obtain a decision against forces on the ground."

"An air force," the general added, "acting independently, can of its own account, neither win a war at the present time, nor, so far as we can tell, at any time in the future."

MANY MINORS SAID TO CAST VOTES IN TORONTO

ACT DOES NOT SPECIFY THAT PERSON ASSESSED MUST BE OVER 21

Toronto, March 1.—The question of whether income tax can be collected by the city from persons under 21 years of age if those assessed refuse to pay, has again been raised at the City Hall, and civic officials seem somewhat in doubt about the matter.

There is no doubt about the right of the Assessment Department to levy the assessment, and it has been doing so for years. All persons, whether over or under 21 years, and who are in receipt of an income of over $700, are assessed. The Assessment Act does not specify that they shall be over 21 years.

On the other hand, the law provides that no person under 21 can be sued for debt. Therefore, the question arises as to whether the tax can be collected.

The Assessment Department, however, contends that if the person assessed is old enough to earn the income he should be equally liable with a person over the legal age limit. He or she enjoys practically all the privileges extended by the municipality that an older person has.

The department is strengthened in this view by judgments of the Court of Revision. During the war a number of appeals were made by young munition workers in receipt of fat salaries, but who were not yet of age. The Court held that inasmuch as they were receiving the income they should pay the tax, and the appeals were dismissed.

There is another feature in connection with the question. The law provides that no person under 21 years of age shall have a vote. But hundreds of minors who are assessed for income are on the voters' list, inasmuch as every person assessed for income is put down on the list as being entitled to a vote, and his vote is not challenged at the polling booth.

CARETAKER IS MURDERED

George Williams Found Dead at His Post in Hamilton

Hamilton, March 1.—Hamilton has another murder mystery. At 7.40 o'clock Saturday, George Williams, night watchman at the Concrete Pipe and Products, Limited, near the Valley Inn Hill, was found by Thomas Williams, another employe, reporting for duty, with his head smashed. A bloody pick axe nearby was evidently the weapon with which the murder was committed. The body was in the doorway of the main entrance.

The police failed to unearth any motive for the crime or a clue to the slayer. Williams was 62 years of age, and came here from St. Catharines with the owners of the firm, J. Weller and W. H. Weller.

The authorities say Williams had no relatives.

ALLIES SELECT LIST OF GERMAN WAR CULPRITS

THESE WILL BE RECOMMENDED FOR TRIAL AS TEST OF GOOD FAITH

Paris, March 1.—The War Criminals Commission has decided to send to Germany the names of forty-six men for trial before the German courts. This, it is announced, will be a test of good faith, upon which the Allies have agreed.

The list, with a covering note of considerable length, has been drawn up and will be submitted to the Supreme Council. It is expected it will be forwarded to Berlin within the week.

The British selected the names of seven, accused mostly for submarine atrocities; France selected twelve; Belgium fifteen, and Italy, Poland and Roumania four each.

NITTI NOW WILLING TO ACCEPT COMPROMISE

LEAGUE OF NATIONS MAY HAVE CHARGE OF PORT OF FIUME

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Rome, March 1.—Premier Nitti is disposed to accept a compromise settlement of the Adriatic question, according to the Messaggero. By this arrangement, the newspaper says, Italy would not claim a territorial continuity between Istria and Fiume on condition that the city be placed under Italian sovereignty. The League of Nations, it is said, will be in charge of the administration of the port.

TORONTO BANDITS ROB TWO SLEEPING MEN

VICTIMS OF ASSAULT WERE BADLY BEATEN AND THEIR MONEY TAKEN

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 1.—Creeping into their room at two o'clock this morning when the household were asleep two robbers inflicted dangerous and terrible wounds on the faces, chests and throats of William W. Aheulaka and William Teniuck. The wounded men were also robbed of $150.00 cash which was taken from under their pillows. The room from appearances was the scene of a horrible struggle. Both men were sleeping when attacked, Tenuich having planned to return soon to Europe, for which purpose he was reported to have $3.000 on his person. The robbers made their attack before their victims were aware of their presence. Fighting in the dark, the two men, by their furious defence, roused the rest of the household but not before their assailants had made good their escape.

TWENTY YEARS AGO LADYSMITH CITY WAS RELIEVED

SIEGE WAS ONE OF THE STIRRING INCIDENTS IN BOER WAR

On March 1, 1900, Peterborough in common with the rest of the British Empire, thrilled with the news that Ladysmith was relieved. For a full four months, ever since the Boers had first laid siege to the city, the eyes of virtually the entire civilized world had been centred on Ladysmith, and as General Buller's forces of relief drew daily nearer the beleaguered city the Empire was tense with expectancy. Finally, on the night of February 28, the tidings of the relief were flashed over the wires to the waiting world.

It was on the night of February 27 that Lord Dundonald, accompanied by two squadrons of cavalry, first effected an entrance into Ladysmith. The main army, under General Buller, reached the city the following day. Its arrival was hailed with joy by the haggard garrison and populace, who were on the point of exhaustion after their four months' ordeal.

No Canadian units took part in the relief of Ladysmith, the troops from the Dominion being engaged on other sectors of the battle front at the time. A number of veterans of the Imperial units which relieved the city now have their homes in Toronto, however, and as the anniversary of their coup draws near once more, they look back with pride upon the days of twenty years ago.

Sergt.-Major H. Jennings, of Toronto, now attached to Military Headquarters, is one of those who entered Ladysmith with General Buller.

Calls It "Childish" Affair.

"Compared with some of the operations of the Great War," he observed, "the relief of Ladysmith at this distance of time, seems almost a childish affair. But to General Buller's army, at that moment, it was an entirely different thing.

"I was attached to General Lyttleton's staff, with the rank of sergt.-major. General Buller's first effort to relieve Ladysmith was made at Colenso on December 15, 1899. As is well known, it proved abortive. We next tried a bold dash for the city, but Spion Kop barred our way, and a second time we crossed the Tugela. A third attempt, at Vaalkrantz, fared little better. We retired through a defile, which all those who were there will remember with much concern, mingled with amazement that we ever escaped from it.

"General Buller's next move showed, his detractors to the contrary, that he was a real tactician. A few moves, somewhat like those made on a chess board, brought us into a position where we commanded the key to the Boer lines. There was desperate fighting for six weeks and our brigade suffered heavily, but we finally got through and entered Ladysmith on March 1.

"We found, then, that the Dundonald Cavalry were already in the city. However, we received a royal ovation from the inhabitants. The garrison were pale and emaciated, but their uniforms were spick and span, and they presented a striking contrast to our men, ragged, unshaven, battle-stained, but ruddy. We only stayed a couple of days in Ladysmith, then we were out again and off in pursuit of the retreating Boers.

Sergt. Jennings, who has to his credit 35 years' service in the Imperial and Canadian forces, retains the warmest admiration for Sir Henry Wilson, now chief of the Imperial general staff, under whom he served during the Ladysmith relief.

"He was only a captain, and a brigade-major then," said the grizzled veteran, "but he exhibited those splendid qualities, the development of which has brought him to the enviable position he now holds."

Toronto Rector Refuses to Accept Higher Salary

Toronto, March 1.— St. Simon's Anglican vestry, at an adjourned annual meeting, voted an increase to the rector Rev. Dr. E. C. Cayley, of $1 000, which Dr. Cayley promptly declined to accept. His present stipend is $3,020, and the congregation proposed to make it $4,000. Dr. Cayley said he did not feel that he could accept the increase, as he had recently made an appeal on behalf of the current expenses of the church..

TROUBLE IN INDIA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, March 1.—Despatch from India dated February 26 reports that an attack of Mangeland Zaedwar Tribesmen in Kuram, Afghanistan was repulsed by Brulas and Kuram militia. The aggressors lost over one hundred killed, the despatch adds.

YOUR
MOST IMPORTANT DEAL

When a man applies for Life Insurance he is taking up the most important deal of his life, for, presumably, he will not be here when it is settled.

How important then that he select the best obtainable.

The record of the Sun Life of Canada for the past 49 years of its existence has been an unbroken march of progress, obtained through square dealing, and the past year has surpassed all others with its Assets of over ONE HUNDRED MILLION and Income of TWENTY-FIVE MILLIONS and Surplus, on Government standard, of over TEN MILLIONS. Where can you find its equal?

Is it not to your interest, therefore, to place your Life Insurance with the MEMBERS OF POLICE FORCE ARE GIVEN INCREASE IN SALARIES ASKED [illegible]

New Men are Allowed $1100 a Year and Chief [illegible] is to be Paid $2400—Total Estimates for 1920 $23,891,50, an Increase of $5475.

The police commissioners held a session behind closed doors on Saturday afternoon to discuss the increase in salaries for the police force which had been shelved several times already. Barely had the Review reporter entered the door when Magistrate Dumble suggested that the reporters and Chief Thompson be asked to retire while the discussion was in progress. It is understood that several other suggestions with reference to the increases were put forward by different members of the board, but finally [illegible] moved and the chairman seconded that the increases be granted on the scale as suggested by the chief in his estimates. Magistrate Dumble objected and it was decided to rescind the motion passed at the last meeting with regard to an addition of one man to the police force and this addition will now be left over for another year. The estimates as prepared by Chief Thompson were then passed. They appear below showing the new salaries and increases:

SIGN LANGUAGE.

It Has Become the Tongue of Inmates of Prisons.

Prison messages were mentioned in a recent case at the Old Bailey, London.

Talking is not allowed in prisons. There are, however, several ways in which convicts communicate with each other without talking.

Most of these silent conversations take place during exercise, especially on mornings after a session, when news of crimes and sentences is soon all over the yard.

In a short while, relates Tit-Bits, every newcomer, if he has been "in" before, tells all the others of his offence and the length of his sentence. Those who know the Morse code send long messages to each other even when they are in the workshops, where they hammer in such a way as to produce long and short sounds.

Generally, the first signal a man makes tells the crime he has been convicted of. He puts his hands to his mouth and brings his jaw together if he has been passing counterfeit money. If he has been picking pockets he crosses his wrists in front of his body; if he is "in" for burglary he turns an imaginary key in a lock. If he has only been committed for trial and is waiting his sentence, he counts off twelve on his fingers, thus meaning "jury."

After a prisoner has told of his crime he signals his sentence. A common slang term for three months' imprisonment is a "carpet bag"; the pantomime of lifting a bag is gone through by the sentenced one. "A moon" signifies a month. The prisoner will look up at the moon and extend as many fingers as months of confinement to be endured.

The signs for any number of years are very simple. The news of one year's imprisonment is communicated by pulling the left ear; two years, pulling the right ear twice; five years, touching either ear with all the fingers of one hand extended; ten years, putting both hands to the sides of the face and drawing them downwards.

"Have you any tobacco?" is asked by popping a finger into the mouth and then touching the side of the nose. One cough means "Listen!" Two coughs means "Look out!"

A Lake of Soda.

There is a lake in British East Africa, Lake Magadi, that is famous for its vast deposits of soda. Until within recent years few people knew of this lake, for it lies in the midst of a barren and waterless waste; but the railway that was started some time ago by an English company to transport the soda to the coast is now finished, thus opening a way to this curious natural phenomenon.

Ordinarily the lake looks as if it were frozen and covered with a coating of snow partially thawed, then frozen again. The temperature gives the lie to this appearance of roughened ice, for the heat is extreme, and at mid-day almost unbearable. The soda burns one's feet even through his shoes, and the sharp frosty spikes will pierce any except the thickest sole. After the rains there is a layer of water over the greater part of the lake, which has turned a beautiful shade of pink. By moonlight the scene is weirdly beautiful.

The lake contains millions of tons of soda deposits, and both surface and underground streams of saturated soda liquor continually feed it. The present supply of soda is enormous and as fast as it is removed a new surface, formed from the mother liquid beneath, replaces it. Natives have collected soda from the same spot year after year without making the slightest difference in the abundance of the supply. The company expect to remove at least 100,000 tons a year.

A Single Thought.

Mrs. High—Doesn't Mrs. Owens look radiant? She must be thinking of her new gown. Mr. High—Yes, and do you observe how wretched her husband looks? He is evidently thinking of it, too.

MILLION PAIRS OF SHOES ARE NEEDED

Destitute Jewish Children of Eastern Europe Use Rags to Protect Feet From the Cold.

A million pairs of shoes are needed by the destitute Jewish children of Eastern Europe to-day, according to reports received by the Canadian Jewish Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

At least that many of the helpless and hungry Jewish youngsters of Eastern Europe are absolutely without footgear of any kind, their relief agents say. Thousands of others have rags sewn around their feet in lieu of shoes.

Several carloads of shoes that formerly belonged to Allied soldiers in France were purchased there by the Joint Distribution Committee of Funds for Jewish Sufferers from the War, for the Jewish women of Eastern Europe. But it was impossible to buy the shoes in sizes that could be worn by the children, and all others sold in Europe are at a prohibitive price. So a million youngsters are barefoot during the hard winter of Eastern Europe.

There is a great lack of every conceivable kind of clothing, as well as shoes. In Serbia, a common child's costume just now consists of two sacks, with holes cut through for the head and feet. In Poland, flour sacks and sugar sacks sent with supplies to the destitute Jews by Jewish relief agencies are all being made over into clothing, and even small salt sacks are pieced together, and used for this purpose.

Old-fashioned Mothers.

The best mothers in London's East Side, the poor district, are Jewish, in the opinion of Dr. C. W. Saleeby, chairman of the National Birth-rate Commission, as expressed in an address at University College, London. Dr. Saleeby added that Irish mothers were not a bad second, and that the English ranked as a very bad third.

He explained that in the case of the Jewish and Irish mother this was a direct result of race ethics. Breast feeding was virtually universal among them, and there was a minimum of that dreaded disease arising from immorality. He declared that infant mortality was not really a medical problem, but a social problem of motherhood and a question of racial morals.

During his address Dr. Saleeby quoted figures showing that despite housing, bad sanitation and virtually no child welfare efforts, infantile mortality in Western Ireland was only about 35 per thousand, as compared with 135 in 1,000 in Bradford, England, which has the best equipment for infant welfare in the world.

Old Open Work Clocks.

A peculiar clock of the time of Charles I. was the lantern or bird cage style, which hung from the walls high up with its works exposed.

Visionary.

Which fruit is the most visionary? The apple of the eye.

An echo is a sound repeated from some obstructing surface so that a person in the path of both the original and reflected waves hears the sound twice. Sound being produced by waves of the air, when such waves meet an opposing surface as a wall they are reflected like light waves. The sound so heard as if originating behind the reflecting surface is an echo. An echo returns to the point from which the sound originated if the reflecting surface is at right angles to it. An oblique surface deflects the sound in another direction so that it may be heard elsewhere, though not at the point where the sound originated. If the direct and reflected sounds succeed one another with great rapidity, as happens when the reflecting surface is near, the echo only clouds the original sound so that it is not heard distinctly, and it is this which interferes with the hearing in churches and other large buildings.—Philadelphia Press.

The Compromise.

"How did Jack and Mabel agree over their dispute about the marriage service?"

"Mabel told Jack if he would make good on the 'all his worldly goods' endowment proposition she would gladly make the promise to obey."—Baltimore American.

The Locotractor.

An interesting problem, highly important to the future of the country, is being worked out in South Africa with the help of a new kind of railway. The problem came up with the after-the-war development of the country, the effort put forth by the Union Government to persuade the farmers to increase their crops, the willingness of the farmers to make the effort, and the impracticability of transporting the produce. The need was for more railways, but the way seemed blocked by the cost of construction, if the railways were to be operated by the regular type of locomotive. The roads are bad, and the alternation of rainy seasons with dry and windy seasons makes it out of the question to keep them in good condition. And so South Africa has hit upon, and is experimenting with, a new form of railway by which the cars run on tracks and are drawn, not by the familiar locomotive but by a locotractor, whose guiding portion runs on rails like the rest of the train while its driving wheels, shod with solid rubber tires, travel on either side of the track. The construction of such a railway costs about $4,000 a mile, as compared with the $12,000 to $20,000 a mile cost for a standard railway in South Africa, and the system, it is said, adapts itself particularly well to the needs of a farming population. If the initial lines do as well as has been expected, South Africa will probably become a land of the locotractor.

Two Dangers.

The friend of an English clergyman, who was spending a few days in the latter's parish, says the Guardian, went up to a neighboring country one day and found an old woman just turning away from the door. "Locked and bolted," she said. She then told him that she lived in a neighboring village and that she came every now and then to the church in which she had been christened and confirmed and married, but it was always the same; she could never get in. "But what reason can the vicar have for keeping the church shut up?" asked the friend. "I don't know, sir, I'm sure," she said. "I should think either he must be afraid of some one getting in and praying, or else he's afraid of God's getting out and seeing what a state his parish is in."

The least depth of the Panama Canal is forty-one feet. The length is about fifty miles, from deep water in the Carribean Sea to deep water in the Pacific.

An Important Analysis

By EUNICE BLAKE

We hear a great deal about happy brides going to the altar. I have long been a happy wife and the mother of children, but in my case, so far as my feelings were concerned the word should be halter instead of altar. Sensitive women are liable to collapse on the eve of their marriage. And why not? Every one knows that marriage is a lottery. But to say that one will either draw a prize or a blank is absurd. One doesn't draw a blank in the lottery of marriage; it is either a prize or Tartarus.

I confess that as a girl I was emotional, and I have now eradicated emotion from my nature. I had several offers of marriage and chose John as the most desirable of the lot. I felt every confidence in him. My only trouble was that I didn't seem to feel any different the day after I became engaged to him than the day before. There was a lot of emotion during the middle day of the three, but somehow on the third it seemed to have vanished.

I was frightened. What had I done? Engaged myself to a man whom I did not love? How could I have felt at that lovingness—I use the word for want of a better—I experienced the day John proposed to me and I accepted him? From the heavens I had sunk to a bottomless pit. I would have given the world to undo what I had done. Why not undo it? Because there was a sort of subconsciousness in me that I was making a ninny of myself. How could I, who had responded to my lover's words and caresses one day, tell him the next that I had made a prodigious mistake? Besides what assurance had I, should I make this confession, that I would not be as much cast down a day later because I had broken the engagement?

I had the good sense to keep away from John for a couple of days, at the end of which time I recovered from my reaction and wondered at it. Indeed, when I met my fiance again I was back in that emotional condition commonly called love. Love! In four letters are described that which is the foundation of the world. And yet when we speak of it between young persons who are about to mate I think it would better be called emotional insanity. This is not real love, though I admit it may be the beginning of real love.

I soon recovered my equanimity and sailed on smoothly for the four months of my engagement. I was occupied preparing my trousseau, and that kept me from asking myself every few minutes whether or no I was really in love. I think if John had paid a bit of attention to another girl I should have known quite definitely whether I loved him or not. But he was not that kind of a fellow at all. He was perfectly satisfied with me, and I concealed from him the fact that I was constantly fighting doubts whether I loved him well enough to marry him.

I remained in this condition of mental hesitancy till a few days before the day appointed for the wedding, then I had a terrible breakdown. I analyzed my feelings thoroughly, and the analysis was very unsatisfactory. There is nothing so incapable of analysis as love unless it be a poem. But I made what I considered a number of analyses, and every one proved more conclusively than the preceding that I was about to marry a man for whom I had only friendship.

I resisted the temptation to tell him so till I could withstand it no longer, then sent for him. He saw the moment he looked at me that there was something the matter.

"What is it, sweetheart?" he asked anxiously.

There was something in the word sweetheart that threw me back on myself as an engine reversed. But I felt that what was troubling me must come out.

"I am very miserable."

"That's singular. I'm very happy."

"I am afraid I don't love you well enough to marry you."

He took my avowal in a very unloverlike manner. He should have ground his teeth and tore his hair. He did nothing of the kind.

"A sort of stage fright?"

"No; I have long been in doubt. And today I have analyzed my feelings and"—

"In what laboratory did you do it?"

"In the laboratory of introspection."

"Did you put your love into a test tube?"

"I suppose that would express it figuratively."

"Well, if it didn't turn out to be love what did it turn out to be?"

"I don't know."

"It doesn't matter to us since it isn't love. I'll countermand the orders given in preparation for the wedding. The cards are out. We can't recall them."

"That's the most terrible thing about it."

"Terrible! There's nothing terrible in that. We were not going to be married to please these persons. If at the last moment we find we're going to make a mistake we must withdraw of course."

"Of course."

"I'll go at once to countermand the orders."

He turned to go. I called to him, "Haven't you forgotten something?"

He turned and saw me looking at him wistfully.

"Oh, a kiss!"

He came back, took me in his arms and kissed me. I didn't release him.

A Fair-minded American.

A powerful association of Canadian wholesale grocers has unanimously resolved to buy no more goods in the United States unless Dominion money at par is accepted therefor. This is a wise and proper course. A Canadian dollar which buys 100 cents' worth of Dominion products should buy 100 cents' worth of American goods. It is robbery of our neighbor to steal 10 cents from every dollar of hers that comes across the line, to fatten money changers at the expense of those who toil. Several American manufacturers have agreed to take Dominion money at its face; and doubtless this will be done by most concerns which market their goods across the border.

Apropos of this, it is of interest to note that the emigration of Americans to Canada is gaining steadily in volume. In 1919 more than 52,000 of our citizens left the country to make their homes in the Dominion. Of these 25,000 were farmers who sought the agricultural sections of the Northwest Teritories and took with them over 18 millions in money and effects. We can ill afford to lose these farmers. In fact we have reached a point where we have no industrious workers to spare. Yet the 1920 hegira to Canada will pass all records. The sentiment of nationalism will no longer keep citizens under the Stars and Stripes who can enjoy more liberty a few miles away under the flag of a country which offers all the advantages and opportunities of ours.—Post Express, Rochester.

Geography Not Necessary.

This school story concerns a little girl who could not grasp her lessons in geography. The teacher had tried various means to impart knowledge—all in vain, however, and as a last resource she one forenoon punished the girl. Perhaps the punishment "fitted the crime," but the girl's mother thought otherwise, and in the afternoon she bounced into the school room, in quest of an explanation. "She could not say her geography," was the teacher's bland answer to her inquiry. "Geography! I dinna ken geography, and I got a man! Oor Jean dinna ken geography, and she got a man! And there's you, who kens a'boot geography—and you canno get ane at a'."

The Dockers' M.P.

John Ward, "the dockers' M.P." of England, is also known as the "Buffalo Bill" of Parliament. He was one of the many picturesque figures that entered the House of Commons after the great Liberal victory in the general election of 1906. He stood out from even the tall men of the House—there were many—by his height, something like six feet two or three. His dress was peculiar; he wore the shortest of short sacque coats, rather baggy trousers; but the most remarkable thing was a tall soft white hat—the tallest soft white hat that had ever been seen in Westminster. It was this hat that led to his nickname.

Only the Author.

Concerning the rehearsals of her first play, "The Scarlet Pimpernel," the Baroness Orczy, who has just celebrated her silver wedding, tells this amusing story:

A new call-boy was engaged at the theatre. Going up to the baroness one day, he said: "Excuse me, miss, but are you one of the company?" "No," she replied, with a smile, "not exactly; in fact, I am only the authoress."

"Oh, is that all?" replied the boy. "Very well, then, you sit down over there out of the way," and he turned away with a sniff of contempt.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representative will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example—and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

FLU SEVERE NEAR WELAND

Three in One amily are Victims at Humberstone.

Welland, March 1.—The flu epidemic is not serious in Welland city, but is severe in adjoining districts. The schools, churches and public places have been closed in Humberstone Village. In Humberstone Township the death of three people in one family has occurred, Alfred Kramer, his wife and daughter.

BIG WAGES TO BRICKLAYERS

Windsor Builders Advance From 87 Cents to $1.25.

Windsor, March 1.—The demands of Windsor bricklayers for a wage of $1.25 an hour will be agreed to by the contractors, according to George Goodman, chairman of the bricklayers' section of the Builders' and Contractors' Association. The union scale last year was 87½ cents an hour.

Law at Ascot.

Ascot is legal as well as royal in being the only racecourse in the world with its especial court of justice. When George IV. was regent he was assaulted at Ascot and when his assailant was arrested demanded his instant punishment. Enraged at the delay necessitated by the man's conveyance to Windsor, the prince decreed that a magistrate should always be in attendance at Ascot for the swift punishment of offenders. The indictable offenses act of 1818 made the royal wish the law of the land, and during Ascot week the chief magistrate at Bow street is accordingly on duty in the little room opening onto the paddock, to try and to sentence all offenders within a minute or two of their arrest.—London Answers.

Not Allowed to Read the Bible.

But few people know that in the sixteenth century an Englishman was not allowed to read the Bible, yet it is perfectly true. Henry VIII. issued a decree prohibiting the common people from reading the Bible. Officers of state were exempt from this law. Probably the king thought these officials would be none the worse for perusing the sacred work, and noble ladies or gentlewomen might read the proscribed volume if they did so in their gardens or orchards, but no one was allowed even to read it to the lower classes.—Westminster Gazette.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

Once a General Now a Professor

ANYBODY born in Petrolia, Ont., has a right to become an engineer if he wants to. But Brig.-Gen. Mitchell, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering of the University of Toronto, was born in a Petrolia Methodist parsonage and therefore must have been encouraged while very young to fix his gaze upon heavenly things rather than engineering problems. Canada knows him now as the engineering soldier who revolutionised the intelligence system of the Canadian army and extended his new system to the British armies on the west front, in Italy, in Egypt, Palestine, Salonika and Mesopotamia.

Gen. Mitchell's father was an Irish Methodist preacher. His mother was Scotch. Here began the wide angle. You can see it in the big, broad face, ruddy and genial, the man who looks like a humorist but is not, even about himself. He is not even cynical. He is practical. He believes in messages, in public speaking—which he does very well—and in action of which he is an organizer. The general represents a distinctly active and forward movement in education. About the university he is one of those uncomfortable men who believe in educational democracy.

Once upon a time the School of Practical Science, which grew into the Faculty of Applied Science, was a very ugly red tail to a big grey dog. It was in the '90's when that original science factory was put up. Since when the Physics Department has moved over into a building of its own and the old S.P.S. has long ago taken up its H.Q. in the Mining and Engineering Building that hides the old S.P.S. from the street. For almost a generation after it was started the S.P.S. was regarded as a sort of University Kitchen Department. The kitchen is now bigger than the old drawing-room. The Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering has become the tail that some day, with men like Mitchell at the head of it, may wag the dog. There is money in applied science and Mitchell knew it when he hung out his first shingle at Niagara Falls, Ont., where he became "City Engineer" of the Canadian town for seven years, though he extended his practice out into Ontario; which was just previous to the time when Adam Beck began to hitch Ontario up to the falls. Right in this big era of electrical development Mitchell was assistant engineer in the construction of the Ontario Power Co.'s works at the Falls, now a part of the huge Hydro Electric, and was afterwards made consulting engineer for the O.P.C.

Eight years before the war he visited France, Switzerland, Italy, Austria and Germany. When he came back to Canada he settled in Toronto with his brother. Here, in the Hydro's biggest power-consumption centre, he extended his practice all over Canada as engineer of big power developments, hydraulic and electrical.

But it is a satisfaction to record that as far back as 1899 he took an active interest in military affairs. He mentions that he was always interested in public service. For twelve years he was in the University Senate, also on the Board of Governors.

Be sure this Irish-Scotch Canadian was among the first of those who enlisted for public service in the great war. In fact he offered himself five days before war was declared by Britain. On August 22, 1914, he left Toronto, home and practice, and saw none of them again till June, 1919.

He was then general staff officer, third grade for First Canadian Contingent; went to France in February, 1915, with rank of major, active service at Ypres, Festubert and Givenchy; and promoted to rank of lieutenant-colonel with the French Legion d'Honneur. In September, 1915, he took charge of the Intelligence Service of the entire Canadian Corps. In 1916 he served with the Canadians at St. Eloi and Sanctuary Wood and later at the Somme; won the D.S.O. and two M.I.D.'s. In October, 1916, somebody wanted him—higher up. It was Gen. Plumer; who made him general staff officer, 1st grade, in the 2nd Imperial Army—the first Canadian to get this distinction. For what? Intelligence, of which he had had full charge in the second army. In 1917 Mitchell was in nine engagements of the 2nd Army, whose wires and wirelesses and signal corps and despatch riders were all under his immediate control; and during that year he got the C.M.G., the Belgian decorations and two M.I.D.'s. After Passchendaele, and when the Caporetto debacle had almost wiped Italy off the war map, Mitchell was sent over to Italy with Plumer's army. More intelligence. The Canadian's system worked on the Piave as it had on the Somme; all through the anxious winter of 1917-18 and afterwards when Plumer went back to France without Mitchell, who afterwards pushed his system over the whole of Italy—even up the Vatican—and out to Egypt, Salonika, Palestine, and Mesopotamia. In 1918 Mitchell was made a C.B., got two decorations from Italy and two more M.I.D.'s, and was made brigadier-general. In January, 1919, two months after the armistice was signed he went back to England, to a post in the War Office until June, 1919, when he came back to Canada—and the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

This is a pretty swift engineering story. But, after all, it only illustrates what many a Canadian can do if he has enough sense to stick to its own country.—The Canadian Courier.

Too Much For the Cabs.

One afternoon Signor Lablache, the celebrated basso, a man of enormous proportions, on leaving Covent Garden theater after rehearsal found that his carriage had not arrived, so he sent for a four wheeler. Into this, after a strenuous effort, he managed to squeeze his massive body, to find himself seated on the edge of the smaller seat, a truly uncomfortable position which it was imperative at once to change. As he struggled to his feet in his attempt to do so the bottom of the vehicle gave way, and the artist found himself standing in the road. Help, however, was at hand, and he was released with no small difficulty from his ridiculous dilemma.

A similar adventure befell the brothers Pope—one a doctor, the other the well known Q. C.—who between them weighed over forty stone, when crossing Waterloo bridge in a four wheeled cab. How it happened is uncertain, but about the center of the bridge the floor of the cab collapsed, and for the next thirty yards two pairs of sturdy legs, straining to keep pace with the horse's mild amble, was a spectacle for unrestrained mirth. Cabby soon pulled up, and eager hands quickly extricated the obese and exhausted brothers.—London Tit-Bits.

No Fruit Without Bees.

If there were no bees, fruit trees and other plants could not produce any fruit. Apple, plum, cucumber, clover, alsike, alfalfa are fertilized by bees. Honey is the bait with which the bee is induced to perform this task. The colored, fragrant petals of the blossom are the advertising signboard telling the bee where the honey may be found. If the blossom is to set fruit the bee with its fuzzy body must brush some of the yellow dust called pollen from the male organs or anthers at the bottom of the blossom, deposit this pollen on the female organ called the stigma. The blossoms are so arranged that to get at the honey the bee must first brush, with its pollen covered body against the stigma, thus completing the pollination. As soon as it has performed this duty it may draw a check for the work in the form of the blossom. While drawing this pay the bee is involuntarily covered with pollen again and made ready to proceed to the next blossom and repeat the process.—Francis Jaeger.

Legend of the Peacock's Feathers.

The ill fortune said to fall upon the owners of peacocks and the wearers of peacock feathers is accounted for by an oriental legend.

The story runs after this fashion: When God created the peacock the seven deadly sins were stirred with bitter jealousy and complained loudly that the bird should be more beautiful than they.

"You are quite right," the Creator answered. "I have been unjust, for I have already given you too much. You should be as black as the night that conceals you." Whereupon he plucked out the green eye of jealousy, the yellow eye of envy and the red eye of murder and added them to the bird's feathers. So the blind sins are ever pursuing the bird to regain their eyes, and that is the reason that when men or women adorn themselves with the feathers misfortune dogs their footsteps.

Eyeglass Lenses.

All lenses used in making eyeglasses by manufacturers in this country are formed from imported glass, which is secured principally from Germany. This glass is of texture and transparency so far above the products of American glass plants that the optical companies use it exclusively for their high grade work. Each blank is about two inches square and nearly one-eighth inch in thickness. In appearance it is not unlike an ordinary piece of plate glass—the edges are rough from the molds, and it has no magnifying properties. This is the work of the optical manufacturer, and it is for him to grind the glass and form it until it magnifies or refracts the object before it.—Columbus Dispatch.

ENGLAND'S FACE CHANGED.

One of the Effects of War and Worry.

To the question, "Have our faces altered?" your reply might be a scornful negative, but you would be wrong. Our faces have altered, says London Answers.

You cannot judge of the change by looking at those with whom you come in daily contact. But, if you had known a set of people pretty intimately, had been away for a few months and then returned, you would, with a hint of what to look for, observe the change at once.

Country folk who for two or three years have not been, say, to London, have noticed that people literally "look different," and a medical man, who not only makes his preliminary diagnosis by studying his patients' faces, but also makes a hobby of face study, corroborates the fact of the change.

People—town dwellers more particularly—have developed the "peering look." That came when streets were darkened. Several people out of ten, at least, have "grown" two little vertical lines on their foreheads, as most short-sighted folk generally do.

There is, too, among civilians, a stoop forward of the shoulders. That is the natural position one takes when moving cautiously in darkness. Four years of light restrictions has stereotyped it in thousands. Watch a crowd to-day and prove it! There is, too, what the medical expert calls the "anxious - listening - thinking" look. He says that 80 per cent. of the residents in a certain southeast seaside town—a muchly raided place during the war—have it. Why is only too apparent! When, night after night, anyone sits anxiously listening for sirens, maroons, guns and bomb explosions, inward feelings are bound to leave their outward marks.

The "thinking" look—war and its risks made us think—is that curious expression of the eyes which arises from the mental picturing of possibilities. It was very marked among fighting men.

Faces, too, are longer—not because of depressed spirits, but because rationing and the cutting off of so much that fattened faces — pastry, sweets and the like—thinned faces down. "Refined" might be the better word, possibly.

Mouths are grimmer and straighter. Just as the man or woman who has a hard fight to live gets that grim, straight lipped mouth, so, too, he or she who fights twice daily for a place in bus, tube or tram, gets it! Watch the next pushing crowd and see for yourself. And then look at your own face.

The antidote? The corrective? Smile! Smile at everything you can! Smiling makes lines, but smile lines cross out and cancel the other ones.

Sea Lions Hear Submarines.

In the late months of the war some wild stories were published to the effect that the British naval authorities were training sea lions to catch German submarines. Of course, this was ridiculous, but the story was based upon a fact, and that fact has only just been revealed.

It was at the recent meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, when Sir Charles Parsons, the president, delivered an address on Science in War and Peace, says the Detroit Free Press. In it he described the development of the binaural hydroplane, with which submarines are located by the sound they make. Early in the game it was discovered that the first forms of these instruments were useless when the vessel bearing them was in motion or when the sea was rough, because the noises made by the vessel's motion and by the waves drowned the noise of the submarines. This is where the sea lions came in.

Sir Richard Paget, the eminent biologist, made experiments to learn how far these interesting animals could hear under water and at what speed their directional hearing ceased. These proved that the directional hearing of the lions was good up to six knots an hour.

Dr. Arthur Keith informed the naval experimenters that whales' ears are too small to receive sound waves in the usual way, but that the animals heard under water by the transmission of sound waves through the bones of the head.

Now, the whale's organ of hearing resembles the hydrophone. So the design of this was changed, and those used in the last year of the war were hollow bodies in the form of fish or porpoises, made of celluloid or varnished canvas.

Buffalo Roam In Australia.

When Australians refer to their empty north, they do not always recall the fine herds of buffalo which roam in the northern territory. The buffalo has prospered greatly since the first animals were imported, and his hide and horns offer a fairly easy source of revenue. In the hot, wide territory over which the "mud buffalo" roams, it is not feasible to use him as a new source of food supply, and attempts at yarding have shown that the buffalo is a true Australian, as he resents being driven and expresses this resentment vigorously. It is stated that the mud buffalo has four stomachs and does not chew the

OBITUARY

JONH FRENCH.

The San Jose, Calif., Mercury Herald of February 14 publishes an account of the death in Santa Clara, Calif., on February 14th, of John French. Mr. French resided in Peterborough many years ago and worked at the William Hamilton factory as a young man. He went to California about thirty years ago, and had resided there ever since. His wife was a Miss Wilkison, of Marmora and Midland, Ontario. Mr. French was the son of Rev. John French, of Coldwater, Ont.

THE LATE FRANK SOLLITT.

The remains of the late Frank T. Sollitt, who died in Montreal last week, reached the city yesterday and the funeral was held from his late residence, 696 George street, at 2.30 this afternoon to Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. R. Pogue officiated. mourn the untimely passing of a morning the untimely passing of a popular young man and a good citizen are the widow, formerly Miss Adie Kennedy, of this city; Alexander, a son of 18 years, and Clara, the 16-year-old daughter. Besides these there are the parents of the deceased, Mr. and Mrs. James Sollitt, 543 Downie street; Archie Sollitt, a brother of Toronto, and Mrs. George S. Mattice, whose husband is principal of the King Edward School. The funeral today was held under Masonic auspices.

Mr. Thomas Kennedy, of Chicago, a brother of the widow, was here for the funeral.

MRS. WM. PAUL.

On the 29th February, 1920, there passed away at the homestead on the fourth line of Smith, an old and respected resident in the person of Margaret Young, relict of the late Wm. Paul. The deceased had reached within a few days of her eightieth birthday and had lived on the same farm for sixty years.

In her years of activity the late Mrs. Paul was a very helpful neighbor, gladly giving any assistance possible in cases of sickness and sharing in every way the public interests of the community. Many cares and sorrows came to her during her long life, but she bore up bravely till the death of her grandson in action. This blow seemed harder than all and in her declining years weighed heavily upon her.

Several months ago Mrs. Paul was seized with a stroke, slight but serious in its effect upon one at her age. Another stroke during the past week hastened the end.

Besides her sister, Mrs. Neil McDonald, and brother, Thomas Young, of Peterborough, the bereaved family are as follows: Wm. Thomas and Mabel, on the homestead, and Vincent, of Peterborough, and four grandchildren, who have lived with their grandparents for many years, Wm. Bell, Jennie Gilmour and Dawson Paul, also survive, and Vincent Bell, of Bratton, Sask. The husband passed away over two years ago.

MRS. ELIZA DALE.

Mrs. Eliza Dale, widow of the late Thomas Dale, fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday morning, Feb. 29th, 1920, at Nicholls Hospital, Peterborough, aged 62 years.

She had been a sufferer for many years but was remarkably bright and cheerful, and to the last professed her confidence in Christ as her personal saviour.

She leaves to mourn her loss one daughter, Mrs. F. N. Shearer, and her son-in-law, five brothers, Messrs. W. H. and S. Leach, of Fenella; B. and A. S. Leach, of Fort Worth, Texas, and Dr. G. C. Leach, of Hamilton, also her aged mother at Fenella.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday, at 2 p.m., from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. F. N. Shearer, 177 Rubidge street. The service will be conducted by Rev. F. E. Malott, B.A., B.D., pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, of which deceased was a member.

TIMOTHY WELSH.

A well-known and highly esteemed resident of the district passed away at an early hour this morning on his farm below Keene in the person of Mr. Timothy Welsh. Mr. Welsh had been ill for but a short time and up till the last it was not thought that fatal results were likely to result from his illness, although he was pretty well advanced in age. He was born at Otonabee about 76 years ago and was brought up and lived all his life on the farm where he died. He was looked upon in the district as being a very successful farmer and although he might have retired years ago, he preferred to till the soil as long as his age would permit him. Years ago he was known near and far as a great dealer in cattle, but in late years he had dropped this part of his business and confined his operations to farming itself. His wife pre-deceased him some years ago. He is survived by a large grown-up family.

The funeral will take place from his residence near Keene on Wednesday to the Keene Catholic Church where Rev. Father P. McGuire will officiate at a Requem High Mass and interment will then take place at St. Peter's Cemetery, Peterborough.

"MORAL COWARDICE KEEPS MOST PEOPLE OUT OF KINGDOM" SAYS REV. A. J. THOMAS

Large Congregations and Inspiring Messages Mark "Th Extra Day for God" at George Street Yesterday.

"Moral cowardice keeps most people out of the kingdom of God," said Rev. A. J. Thomas at inspirational services at George St. yesterday.

Large congregations and inspirational messages marked "The Extra Day of God" at George St. Church yesterday. The pastor was in charge of both services. In the morning, taking as his subject, "A Truth Which Everyone Needs to Know," he dealt with the love and care of God for the individual despite, the many problems and apparent inconsistencies in life such as poverty, sorrows, suffering, etc. God does care for the individual and the provision of salvation is the biggest evidence of this fact.

In the evening Mr. Thomas spoke on "The Man Who Was Near But Not Near Enough," taking as his text, Mark 12:34. Jesus was in the temple at Jerusalem, surrounded by his enemies, who challenged him but he confused them all. One scribe was impressed by Jesus' manner and in turn impressed Jesus by his sincerity. Jesus saw something in the man, saw that he was a sincere seeker after truth and had probably lived up to all the observances of his creed. Hence he address him, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

Jesus distinguishes between the one who is in the kingdom and the one who is out of it. Moral goodness, generosity, kindness, good deeds and nobility of character are fine but will never bring one into the kingdom of God. One must acknowledge and accept the Lord, Jesus Christ. There are multitudes of people who are living good moral lives who know about Jesus and agree that everyone should live the Christian life, but do not accept Him One step stands between them and they refuse to take it.

"Moral cowardice is keeping most of the people out of the kingdom," said Mr. Thomas. "The are afraid of the sneers of companions, of possible difficulties, they are not willing to suffer and take up their cross if need be. It is a solemn thing to realize that a soul may get near the kingdom but never get near enough. There is only one wise decision to resolve to enter immediately by accepting Jesus Christ as one's personal saviour."

CONVERTED RUSSIAN JEW PREACHED TWICE IN LOCAL PULPITS YESTERDAY

Mr. L. Joffe Was Heard at Knox Church in the Morning and at St. Andrews in the Evening.

Mr. Louis Joffe, the Colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who has been in the city in connection with that work for some time gave two excellent sermons yesterday; at Knox's in the morning and at St. Andrew's in the evening.

His morning theme was "the quality of Faith," pointing out that one of the great necessary qualifications for the Christian is the all embracing faith in God.

By faith we overcome the pangs of parting with our loved ones, because we know that they are merely asleep in Christ, and are under the protection of His loving wing. There is no danger of the faithful Christian drifting into spiritualism, because he does not need the endorsement of such men as Sir Oliver Lodge and Sir Canon Doyle, that we continue after we have thrown off our mortal coil. The Word of God, which tells us that we are eternal beings is all sufficient. By faith do we conquer all obstacles in our daily lives, and it is faith that makes us smile even though our portion be a cross. Doubt leads to confusion, unhappiness and misery, rather do you crucify the Master in your heart by faithlessness.

The preacher here gave an illustration of an automobile. All cars and all makes come under the category of automobile, not because of their eternal varnish of luxurious upholstery. They are motor cars because they have an engine. You take out the engine of the most expensive car and it ceases to be a motor car. Now what gives the motor power to the engine. There are three necessary indisposable qualifications: good ignition, good combustion and good compression. There are three necessary qualifications for the Christian heart to make the Christian go heavenwards faith, hope and love.

Mr. Joffe hopes to be able to deliver his other two sermons in some church in the city on Hope and Love. He concluded by saying that it does not matter if a man does not know even a word of the Bible, if he possessed faith, hope and love, he was a Christian.

Even though a man knew the Bible by heart and never missed attending church in his life, if he lacks those qualifications, he would not be a Christian; he would be the beautiful upholstered limousine and not a motor car.

The sermon was preceded by a beautiful Russian story which was very much enjoyed by the little ones as well as the grown-ups.

In the afternoon Mr. Joffe addressed the Sunday School classes pointing out many passages of the New Testament, as viewed in the light of Hebrew traditions and history. The young people were delighted with that address. Evidently the preacher was much taken up by the number of returned men who graced the church by their presence. He told the girls that when they are about to get married to try and marry exsoldiers because when they get tired of washing and scrubbing, all they have to do is to put a hand on their husband's shoulder and say: "John, you are on fatigue today, and he'll know all about it."

At St. Andrew's.

In the evening Mr. Joffe spoke at St. Andrew's to a very large congregation on "Christ or Chaos," which was a sequence, as he pointed out, to his lecture of last Monday at St. Paul's on "The Fall of Russia." He gave a brief resume of his utterances of last Monday night, showing the diseased state of the body politic throughout the world, concluding by saying that the only remedy for this distracted world, bleeding from a thousand wounds, which were inflicted by greed, avarice, darkness, selfishness and faithlessness, is the Light of the World, Jesus Christ. He complimented the choir on the wonderful rendition of the music, saying that "God knows I am no flatterer, but this music is certainly wonderful," and he used it as an illustration of Divine harmony. God is love and love is harmony. What will you have, Christ or Chaos?

A WILLIAM PYM.

A pioneer sailor of the inland waters and a veteran of the Grand Trunk Railway Co., passed away last week in the person of Mr. William Pym. Death occurred at his residence in Lindsay following a comparatively short illness.

The late William Pym, who was in his 72nd year, was for years a sailor on the inland lakes and was a resident of Port Hope. Later on he entered the services of the Grand Trunk and worked himself up to the position of an engineer, and in later years he had charge of the run to Haliburton for the G.T.R. Quitting the Grand Trunk system he settled down to a retired life in Peterborough, but shortly afterwards purchased the Daly Hotel in Lindsay (now the Elsmere) and with his brother conducted a hostelry for a number of years. A few years ago he disposed of the business to Mr James Darch, and since had lived retired.

He was a member of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, and a member of St. Paul's Church. Left to mourn his loss is his devoted and loving wife as well as one sister, Mrs Rowden, of Port Hope.

The funeral left the family home this morning, and the remains conveyed by G.T.R. to Port Hope, where interment will take place tomorrow

REV. FATHER MURTAGH.

Rev. Father Murtagh, parish priest of Marmora, died at his residence in that town on Saturday afternoon after a lingering illness. Father Murtagh had been ailing for some time but lately grippe made his illness more serious, and he grew worse until the end came on Saturday. He had been parish priest at Marmora for a number of years, and had accomplished much work, placing the parish in a very favorable position financially. Since he first went to Marmora, Father Murtagh built a church and house and a new separate school also has been erected. He had a kindly disposition, which made him liked by all who came in contact with him. Arrangements for the funeral have not been definitely settled yet, but it is thought that it will take place on Wednesday.

WOMEN'S ART ASSOCIATION

The large number of members of the Women's Art Association and their friends who braved the storm of Saturday afternoon last, felt amply rewarded in listening to the very interesting and attractive program which had been arranged by Mrs. W. H. Hill. The vocal selections of the three soloists of the afternoon, Miss Armstrong and Messrs. Carlisle and Melton were most delightful while Miss Elliott's instrumental solo was very pleasing indeed. Perhaps especial mention might be made of Dr. Park's violin selection, which was so much appreciated by all present. The program was as follows:

Vocal Solo: "Down the Vale," Mr. Carlisle.
Piano Solo: "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso in E" Miss Elliott.
Vocal Solo: "As I Went a Roaming," Miss Armstrong.
Vocal Solo: "The Cavalier," Mr. Melton.
Violin Solo: Dr. Park.
Vocal Solo: "Nancy Lee," Mr. Carlisle.
Accompanist: Miss Rannie.

Mrs. A. Mowat, in the absence of the President, presided. The hostesses at the tea hour were Mrs. A. Stevenson and Mrs. W. R. Morris.

IN MEMORIAM.

HUNTER—In loving memory of William L. Hunter, who died March 1, 1918.

Two years have passed, our hearts still sore,
As time goes by we miss him more.
His loving smile, his welcome face,
No one can fill his welcome place.
Forget him, no, we never will,
We loved him then, we love him still
We loved his eyes, no tongue could tell
How dear, how deeply, how very well
God loved him, too, and thought it best
To take him home with Him to rest.

: : AT THE GRAND : :

"A Night in Honolulu" proved to be an excellent drawing card at the Grand Opera House on Saturday night. It was a play in which the plot was of secondary importance to the humorous repartee and the scenic splendor with which it was shown. The climax of the play was a trifle obscure and much was left to the imagination of the audience who were more concerned with the wonderful portrayal of a volcano in erruption in the last scene than the ending of the story.

All the actors were stars in their particular places. In the second act the appearance of a Hawaiian guitar quartett was the occasion for loud applause and again and again they were encored rendering everything from the ridiculous to the sublime. Kalama, the Hawaiian dancing girl, completely won the admiration of the audience by her graceful dancing and her clever imitation of the native broken English.

Right through the play the audience was kept bubbling over with laughter.

The first act was represented as taking place on the lounge room of an American Hotel in Amania, Hawaii, and the second act showed the garden of Westeria. The scenery was particularly realistic, representing moonlight by the sea with the waves coming in to the shore.

Several attractions of an equally high-class have been booked for the Grand in the near future. On Thursday, March 4, Augustus Pitau Inc. are presenting Fiske O'Hara, one of the leading romantic actors of the present day in a new comedy, "Down Limerick Way," and tonight and on Tuesday and Wednesday, Gloria Swanson is appearing in a photo-drama, "Male and Female."

MEETINGS AT GOSPEL HALL

Interesting Discourse Delivered Last Night by Evangelist Harper

The opening meeting of the Harper campaign was a feast of good things. A large audience listened to an earnest appeal for acceptance of the Bible as the inspired authority on all matters concerning humanity.

Mr. Harper has a chart showing the two roads and two destinies. The chart is very large covering one half of the hall end. The speaker showed clearly that man by nature is outside of God's grace and needs to be born again before he can enjoy heavenly blessings. No education, culture or environment can change the heart, it must be done in God's way, by God's Word.

The address throughout was very solemn and heart searching. The meetings continue every night.

VETERANS' CLUB HOUSE HANDED TO MEMBERS FREE FROM DEBT

Building Committee Receive Vote of Thanks For Their Excellent Work in This Connection—Billets Have Been Already Found for Over Three Hundred Expected Delegates.

At last night's meeting of the G. W. V. A. the building committee handed the new building over to the membership free of all debt. This was accomplished by a consolidation of all the funds of the association. There had been an overdraft at the bank on the building fund and on which interest was being paid, but it was decided to liquidate his indebtedness from the general fund, and also to incorporate the relief fund in the general fund, thus making only one fund, instead of three as formerly.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the building committee for their work in connection with the building, which was responded to by Comrade R. E. Layfield, chairman of the committee.

Billets for Delegates.

Secretary Whatley reported that the billeting arrangements for the delegates to the convention were proceeding very well, accommodation for some three hundred men having been promised already, and he did not anticipate any great difficulty in placing the remainder.

Mr. Whatley also informed the meeting that the City Council had made a grant of $1000 to help defray the expenses of entertaining the delegates while here. They would be given a theatre party at the Grand Opera House on the evening of the 18th and a civic banquet on the following evening. Cars have been provided to convey the delegates from the trains to their billets, and in every way the organisation for the convention is practically complete.

Dominion Convention.

At a previous meeting delegates had been chosen to represent Peterborough branch at the Dominion convention in Montreal this month, but owing to a new ruling by the Dominion Command, only two were allowed. Considerable discussion arose as to sending more than one delegate, as it was thought that sending two would only mean unnecessary expense. The voting at these conventions is on a per capita basis, and one delegate could vote for the branch as well as two. Comrade H. B. Johnston was appointed to represent Peterborough at the convention in Montreal.

A discussion arose regarding the amount of the monthly dues, some of the members considering that they were too high. The executive was instructed to go into the matter thoroughly and at the next meeting recommend the minimum amount that could be charged as dues, taking into consideration all the possible expenditures for the year.

The meeting adjourned about 10 o'clock, with the singing of the National Anthem.

ENGINEERS MOURN CHAIRMAN

Weekly Meeting Postponed on Account of Death of G. Reid Munro.

Owing to the death of G. Reid Munro, president of the Engineering Institute, Peterborough Branch, the meeting of that organization advertised for Thursday evening has been postponed. Mr. John Murphy, electric engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, was expected to deliver an address on "Ice." This program will likely be carried out one week later.

THE HOLLAND INQUEST.

Has Been Adjourned for Week by Coroner Greer.

After viewing the body of Charles Holland, the unfortunate victim of the elevator accident yesterday, the inquest called by Coroner Greer was adjourned for one week. In the meantime the jury visited the scene of the accident his morning and inspected the elevator and its surroundings. The inquest will be held on Monday next at Lane & Eano's undertaking parlors.

FLU PATIENT DELIRIOUS

Victim of Influenza Imagines Plots to Bomb Buildings

Yesterday afternoon a youth entered the Bonner Worth Mills and informed the superintendent that he was a secret service man and advised them to take care as electric wires had been fixed to a charge to blow up the building that night. Later in the day the same youth appeared at the residence of W. G. Morrow to tell him that the Peterborough Lock Works was to be blown up. "You had better look out,' he said. "I am all loaded up with revolvers. At the same time he pointed to his pockets which were bulging out.

The police were informed of the affair and when they arrived the youth became hysterical. This morning, however, he had quited down and appeared to be quite normal. It developed that he had just recovered from a serious attack of the "Flu" and his condition yesterday was put down to a nervous attack resulting from his run-down condition. In view of these facts no action was taken by the police and he was allowed to go home.

AGITATION IN CITY COUNCIL TO TRY FREE MARKET FOR THE PRESENT YEAR

A movement has developed in Council for a free market.

Ald. Gordon raised this proposition, followed strongly by Ald. Gainey.

Lastnight Ald. Jones and Whitehouse moved that the sale of market tolls be advertised as usual.

Ald. Gordon: "What about a free market?"

Ald. Gainey here took the floor and urged that a free market be tried out this year. "We might as well," he said, "for all we get for the tolls —$600 or $700."

Ald. Hamilton: "What good would it do? Farmers would not sell any cheaper."

Ald. Jones could not see any reason for a free market. "Besides, we need the money," he said.

Ald. Whitehouse enquired of Ald. Gainey his reason for his proposition.

Ald. Gainey: "A free market would attract more buyers and sellers. Some farmers now sell to dealers instead of going on to the market." He proposed that the city heat the market building and keep it clean and place some at the free disposal of ratepayers and sellers alike; and that the market scales should be free also.

Some section of Council objected to the expense of maintenance

Hamilton was cited as having boosted its market on the "free" principle.

Ald. Gainey moved that the tolls be not advertised, but that the Property Committee work out some scheme for a free market.

It was pointed out by Ald. Jones that the present market tolls agreement expired March 1st and immediate action one way or the other is necessary.

Ald. Gordon and Hamilton moved that the sale of the market tolls be advertised, and that in the meantime the Property Committee can plan for a free market and report. Carried.

Ald. Gainey and Morrison moved that the clerk write for information as to how free markets work elsewhere. This carried.

WILL SPEND ONE MILLION IN CANADIAN GENERAL BUILDINGS AND EQUIPMENT

C. G. E Promises Huge Expansion if Their Fixed Assessment By-Law is Carried—Plans and Estimates are Ready for Commencement of Operations—City Council in Regular Session.

The city fathers met in regular monthly session last night and kept going till 20 minutes to 12.

There were in attendance Mayor A. A. McIntyre, Aldermen J. J. Turner, Gordon, Jones, Crowe, Whitehouse, Copping, Morrison, Hamilton.

Statement of Roll.

Tax Collector W. G. Green submitted the statement of his roll as follows:

Amount on roll	$480,204.24
Total deposit	459,825.16
	$201,379.08
Deposited in Feb.	$3,941.73

More Grants.

Walter Dyer, secretary G. W. V. A. band, wrote asking a grant of $600 this year in consideration of which the band would give three concerts in the parks during the summer. The band would average 25 to 30 men. This went to the Finance Committee.

Adjutant Buntin wrote asking a grant of $500 for the Temple Band. This went to the Parks Committee.

Joseph Wearing wrote for the Children's Aid Society, asking a grant of at least $600. Referred to the Finance.

The Peterborough Health Association wrote asking a grant of $1,000 for this year. This went to the Finance Committee.

And Why Not?

The Mayor of Lindsay forwarded a resolution of Lindsay's Town Council petitioning the Legislature that as practically all the cost of maintenance of police and the police court is borne by a muncipality all the fines imposed should go to the municipality and none whatever to the Ontario Government as now. Lindsay's Council asked this city's co-operation in this connection. This was sent to the Legal Committee.

The local Board of Police Commissioners asked Council's opinion on their proposition to establish a pension fund for the police. This would necessitate an annual grant of $500 a year. Referred to Committee of the Whole.

To Force Sewer Connection.

The local Board of Health enclosed a resolution recommending that all houses fronting on sewers be forced to make connections where practical. And in cases where advisable that cost of same be paid in installments included on the tax bill. Board of Works.

The Trades and Labor Council wrote asking a grant of $250 for Labor Day. This was sent to the Finance Committee.

Cost of Gas.

The Hydro-Electric Commission wrote explaining that the increase of 25c the cubic feet of gas is necessary simply to meet fixed charges and expenses. The communication explained that the cost of coal and gas oil is mounting, and the commission find it impossible to operate the local gas plant without the increase of 25c. Received.

Will Spend a Million.

Senator Nicholls, president of the C. G. E. Company, wrote assuring Council that in event of the company's bylaw to fixing this company's assessment at $150,000, plans for additional buildings and equipment have been prepared at an estimated expenditure of one million dollars.

Secretary H. Lucas of the local poultry association, in a communication, asked a substantial grant this year as usual. Referred to the Finance Committee.

Plumbing Report.

W. Stevens, secretary wrote that the Trades and Labor Council asks that the plumbing bylaw be rigidly enforced, and insisting that the report on this city's plumbing by a Toronto inspector be published. The Trades Council, Mr. Stevens wrote, cannot understand why the report has not been given publicity and hoped such a live issue would not be shelved. This was sent to the Property Committee.

Sunday Street Cars.

Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., and members of the Cabinet of the Legislature of Ontario wrote acknowledging Council's petition that cities of 20,000 be allowed to take a vote on the question of Sunday street cars, and in some cases expressing sympathy with Council's petition.

Electric Inspector.

The Hydro-Electric Commission wrote that Major Clifton had been appointed inspector of electric work in this city because he is an experienced electrician. He is also a returned soldier. The commission would not be adverse to appointing a local man were an expert and experienced man available. Referred to the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

Changing Names.

Ald. Copping fathered a bylaw to change the names of Babb's Lane to Leslie Avenue and Cedar street to Murray street. This measure passed its three readings.

Protestant Home.

Ald. Jones fathered a bylaw authorizing the City Trust to convey to the Protestant Home a portion of the old Hilliard property on which to erect a caretaker's house, allowing of garden. The bylaw passed Council.

Suit Threatened.

J. E. Goodwill wrote for H. P. Wennedy that the latter gentleman would look to the city for damages were the sewage disposal plant constructed on the Wilson property, across the river from the end of Park street. Mr. Kennedy points out that some houses are on his property adjoining the Wilson land, that the property is planned for others, and that eventually the district would be well within the city's residential section. But for this purpose it would be totally ruined by the proposed sewage plant. Received.

City Arbitrator.

E. H. D. Hall was appointed the city's arbitrator to act with an arbitrator for the county in adjusting the costs of administration of justice between the two corporations.

Important Committee.

Ald. Gordon thought it would be advisable for Engineer Parsons to attend meetings of the Parks Committee, to which are and will be sent very important issues. This was agreed to.

City Development.

Ald. Turner was anxious that the City's Development Commission's application for a grant of $1,500 for an aeroplane map of Peterborough should not be shelved entirely, and it was sent back to the Parks Committee for consideration.

Council agreed, however, that the map of the city in the engineer's office is good enough for all topographical purposes.

Needed Highway.

W. H. Bradburn spoke for a deputation from the local Automobile Association, pointing out that a deputation would wait on the Hon. Mr. Biggs, Minister of Highways, in Toronto next Friday in support of a provincial highway from Port Hope to Peterborough and on to the Kawartha Lakes. The association hoped for three or four members of the Council to accompany that deputation. This request will be complied with.

Winter Fair.

President Roland Denne of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Board asked that some members of the Council join a deputation from his board on Friday to interview the Hon. Mr. Doherty, Minister of Agriculture, in the hope of securing a substantial grant toward a winter fair in Peterborough. This request will be acceeded to.

Daylight Saving.

Ald. Turner suggested that it might be opportune to take a vote of the people on the question of daylight saving for this summer at the same time as the C. G. E. bylaw is submitted.

Council seemed indifferent as a whole to this question, and the question was passed by without action.

The Bridge.

Ald. Gainey asked Ald. Hamilton as to progress on the new bridge.

Ald. Hamilton replied by quoting the report of Chief Engineer Middlemist of the Railways and Munici-

RETAILERS RAISE SUGAR PRICE TO EIGHTEEN CENTS

INCREASE DUE TO BOOST BY REFINERIES— CALL IT HOLD UP

Simultaneously with the announcement that the refineries had advanced the price of sugar $1 and $2 a hundred, the retail price of sugar in Peterborough rose yesterday to 18 cents, although one or two retailers are only charging 17 cents as yet. One grocer stated this morning that he was forced to pay the new price at the wholesale house as early as Saturday morning, and that at 17 cents he was not making a quarter of a cent a pound.

Retailers throughout the city are up in arms at what they term an unwarranted increase, and some of them go so far as to call it a deliberate "hold-up" on the part of the refiners. One retailer put the situation pretty clearly to a Review reporter this morning. He pointed out that Willit and Gray, who were the most reliable sugar reporting firms on the market, had sent out reports to their clients in the past few weeks showing that the Cuban sugar crop was enormous this year, and in spite of strikes a large quantity of this sugar was reaching New York. Raw sugar had dropped in the past three weeks from a fraction over 12 cents a pound to a fraction over 9 cents, or the equivalent of $3 a hundred. He pointed out that it was when raw sugar was $12 that the refineries had petitioned the Board of Commerce for an increase in prices, which demand had been refused, and since that time the above drop in the cost of raw sugar had taken place. In view of these facts he thought that to raise the price of sugar was nothing short of a hold-up, and when the facts became known generally there would be trouble in store for the refineries. He stated that one of the large refineries in Montreal had been closed for some time for no reason, and thought that the object of closing down was to create an artificial shortage in sugar to make their increases appear justified.

DRYS ASK PREMIER FOR FURTHER LEGISLATURE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 2.—Backed up by a large delegation of prohibitionists, the Ontario Referendum Committee this afternoon waited on Premier Drury and members of the Ontario Cabinet and presented the memorial arranged for on January 29th asking the Ontario Government to make application to the Federal Government for the taking of a plebiscite on the question of prohibiting entirely the importation into this province of spirituous liquors for beverage purposes. It is understood that the Ontario Government is in accord with the spirit of this memorial and will bring forward at the coming session of the Legislature necessary legislation to this end.

MR. TOOMS ADDRESSED MEAT CUTTERS UNION

GAVE A TALK ON ECONOMICS AT MEETING OF WORKERS LAST NIGHT

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, A. F. of L. Local No. 604, held their regular meeting last night at Labor Hall. The members of the organization turned out strong and enthusiastically welcomed Mr. Thos. Tooms, M.L.A., who gave a most interesting address on Economics. Mr. J. T. Mallen, business agent of the local, made a stirring appeal to the members on behalf of the retail butchers of the city, who have applied for the union shop card.

D. Reid, for twenty-five years foreman at the Hamilton cemetery, is dead.

CITY COUNCIL AT SIXES AND SEVENS RE-EXHIBITION GRANT

Attempt to Swell Grant to $5000 Results in Question Going Back to Committee—Grants to Playgrounds, G.W.V.A., L.O.L. Fixed by Bylaw

The question of a grant from the city to the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Board was sent back last night by Council to its Finance Committee, the city fathers being at sixes and sevens on just how much the board shall get. And the way it happened is as follows:

Finance Committee Chairman Ald. Turner submitted his report recommending a grant of $3,000, an increase of $1,000 from that of last year. But he spoke strongly for increasing the grant to the $5,000 asked for by the Exhibition Board, using the same arguments he presented to his committee last week. As a consequence of his persuasive oratory, a motion passed Council in favor of a $5,000 grant on a tie vote with the Mayor, however, breaking the tie by casting his vote for a $5,000 grant.

Alderman Hamilton and Phelan were not in their seats.

Later on in Council a bylaw came up authorizing payment of this grant, together with other grants as follows: To the G.W.V.A. $1,000, to the Playgrounds Association $1,000, to the District Orange Lodge for July 12th $400, to the Children's Hospital in Toronto $25.

By this time Ald. Hamilton had arrived on the scene, and for the second reading of the bylaw was went into the chair by His Worship. Then the Labor faction, supported by Ald. Gordon, opposed the proposed increase of the exhibition's grant to $5,000, and Ald. J. J. Turner and Whitehouse moved that that amount be adhered to.

Ald. Gordon said this year will be a particularly difficult one to finance, considering the tax rate and the city's liabilities, and he thought the Exhibition Board could manage with a $3,000 grant. In 1921 and 1922 and onward fixed assessments and exemptions would expire, leaving the city in a better position to deal with the exhibition more generously. He was inclined to a co-operative scheme for conducting the exhibition by which the city would be joint partner with the Exhibition Board, both as to assets and liabilities.

Ald. Crowe was in accord with these views.

Ald. Turner and Whitehouse moved that the bylaw remain as amended by increasing the grant to $5,000.

The following division resulted:

Yeas—Ald. ordon, Crowe, Morrison, Gainey.

Nays—Ald. Copping, Whitehouse, Jones, Mayor McIntyre, Turner.

Chairman Ald. Hamilton cast his vote for the nays and the motion was lost.

Ald. Gordon and Crowe moved in amendment that the grand stand as read in the report—$3,000.

This was lost on the same division, the yeas and nays being taken in each case.

Ald. Turner and Whitehouse put up a strong bid for the $5,000.

Ald. Turner said the money is needed for permanent buildings especially one for manufacturers' exhibits. A deputation is going to wait on the Minister of Agriculture in support of a grant toward a winter fair, and the first question he'll ask will be, "What has the city contributed?" and the grant from the Government will be based more or less on the city's action.

Ald. Gordon pointed out that a manufacturers' building was not needed for a winter fair and Ald. Turner replied that the city's grant would go to boost exhibition purposes generally.

Ald. Whitehouse declared the exhibition a live asset to the city, on the encouragement from and co-operation of which the exhibition's growth depended very largely as evidenced in even smaller towns.

The grant for the exhibition was eliminated from the bylaw, which then carried, as amended, leaving the other grants fixed as submitted.

On motion of Ald. Gainey and Morrison, the question of a grant for the exhibition went back to the committee of the whole Council.

BARBERS RAISE PRICES

FIFTY CENTS FOR HAIR CUT, TWENTY CENTS FOR SHAVE

Starting with today, there will be no change out of half a dollar when you get your hair cut, and a shave will leave one solitary nickel remaining out of a quarter. The new prices in the local barber shops took effect today after much discussion between the master barbers and the journeymen. It was intended to shorten the hours considerably at the same time, but friction arose with regard to this point, and for the present the same hours as before will prevail. It is predicted, however, that in the course of a few days the shorter hours will become general in the city.

Welland Liberals will hold a convention Wednesday.

Building permits in Vancouver for 1920, will amount to $13,000,000.

Winnipeg electrical workers are asking $1 an hour.

ALFRED McDONALD LUMBER COMPANY ENCOURAGED TO DEVELOP INDUSTRY

A bylaw to provide for conveying to the Alfred McDonald Lumber Co. a portion of Crescent street for factory extension purposes passed Council last night. The agreement is that the company shall pay $500 for a deed of this piece of street.

Ald. Hamilton thought a lease would answer the company's purpose as the buildings are more or less of a temporary nature, and the time, he thought, would come when the company would not need to use them.

Mr. Dick, manager of the company, replied that the building recently erected is on a foundation of a solid substantial nature. "We require," he said, "the portion of street in question for building purposes; insurance writers would not allow us to pile lumber on the land." Mr. Dick could foresee needing the whole block in the future to take care of this growing business. He did not know of a better site in Ontario for a planing mill and sash and door factory and the erection of better buildings is contemplated, for, he said, the plant must be developed.

Ald. Crowe would not object to the deeding of this land if provision were inserted in the bylaw that the land must always be maintained for manufacturing purposes.

Ald. Gainey spoke strongly in favor of the bylaw, and said streets had been closed before this for less worthy purposes. He believed in the future of this local industry, which, he declared, entitled to encouragement in its expansion plans. He also would not be surprised were the Alfred McDonald Lumber Co. to develop into an industry of more importance even than the Canadian Aladdin Co., which were deeded land to the value of $10,000.

Ald. Turner fell in line with Ald. Crowe's views, and moved, seconded by Ald. Crowe, that a clause be embodied in the bylaw providing that in case the land in question cease to be used for manufacturing purposes within 15 years, then that land revert to the city, the company to be repaid their purchase price of $500.

Ald. Gordon here said that while not altogether in favor of deeding this land to the company, still he thought that were the company to operate 10 years continuously, giving employment to men, he thought Council's desire to encourage employment would be fully met.

The ten years' term was here approved of, Ald. Turner's motion carried, and the bylaw passed through its three readings.

TO BEAT OLD COL. HI COST.

LITTLE BY LITTLE, one after another, Detroit solves her problems, says the News of that city. Sometimes these solutions come after years of patient plodding, as, for instance, the solution of the street car problem this spring, and sometimes they come in a flash of inspiration.

Under the latter form of solution is to be classed the proposal to cut the high cost of living for the teachers by offering them extra work in other fields after school hours. As everyone will readily admit, there is no reason why this plan should be limited to the teachers. It may be applied to anyone in any kind of work who finds it difficult to make both ends meet. If the teacher can do a little office work to pay for the pair of shoes she needs, then why couldn't the office girl do a little teaching to meet the arrears on her rent?

Policemen have complained of their low salaries. An eight-hour day leaves them free for a number of hours in which they could pick up a few extra dollars by shovelling snow or acting as floor-walkers in department stores. Night-watchmen should approve of this plan. By sleeping fast for a couple of hours in the morning they could be in good shape by nine or ten in the morning to qualify for a day shift in one of the automobile factories. Two jobs would net them a princely salary.

The thing has possibilities not apparent at first sight. It has long been recognized that persons in sedentary occupations, bank clerks, college professors and the like, do not get sufficient exercise. By putting them at work on such farms as they could reach within two hours after their day's work is done, we could assure them not only a tidy little increase in income, but a very healthful employment for twenty or thirty hours a week. It ought to be an easy matter to convince them that even on Sundays such work would be very restful.

Think of the lawns that go unmowed for six months of the year. Any number of lawyers and doctors could add to their income by pushing a lawn mower about for five or six hours a day. The complete solution of this problem will depend upon to what extent we can eliminate sleep, rest and recreation as human needs. But in the course of time we may even solve that problem. And when that time comes we shall smile defiantly at the H. C. of L.

THE GAMBLER'S CHANCE.

IN HIS ADDRESS in Parliament dealing with the speech from the throne, Hon. Mackenzie King urged that the House be dissolved and an early appeal made to the people. If Mr. King entertains any hope that in such an event the party which he leads would have a fighting chance, then he is giving the world a bright object lesson in optimism. In reality, Mr. King is simply willing to take a gambler's chance. If he has nothing to gain, he has certainly little to lose by a test of strength. The farmers and workingmen of the country are anxious for another election, as would appear from the reports sent out by their various organizations. This attitude is not hard to understand. They at least are flushed with recent triumphs and believe that they can repeat their success in a wider field. But the Liberal party has done nothing to regain any of the ground that they lost during the war. Their new leader certainly brings them nothing in prestige.

The next Dominion census will be taken in 1921, this to be followed by a redistribution of the constituencies. The representation from the West is likely to be increased, as the census will probably show growth of population in that section of the Dominion. It may be that a general election will be postponed until this work is completed. At all events, Mr. King's wisdom in seeking to provoke a contest for which his party is in no sense prepared, is open to question.

COMPENSATION FOR THE INNOCENT DEFENDANT.

DOWN IN MISSOURI, where a national characteristic is an insistence to be shown things, the good people themselves very often establish an illuminating example that is worthy of emulation by the rest of the world. A recent incident is the voting by the Legislature of that State of $5000 by way of compensation to a man who had been kept in prison for twenty-six years on a charge which afterwards turned out to be without foundation.

This man had a remarkable history. He was found guilty of the murder of a neighbor and sentenced to death. On the day set for execution the hangman bungled the job, the noose slipped and the man fell through when the trap was sprung, unhurt. His lawyer won a contention that he could not twice be punished for the same offence, and his sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. The case attracted nation-wide attention, and was the issue in more than one State election in Missouri.

Then another man on his death-bed confessed the murder for which the other was being punished, and the latter was released, the Legislature voting him the sum mentioned. A brother of the murdered man was a member of the Legislature and voted for the grant.

Compensating men who have been the victism of miscarriage of justice has never become an established custom in any country. Men have been released from jail with their innocence established, after a long period of confinement, and left to face a world with which they are no longer in touch, without money or friends, and handicapped by the stigma that invariably attaches itself to even an unjustifiable arrest or prison term.

But there are other, even if they are lesser, hitches in the working of the machinery of the criminal law. Men are not infrequently arrested on charges that fall through when aired in open court. Even if such defendants be honorably acquitted by the magistrate or judge, such acquittal does not either repair their injured feelings or make good the actual damage which they will suffer in reputation as a result of the charge. The newspapers have given the case the widest publicity i the meantime. The vast jury, the public, are apt to reach a verdict not entirely without prejudice. Inestimable damage is likely to be done in some quarters, especially to professional men who find themselves in such unenviable positions.

So long as the criminal law is operated will there be arrests that eventually prove unwarranted. Unless the officers of the law are allowed some latitude in this regard half at least of the really guilty would be likely to escape. The police cannot be expected to correctly interpret the statutes which it is their duty to enforce. That is a responsibility that is up to the judiciary. Still, there should be some means devised for the protection of all defendants until their guilt has been established beyond all question.

BONE DRY PROHIBITION.

THE WETS have beaten the drys to it. Ontario for a time at least is under bone-dry prohibition. Either the wets have consumed all the visible supply or have cornered it and stored it in cellars. Anyway, victims of the flu complain that they are unable to secure any liquor from duly authorized sources. Those licensed to sell it are out of stock. Even the Government dispensaries have no more of the favorite brands. The Province is as dry as the Sahara itself.

AN EDUCATIONAL BLUNDER.

(Montreal Herald.)

We are beginning to realise that compulsory education has been a mistake in some particulars. It was adopted without any clear conception of what we were driving at. Up till quite lately education was very effectively performing the task of educating the children away from the necessary fundamental work of the world. Country boys were being trained away from country pursuits and city boys were being trained away from the trades. The world needs professional men, but it also needs manual workers.

WAR ROMANCE OF POET BLIGHTS HOME

Some time ago Lee Shippey, Missouri newspaper man, candidate poet for laureate of the state, wrote a poem, the burden of which was:

"We could make a home a dearer place
And life more perfect far,
If we strove more to be the folk
Our babies think we are."

Shortly after the poem was written and printed Shippey went to France, along with a couple of million more. He went in the capacity of a Y. M. C. A. worker and correspondent. He left behind him a wife and 10-year-old boy.

And while he was in France witnessing the world's greatest drama the wife and child stayed at home, the wife carrying on her husband's work as well as she could, the child visualizing his father as a hero in khaki, dreaming dreams of his father's nobility and valor and chivalry.

Meets Madelon Babin

Shippey's poem entitled "If We Could Only Be," was addressed to "Parents Only," It began:

"There is a poem I have read
And which is quoted far,
Advising boys to be the sort
Their mothers think they are.
But I would nobler be than that
And bear fame's oriflame,
If I could only be the man
My youngster thinks I am."

Shippey was in Paris when he met Madelon Babin. He lived at her home.

They met on a street car on All Day. Madelon was on her way, with her sister, Georgette, to a cemetery two miles outside Paris, to put flowers on the graves of soldier dead buri there. Shippey's destination was the same. He asked the way, and was told to follow the two girls with their arms full of flowers. So he followed them.

Tells Wife to Get Divorce

At home in Kansas City, the tear of Lee Shippey's wife on his poem s she read:

"I'd be the bravest man alive,
The stanchest ever born;
The greatest and most versatile
That could the world adorn;
And, if I chose, for doughtier,
In strife than any other,
And very near as good and wise
And lovable as mother."

Then Shippey came home. His wife was on the dock to meet him. At home the boy waited for his hero nd. To her frenzied and affectionate greeting Shippey replied:

"I love a little girl in Paris, I want to get a divorce so that I can marry her. Choose your own grounds Make them anything you desire."

Madelon in Kansas City

In Kansas City was Madelon. She had arrived in America without the knowledge of Mrs. Shippey.

Madelon is 22 years old, although she looks younger. Her hair is fair and curly, her eyes blue and her face sweet and gentle. With her is Georgette, her sister.

The French girl denied she came to Kansas City because it was the home of Shippey. She said she had other friends in this city and mentioned a local war correspondent.

Madelon is about to become a mother.

"But that is my private affair!" she says. "I do not wish that people should look at my life. I wish only to be let alone to go my way. As for Mr. Shippey, to me he has always been kind and good. I would not hurt him for worlds."

To his wife, Shippey gave as his reason for wanting a divorce the fact that he desired to give a name to the expected child.

The wife offered to take Madelon's child when it was born and to rear it, but she would not consent to a divorce.

Crushed and broken-hearted, she persuaded him, for the sake of their young son, to take up the threads of life again as if nothing had happened.

They returned to Kansas City. Then it was discovered Madelon was there and that Shippey, in fact, was maintaining two homes. Madelon had sigend a contract in France to teach school in Oregon. It is said Shippey has relatives in Oregon.

It was at this point that the case was brought to the attention of the Federal authorities by Miss Contance Woodson, sister of Mrs. Shippey. When the Federal officials took Madelon into custody Shippey was in the apartment with the girl. On the table in the sitting room was a copy of the magazine in which was printed Shippey's poem, and there was a pencil mark around the last verse:

"Ah parents, what are precepts all
When little children grow"
To learn we are not quite the sort
They thought they used to know
We could make home a perfect place
And life more perfect far
If we strove more to be the folk
Our babies think we are."

Son Wonders Why.

Warren Long, in charge of the bureau of immigration here, has held two hearings on the case and has sent recommendations to the bureau at Washington.

Mrs. Shippey, critically ill, is prostrated at her home here. Mr Long is waiting word from Washington before he divulges what he recommended.

And the son of Lee Shippey wonders why his father is not the man he thought he was.

No Side Lines For Detroit Teachers

That teachers would be violating their obligation to society were they to accept outside employment as a means of meeting the high cost of living was the opinion advanced at a meeting of the Detroit Teachers' Association in Central High School, Thursday afternoon.

The teachers were particularly wroth over the suggestion that they take advantage of the opportunity offered by the Michigan State Telephone Co. to earn extra money outside of school hours.

"This is the most disgusting proposition that has ever been put up to the profession," declared Arthur F. Lederle, chief attendance officer of the board of education. "I can not conceive of any conscientious teacher approving of it. For the last five years schools have been snatching from the grasping arms of industry an increasing number of boys and girls.

"Under the plan suggested by Miss Elizabeth Cleveland and the telephone company, teachers would be paid for urging girls to become telephone operators who might better be continuing their education," he said.

Urged Whole Time or None.

"The public cannot afford to have school teachers working day and night merely to obtain the bare necessities of life. It means less efficiency in the class room and a total disregard for all the obligations which they, as teachers must assume. It would be far better that the schools be closed than that the faculty give only a part of their time and energy," said Mr. Lederle.

"Teachers are not too proud to accept outside work, but they are too thoughtful, of the welfare of the children on who the very future of this nation depends. Despite Mayor Couzens' opinion, there re professional ethics that have been maintained as a safeguard against any influence threatening to destroy the institution of popular education."

Indignant over the Mayor's statement that the teachers were permitting a "mistaken professionalism" to stand in the way of earning extra money, members of the association appointed a committee to wait on the Mayor and voice their protest against his disposal of their request for a bonus of $50 back pay.

The committee also was authorized to co-operate with the Teachers' Salary Committee headed by David MacKenzie, principal of the Central High School, in a campaign to enlist public sentiment in the agitation for higher salaries.

1,000 Citizens Write.

Mr. MacKenzie reported that more than 1,000 letters had been sent to the Mayor and members of the Council by various citizens interested in the teachers' cause and that the committee was endeavoring to obtain a better representation of public opinion by requesting parents to send similar communications to the Council.

The High School Men's Council was to meet in the Board of Commerce this afternoon to consider a plan for abrogating their contracts in May that they may seek other employment until the new wage schedule goes into effect.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Princess Elizabeth of Rumania on her mother's side is connected with the British Royal family, for her mother, the Queen of Rumania, was Princess Marie, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Cobourg and Gotha, who in the British peerage was Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh, second son of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria. Princess Elizabeth's father is Ferdinand 1., King of Rumania, nephew of the late King Carol, who was succeeded by the nephew on October 11, 1914, the third month of the late war.

Princess Elizabeth is the second child of the Rumanian Royal Family. The first is Carol, the Crown Prince, born on October 15 1893; Princess Elizabeth was born on October 11, 1894. The other children of King Ferdinand are a son and two daughters.

Princess Elizabeth is said to possess many of the fine qualities of her mother—intelligence, studiousness, a high sense of duty, and great kindness of heart. And like her mother, she is greatly beloved by the Rumanian people.

It is well-known that the Queen of Rumania warmly sympathized with the Allies in their struggle to save Europe from German domination, and did much towards preventing her country from following Bulgaria. No doubt her daughter holds similar sentiment, and, like her mother, looks to Great Britain as the home of her ancestors.

HOW ONE VETERAN WAS WELCOMED TO CANADA

SALVATION ARMY OFFICER MET HIM IN TORONTO—FOUND HIM JOB.

Sergeant Watson has been a British soldier for 12 years. In 1909 he was stationed in Egypt. Later, he was transferred to England and went to France. Here is a copy of his letter which reached Toronto, February 20th, at the offices of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment:

"Sir,—By the time this letter reaches you I shall no doubt be on my way home to Canada. I am a regular soldier in the Imperial Army, just finishing my twelve years. Soon after I enlisted (in England) my mother and family came out to Canada while I was in Egypt. That was in 1909. I came home to England from India in 1914 to go to France. I was lucky enough to go out with the P. P. C. L. I. in December, 1914.

Off to Mesopotamia.

"I went from France to Mesopotamia and went from there through the Persian Hills (700 miles) to Baku in the Caucasus to fight with the Russians and Armenians against the Turco forces with the Colonials. We were driven back to Bagdad. They asked for volunteers to proceed to Siberia, just before the Armistice. I went with the British Military Mission. We, just recently, returned to England, having come through Canada.

"I am now being repatriated to Canada. I will be a stranger in a strange land as my mother died about a year ago. I should very much like somebody to meet me at Toronto. I am a single man and homeless. . . . . I am writing in advance so that you may be able to help me in regard to employment. . . . . I am one of the genuine lonely soldiers and will appreciate any help you can give me."

Briefly, this is the story of a British soldier to whom should be offered every opportunity to make a home. Realizing this, the letter was sent to the Citizen's Repatriation League. Dr. A. H. Abbott is its secretary. Other information in the letter told the name of the boat and its sailing date. The letter arrived just one day previous to the day Sergeant Watson was due in Toronto.

Met by Salvation Army.

"We telephoned the Salvation Army," said Dr. Abbott, when asked what steps were taken. "The letter came to us in the morning and the man was due at 5.40 that night. A Salvation Army Officer met the train. He took Sergeant Watson to the Salvation Army Hostel at King and Church streets. He made him comfortable and at home. Now, a job is being secured that will pay him from $5 to $7 a day."

"Does the Salvation Army help you like that often?" was asked.

"Help—that isn't the word," Dr. Abbott replied. "In the first place the Salvation Army is absolutely reliable and has made the promptness of our relief work a possibility. In fact, they figure so largely in our work that it is difficult to pick out specal cases. There is no service too big or none too little. They take hold of the job with a will and carry it through to a successful conclusion."

HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES

When paint brushes become hard oak them in hot vinegar for an hour.

Coffee grounds have no value whatever and should never be used a second time.

Hot pressed water color paper can be used instead of parchment for candle shades.

Prepared horse radish is not so good as that which you grate and prepare at home.

When spinach is served for dinned it is not necessary to have a salad. Greens of any sort yill take the place of the green salad.

The quickest and best way to dry lettuce for salads is to place the leaves in a dish towel after washing, gather the sides and corners in the hand so as to form a bag, step to the kitchen door and whirl it at arm's length three or four times.

If you starch the ironing board cover it will keep clean longer; the clothes will slip over it more easily, making it a real pleasure to iron. Then, too, the cover will launder much more easily.

LOCAL COMMITTEE FOR JEWISH RELIEF

PETERBOROUGH CITIZENS WHO WILL TAKE ACTIVE INTEREST IN THIS WORK.

Good progress is being made in Ontario with the organization for the appeal which shortly will be made for funds to releve the 800,000 Jews who are starving in Eastern Europe. Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, is honorary treasurer of the fund, and will receive all contributions. Such men as Sir Edmund Osler, Sir Mortimer Davis and others equally prominent, are taking an active part in the campaign.

In addition to the provincial, local committees are being organized to take charge of the advertising campaign and to make the direct appeal to their localities. The committee, which has consented to undertake this duty in Peterborough, consists of Judge E. C. S. Huycke, Louis Gordon, V. Eastwood, Ald. Copping, R. R. Hall, G. A. Gillespie, W. H. Bradburn, F. Whitehouse, R. Fenne, J. Wearing and W. G. Morrow.

SINN FEINERS SAID TO AGREE TO COMPROMISE

SUNDAY PAPER ANNOUNCES THEY WILL ACCEPT DOMINION HOME RULE MEASURE

London, March 1.—As a result of private conference, the Sinn Feiners have decided to accept a compromise settlement of the Irish question on a basis of Dominion home rule, the Sunday Pictorial announces.

Twenty-six out of the thirty-two counties will be included in this solution, leaving Ulster the six counties provided for in Premier Lloyd George's new bill.

There are two reasons for this change in the Sinn Fein attitude, the newspaper declares, namely:

"Recognition of the fact that murder and outrages never will lead to a proper solution.

"A report of the Proportional Representation Society of Ireland, showing that in the recent municipal elections the Sinn Fein polled 897,311 votes, and labor, which is mainly Republican, polled 57,626 out of the total number of votes cast, which was 322,244."

The Sinn Feiners themselves emphatically deny the Sunday Pictorial's story, saying they are not weakening in their demand for absolute independence and reparation from Britain.

The opponents of Premier Lloyd George's new bill, headed by ex-Premier Asquith, now back in Parliament, and Lord Robert Cecil, are expected to make a determined fight to force the Prime Minister into the acceptance of a Dominion measure.

PUT CREAM IN NOSE AND STOP CATARRH

Tells How To Open Clogged Nostrils and End Head-Colds.

You feel fine in a few moments. Your cold in head or catarrh will be gone. Your clogged nostrils will open. The air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more dullness, headache; no hawking, snuffling, mucous discharges or dryness; no struggling for breath at night.

Tell your druggist you want a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, and relief comes instantly.

It is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer needs. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable.

MEANS TO REMOVE JUDGE

An Amendment to Canada's Constitution To Be Sought.

Ottawa, March 1.—The Minister of Justice has given notice in the House of an address to the King for such amendment of the British North America Act as will provide for the removal of judges who are physically unable to continue their duties.

The proceedings would be to have an inquiry by a commission of one or more judges. At present a judge is removable only on an address by both Houses of Parliament and some misbehavior on the part of the judge would be predicated in such an action.

EASY MATTER NOW TO NAB MOONSHINERS

ILLICIT TRADE IN KENTUCKY IS FAR FROM THRILLING THESE DAYS

Covington, Ky., March 1.—Moonshining in Kentucky is far different from the swashbuckling, romantic feud-like pictures seen in the movies or described in popular fiction.

That is what John W. Menzies says about it. And Menzies ought to know as much about moonshining as anybody else. He is clerk of the federal court of the eastern district of Kentucky and listens to scores of such cases in any session of the six courts in his district.

Seldom do the "revenoors" and the mountaineers engage in spectacular rifle battles—so popular a generation ago, Menzies said. When a United States Marshal wants a "moonshiner" to appear in court to answer a charge he frequently goes to the phone and says something like this:

"Hello, Bill. The judge wants to see you at 9 o'clock tomorrow."

And Bill usually shows up.

There is plenty of moonshining going on now in the hills of eastern Kentucky, according to government reports. Wartime prohibition got it started anew, and now constitutional aridness has boosted the movement along. But the "whisky" makers are amateurs, who not only are easily caught but who produce a brand of drink that is poisonous even to the metal-lined stomachs of the mountaineers themselves.

"Who Shot" is the newest brand of moonshine liquor made. It has recently been added to the famous old "Mountain Dew" and "White Lightnin'". It is made from a recipe that includes potato peelings and practically everything else in the mountains that will produce alcohol.

And it is said to be "mighty pow'ful."

Prices of the brews have advanced like everything else. A gallon that used to bring 75 cents to $1.50 now brings $12 to $15.

Menzies said an average "run" of a "still" is from 9 to 12 gallons, and there is usually about a gallon for each person at a "still party." They drink all they can fresh from the "worm" and then carry the rest away in crock jars.

FIRE SATURDAY NIGHT

Hoover's Picture Frame Factory Was Slightly Damaged.

At about 11.50 on Saturday night the Fire Department was called out to a fire which broke out in Hoover's picture framing works, 136 Hunter street. The blaze had quite a start when the department arrived but a line of hose was laid and the fire was quenched without causing any damage to any other buildings than the one it started in. It is estimated that the damage will not be very serious. The cause of the fire could not be ascertained.

HER CASE SEEMED HOPELESS

But "Fruit-a-tives" Brought Health and Strength

29 St. Rose St., Montreal.

"I am writing you to tell you that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". This medicine relieved me when I had given up hope of ever being well.

I was a terrible sufferer from Dyspepsia—had suffered for years and nothing I took did me any good.

I read about "Fruit-a-tives" and tried them. After taking a few boxes, of this wonderful medicine made from fruit juices, I am now entirely well"

CARL MAYS DOES NOT CARE FOR TYRUS COBB

Pitcher Carl Mays knows somethng about Ty Cobb. Also the Georgian Peach knows a lot of Carl Mays. These two chaps had a runnng one tme, and here are the words Mays used to describe it:

"Cobb tries to get the goat of every youg pitcher. He stands up to the pate and plants one leg out in front of the home plate, although this isn't allowed in the rules. That leaves only half of the plate to pitch the ball over. Consequently when he tried that on me, I threw the ball straigh at him.

"Every time I pitched against hin he would get almost crazy at me. On day in Detroit I sizled one just pas his head and he rapped his bat down on the plate like a triphammer and shsieked at me: 'Do that again, you you——. Do that again" (The rest of the story includes words, a flying base ball bat and spikes.)"

ANSON PICKS OLD MEN FOR BASE BALL TEAM

Picking allstar teams from the ballplayers assembled at the Congress Hotel in Chiiago serving as a diversion, while the Ameriian ferd stiii uas raging. It started an argument as to whether a team piiked rom men present who had starred in the last century could beat a team of present ientury players who were attending the meetings.

Considering only men who then appeared in the lobby, the two following ball teams were selected:

Nineteenth Century—Capt. Anson, first base; Bill Gleason, second base; Hugh Jennings, shortstop; Jimmy Burke, third base; Hughie Duffy, Dav Fultz and George Stallings, outfielders Wilbert Robinson, and Connie Mack, catchers; Clark Griffith, Hank O'Day, and Joe McGninity, pitchers.

Twentieth Century—Fred Luderus first base; Johnny Evers, second base Joe Tinker, shortstop; Charles O'Leary, third base; Tris Speaker, Sasey Stengel, Gabby Cravath, outfielders; Ray Schalk and eGorge Gibson, catchers; Milner Brown, Ed Pfefer and Doc White, pitchers.

Cap Anson was asked which of these teams he would prefer.

"Nothing to it but the old fellows," replied the former Cub veteran.

Immodest Dress.

Immodest dress by women of the day is not peculiar to any one country. It prevails to an amazing extent in the United States, in Canada, in Great Britain, in France, and probably in other countries. What has given so strong an impetus to it is largely conjectural, but presumably it is one of the social reactions from the soberer conduct, thought and feeling of the war period.

If girls cherish a thought and hope that they enhance their chances of a happy marriage, or marriage at all, by a free revealment of physical charms, they are deluding themselves. With comparatively few exceptions the man who puts his mind seriously to the marriage project looks about him for the womanly woman, one of whose fundamental charms is modesty. He envisages such a woman as likely, above all others, to have the qualities required in a life mate whom he can honor, love and trust.

Men are none too good at best. Indeed, as a class, they are too bad at best, but about the surest way to make them worse is for women to appeal, by dress or otherwise, to their grosser natures. It is enough that deficient draping of the female figure exerts a harmful influence in terms of sex, but atop of that is the fact that it is a menace to health and an injustice to children yet unborn.

Must Support Daughter-in-Law.

That a mother-in-law, under the law, is liable to help support her daughter-in-law, if the latter's needs demand it, and the former's means justify the claim, was the ruling contained in a judgment of the Superior Court rendered recently in Montreal.

Dame E. Seguin, wife of George Lauzon, sued her husband's mother for $60 a month alimentary allowance for plaintiff and her eighteen months' old infant.

A writ against her husband was returned "non est investus" (He cannot be found). Hence the claim against his mother, who was submitted to be a woman of means and capable of paying $60 a month toward the plaintiff, who was said to be too ill to work for herself and her baby.

Charlie O'Leary Recalls Deeds Of The Late "Germany" Schaefer

During the 1919 world series, I met Charley O'Leary, former Detroit star, at one of the games in Chicago O'Leary was a teammate of the late Herman Schaefer, when the Tigers were in their prime. The two were pals. O'Leary and I naturally recaled the deeds of Schaefr, who, by th way, got m out of th worst jams I was ever in as a result of his comedy.

Cleveland and Detroit figured in this incident. It was the day before the Fourth of July, and a fairly good-sized crowd was n the stands. The weather was threatening. Neither club appeared to be pennant contender, so the outcome of the game did not mean much. Before I started the game both mannagers agreed they would hurry in every way possible to finish the contest. For three and a half innings every thing moved in whirlwind fashion. In the last half of the fourth Cleveland made three runs. At the close of the fourth a slight rain was falling It was evident that in a few minutes a storm would break.

With the first of the fifth the dilatory tactics began. Each player took his time about coming to the plate. Before stepping into the batter's box he would carefully dry the handle of the bat on his uniform. Then he would strike at the ball and, whether he missed it or fouled, he would alow the bat to slip from his hand and go flying in the direction of thir base. The coacher would pick it up and walk leisurely up to the batter with it. Then one of the extra players would rush out from the bench and dry it off with a towel. In an effort to delay the game they were going the limit.

Naturally it was embarrassing for a youngster just breaking in, and I happened to be working back of the plate, and was in charge of the game. I looked toward Sheridan for help; for all the Tigers were yelling from the bench for me to ca'l the game. In response to my signal of distress, Sheridan yelled:

"Keep them playing until it looks as if the park might float away!"

In playing the first half of the fifth the Tigers had consumed almost as much time as it had taken to play the first four innings We finally finished the frst half of the fifth. Seeing all hope of making the contest go down on the record as an unfnished game had vanished, the Tigers were willing I should call it; in fact they wer anxious that I should Instead I kept them at it. Scoring any more runs was out of the question, as the ball was so soggy it was impossible to hit it out of the infield, and running the bases was next to impossible

Not until the first half of the seventh was finished did I finally call time. Herman Schaefer was the cause. Seeings that all pleadings were in vain, he had borrowed a raincoat and an umbrella from a spectator. When the Tigers took the fiold he took his position at second wearing the raincoat and holding the raised umbrella. I decided then it wa time to suspend hostilities.

MRS. VAUGHAN HAS GAINED 17 POUNDS

WAS ALL RUN DOWN AFTER INFLUENZA—IS WELL AND HAPPY NOW.

"I have gained seventeen pounds since I started taking Tanlac and I am well and happy now," was the statement made the other day by Mrs. James Vaughan, of 128 Erin St., St. John, N.B.

"It was about a year ago that I was taken down with a severe case of the influenza," she continued, "and for several days I scarcely recognized anybody and my chances of recovery looked light. But after I did manage to get up you can just imagine what a weakened condition I found myself in. I was so nervous that I would jump if anybody closed the door hard, and headaches would come on me often. My stomach was so upset that nearly everything I ate disagreed with me, and I could hardly retain the little I did force myself to eat. I was continually belching up an acid liquid that kept a bad taste in my mouth and I was gradually losing weight and what little strength I had. I had neuralgia badly in my head and face and the pains felt just like nails sticking in me. I could not get much sleep or rest for I would lie awake half the night and would feel so weak that it was hard for me to get about.

"The statements in the papers about Tanlac seemed so sincere that I made up my mind to try it. In all I took four bottles and my recovery had been so complete that I am never troubled in any way any longer. The headaches and nervousness have left me entirely and so has the neuralgia in my head and face. Everything I eat agrees with me perfectly and my appetite is so fine that my biggest trouble is trying to satisfy it. I get sound, restful sleep at night, and I have been built up so wonderfully that I feel as fine and strong as I ever did before I had the 'flu.' I consider Tanlac the best medicine in the whole world and I am giving this statement because I want others to benefit by my experience."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by The Warne Drug Co., and by the leading druggists in every town.

BUSY ANTWERP.

Great Belgian Port Has Many Natural Advantages.

Belgium is working at its reconstruction with a most laudable energy—which contrasts strongly with the social unrest and agitation reigning in England and in France. The Belgian Government, rightly proud of what has already been achieved, recently invited three French ministers to Belgium on a tour of observation so that they might realize for themselves the progress accomplished in the domain of social reconstitution. Their journey ended by a visit to the fort of Antwerp, which is about to become a French base for the transport of German coal.

Although Rotterdam is a dangerous rival, the great Belgian port, nevertheless, possesses considerable superiority on account of the facility of access and its labor conditions. The Belgian Chamber of Commerce recently published a communication concerning the characteristic features of Antwerp, of which the following are worth noting:

The port is accessible for vessels 230 metres long, drawing 10 metres of water, and possessing docks 5,500 metres long, provided with hydraulic cranes housed in metallic sheds which extend over an area of more than 200,900 square metres.

The work of enlargement of the port, which is actually being carried on in the north, will allow of steamers up to 350 metres long to enter, whilst the depth of the port will be 13 metres at low or high tide. These new docks will also be provided with hydraulic cranes, with numerous railway tracks, allowing freight to be directly transferred from car to steamer and vice versa, whilst 12 pneumatic elevators can discharge 150 tons an hour.

In 1914 Antwerp was the centre of 100 or more navigation services for all parts of the world. Already 60 of these lines have resumed work. Before the war the movement of transports was about 11,000,000 tons of imports and 8,000,000 tons of exports. When navigation on the Rhine is once more free, extremely low freight rates will allow of a considerable traffic by way of the Rhine, to the particular advantage of Strasbourg.

Against these advantages of Antwerp, no French port can adequately compete.

Announcing
Red Rose Orange Pekoe Tea

During our twenty-five years in business, Canada has made wonderful progress in education, refinement and wealth.

The scale of living and the tastes of the people are more luxurious than a quarter of a century ago.

Realizing this we have decided that—in addition to our well-known standard brands of Red Rose Tea, the sales of which are increasing faster than ever before—the time is opportune to introduce a tea of extra quality. It is an Orange Pekoe Tea of very fine quality under the popular Red Rose brand, and called Red Rose Orange Pekoe Tea—a special tea of extra quality for people who are willing to pay a little extra price.

To ensure the quality and success of this new tea we have concentrated on it all the resources, the experience and the advantages possessed by our big organization.

The Orange Pekoe Teas we use are selected with a knowledge born of long experience in buying teas abroad.

Red Rose Orange Pekoes are grown on the best plantations;
—from tested seed;
—on carefully cultivated soil;
—at a high elevation (mountain grown teas are very superior to low-land teas.)

They are gathered at the time of the year when the flavor is most fully developed in the leaves.

The manufacture and final preparation are carefully and skilfully done.

When brewed, Red Rose Orange Pekoe Tea has all the characteristics of fine quality tea.

It has a bright, sparkling amber color in the cup.

The aroma is delicate and delightful.

The flavor is of rare charm and distinction. The more cultivated your taste the more you will appreciate it.

The strength is rich, satisfying and invigorating.

Red Rose Orange Pekoe Tea is sold only in our sealed waxed board cartons which fully protect its fine quality.

Ask for it by the full name: Red Rose Orange Pekoe Tea. The words "Orange Pekoe" are in orange on our new waxed board cartons.

Mountain grown Orange Pekoes from the best plantations. A tea of extra quality at a little extra price.

RED ROSE ORANGE PEKOE TEA

Our well-known Red Rose package, the sale of which is increasing faster than ever before. Red Rose consists chiefly of Assam teas, the richest and strongest in the world and therefore very economical.

(The Red Rose Orange Pekoe package is a little different in design.)

RED ROSE TEA is good tea

SHOCKED AT DISPLAY OF FEMININE ANKLES

London, March 2.—In the display of feminine ankles, both in the United States and Western Europe, Baron Goto, former Governor of Formosa, and one of the most influential of Japan's leaders of the "old school," sees a sign of decay for Occidental civilization. Here is what he told the Tokio correspondent of the London Morning Post:

By Baron Shimpei Goto.

"I have just concluded a long trip through the United States and Great Britain to appraise the effect of the great war on Western civilization.

"This is particularly so among women, whose outstanding proof of moral perversity is their undue display of ankles. I do not wish to be unduly severe, and I am not sure whether to put down the soaring of the skirts to the soaring of prices, or to deliberate choice on the part of the sex for exhibiting graceful extremeties. Nevertheless, I was profoundly impressed by the show of ankles in New York and London, particularly in London, where I least expected to find such frivolity.

Decline in Decorum.

That London ladies should reveal more of their ankles than could be detected during my previous visit is evidence to me of the decline in social decorum. Any increase of ankle display points to degeneration.

"Beautiful ankles give no pleasure to the eye of the Japanese. In this country the divinest ankle exposed would not attract the slightest notice. The Orient is the nudest section of the world; and when a whole nation has been surfeited on ankle exhibitions of all ages, we cannot appreciate them in other countries.

"If a Japanese lady thought anyone was disposed to observe her ankles, she would never rise until he withdrew: and she would never enter a public conveyance until the masher had preceded her. But in New York and London the ankles were protruded on my notices; and that is what they were exposed for."

A large diamond will win more ladies than a dozen faint hearts.

A popular poet can show his acquaintances real money.

There is usually room at the top of a man's head for hair.

A genius is a man who is able to unload his troubles at par.

The Followup Method.

"Why do you get the pretty girls jobs first? Is that fair?"

"Best for all concerned," declared the head of the school of stenography. "The pretty girl soon marries her employer, and then there's a permanent job for one of the plainer young ladies."—Pittsburgh Post.

A Person to Be Avoided.

"Palanquin is certainly a man to avoid. People have told me a great many stories about him which are not edifying."

"Really? You do well to tell me, for I need not now give him back the money he loaned me."—Paris Figaro.

Bridging a Difficulty.

Paying Teller (to woman with check)—I'm sorry, madam, but you'll have to be identified by some one I know.

"Oh, very well. I have a friend who is waiting outside in the machine. I'll bring her in and introduce you to her."—Life.

KEEP URIC ACID OUT OF JOINTS

TELLS RHEUMATISM SUFFERERS TO EAT LESS MEAT AND TAKE SALTS.

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. We are advised to dress warmly; keep the feet dry; avoid exposure; eat less meat, but drink plenty of good water.

Rheumatism is a direct result of eating too much meat and other rich foods that produce uric acid which is absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly cold weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate the uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which helps overcome uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

$14 A WEEK LIVING WAGE

Fourteen dollars a week as a minimum wage for working women in Ontario!

This amount is considered to be a conservative estimate by the Industrial Life Committee of the Social Service Council of Ontario. To adjust conditions, which are considered appalling, the committee will wait on the Ontario Government tomorrow noon, asking that a permanent commission be appointed with power to fix a minimum wage and to ascertain from time to time what it should be in accordance with the cost of living.

The committee reports that board and lodging today costs $8 per week. Clothes, recreation, carefare, medical and dentistry attention and other incidentals aggregate $6. Therefore, a woman earning $14 a week has but a "hand to mouth" existence at best.

The committee canvassed 16,425 women and 17,024 men, industrial and office workers, throughout the province. Of this total 39.3 per cent. of the women received $10 or less per week, as did 8.3 per cent. of the men.

Eleven thousand of the 16,000 women canvassed received $12 or less per week, which is regarded by the committee as less than a minimum wage for a decent subsistence, while 12.5 per cent. of the men received less than $12 per week.

Some Get Under $7.

The figures compiled show that 64.6 per cent. of the women employed in the manufacture of biscuits and confectionery earn $10 per week or less, as do 35.7 per cent. of those engaged in the production of boots and shoes, 76.4 per cent. of the women manufacturing paper boxes and bags, and 37.7 per cent. of those employed on carpets.

Seventy-nine women canvassed employed in the manufacture of agricultural implements showed 7.6 per cent. receiving $10 per week or less. Another investigation showed 22.6 per cent. of a certain class of women workers receiving $7 per week or less, and another canvass showed 26.39 of the women employed earning less than $8 per week.

TRAGIC STORIES OF JEWISH RELIEF WORK

One of the most tragic sides of relief work in Eastern Europe today is that which has to do with the effort to get the destitute Jews of those stricken lands into touch with their relatives in Canada and the United States, according to reports sent to the Canadian Jewish War Relief agents abroad.

Thousands of Jewish refugees driven from their homes at the beginning of the war have had no word from members of their families for the past five years. Many of them are today at the point of starvation, and know that their relatives would be glad to aid them, if it were possible to get into touch with them. The Joint Distribution Committee of Canadian Funds for Jewish War Sufferers conducts a transmission bureau for the purpose of aiding these people to get into touch with their relatives in America.

The following letter, addressed to Sam Friedlander, of New York, show show great the need for such a transmission bureau is:

"My dear brother Sam:

"I beg of you that you shall try for us and find our father, Barnet Levine. We have sent a telegram to him in Minneapolis that he should send us citizens' papers and money so that we can come to America, but we have no answer. We have no money nor food. This is our father's last address: K. Noon. 1019 Prinant Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn. This is our address: Fannie Levine, Warsaw."

A SLEEK, SLICK MAN

By M. QUAD

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

On the passenger list of the Ocean Queen as she sailed from Melbourne for London on the 16th of August, 1881, was the name of James Melwill, an Englishman, and if there ever was a sleeker, slicker man got into port I have not read of him.

No one seemed to know Jimmy, as he asked us to call him, beyond knowing that he lived up the country on a big horse farm and was worth half a million dollars.

When we came to shake ourselves down aboard I noticed that there was a lot of rather tough looking men among the steerage passengers. It was explained that they were going to the Cape to work on a new railroad. As near as I could size them up they were all colonials and men more used to horses than picks and shovels. I think the sleek Jimmy must have caught me watching the steerage passengers, for he took occasion one day to observe:

"There seems to be a fine lot of men going out to the Cape with us."

"As far as bone and muscle go," I replied.

Then he extended his cigar case, proposed a game of euchre and the subject was dropped. I don't claim that I was suspicious of Jimmy or that I was disturbed by the gang in the steerage. On the contrary, I was perfectly easy in my mind in all respects. I had in the Australian papers read that the Ocean Queen was carrying home more than a million dollars in gold. In fact, I had seen most of the boxes brought and taken down to the strong room. All other passengers must have been aware of the treasure, but there was little or no talk about it.

It is a wide expanse of ocean between the Cape and Australia, and at the end of a week we had all settled down into grooves and fallen into a monotonous routine. Early one morning a sail was sighted dead ahead, and almost as soon as she had been made out it was seen that she had a distress flag flying. We ran down to within a half mile of her before our engines were stopped. Only three men were visible on her deck, and she hadn't a boat in sight. The trio beckoned and motioned that we should send a boat, and the captain gave orders that one should be lowered.

The boat had pulled half the distance to the brig when we had something nearer home to attract attention. The sleek, slick little Jimmy suddenly held a cocked revolver to the captain's ear and marched him into his stateroom. Fourteen of the men from the steerage, each armed with a pistol and knife, suddenly appeared among us, and it wasn't three minutes before the whole crowd of us were in the cabin and a guard over us. The engine room was taken possession of at the same time, and the Ocean Queen had been taken without a shot being fired. The brig was lying broadside to us. She had two boats down on the far side, with fifteen men in each boat, and as soon as they had pulled around and captured our yawl one boat load of the rascals came aboard the Queen and the steamer was worked down alongside the brig. The sea was smooth, and the fellows could lash the craft together without fear of disaster.

We had been taken completely by surprise and had no show. They had the gold out and transferred within an hour. It is to the credit of the rascally gang to say that they were under good control and insulted no one. After the gold was disposed of they robbed the ship of a lot of bedding and provisions, and at the last the sleek, slick man came down into the cabin to say a few words.

"My dear friends," he said, "I do not wish to search you one by one, like a footpad or a bushranger, but I will trust to your honesty to hand over your money and jewels. I have figured on about the amount I should get. If I get it no one will be further disturbed. If I don't get it there will be room aboard the brig for most of the ladies."

I gave half my possessions, and I presume the other passengers retained a share as well, but the money, watches, rings, brooches, etc., laid on the table before the pirate had a good round value and seemed to satisfy him. He swept everything into a sack, bade us a fond adieu and within ten minutes was sailing away in the brig. The engines were disabled before they left and the crew of the mate's boat was sent back to us, and as no one had been killed, we were fain to think we had come off fairly well. We lay rolling in midocean for four days before the engineer had made repairs, and by that time the brig was several hundred miles away. Even had we known her course and position it would have availed nothing. We made a slow run for the remainder of the voyage, and it was three weeks before a man-of-war started out to look for the pirate craft. It had been a job put up in Australia, and it had worked to perfection. It may be that the brig divided the swag, but as she had a dozen different places to choose from, she had no fear of capture. So far as I had been able to learn she was never heard from, though the search was kept up for a year or more. There was enough plunder to set each one up handsomely, and I have always thought of Jimmy, the slick one, as touring about in the finest raiment, drinking the rarest wines and making himself a favorite wherever he stopped for a week.

There is nothing in which men more deceive themselves than in what they call zeal.

Life to possess its full savor must of necessity consist largely of plans and ambitions.

Diamond Saws For Stone.

In the four fields of stone cutting—hard, soft, cast stone and terra cotta—new methods have wrought great changes of late. In the large cutting plants limestone is handled like so much wood and is cut by circular saws, smoothed by planes and bored into with much the same sort of tools as are used by woodworkers. By all means the most interesting machine used in this work is the diamond saw. The word "diamond" is not fancifully applied, for the device actually includes a huge circular saw set around the edge with real diamonds. They are not the clear, white stones that are used in jewelry, to be sure, but for all that they are real black diamonds, said to be worth about $5 a karat. These stones are about the size of dried peas and are set in pairs in interchangeable steel teeth. One of these saws will eat its way through limestone at the rate of twelve inches in a minute. At the end of a month the diamond teeth are taken out and sent away to be recut and reset. A new set of diamond teeth is then put in place at a cost of about $800.—Argonaut.

The "King of Rome."

What became of Napoleon's son is a question often asked, as little mention is made in history of the young prince, the desire of his father's life, who was born March 20, 1811, amid great rejoicing in Paris and hailed as the "king of Rome." In January, 1814, Napoleon embraced his wife and child for the last time, and this really ended the reign of the little king "who never saw his kingdom." He was reared in the Austrian court under the name of the Duke of Reichstadt and grew to be a handsome young fellow and quite a brilliant scholar. He had one short year of military life and then contracted pulmonary disease, from which he died in his twenty-second year. He worshiped the memory of his father and always spent the anniversary of his death, July 22, in his own rooms. He is buried in the Carthusian monastery of Vienna, which is the Austrian Westminster abbey.

The Bottle Tree.

The Sterculias is a genus largely represented in Queensland and widely distributed. To it belongs the bottle tree of the west of Queensland. Blacks eat the seeds of one of the species of the coast, and in the Philippines those of apparently a closely allied species are considered wholesome when roasted or boiled, though eaten in large quantities. The tree belongs to a good family, being related to the Theobroma (food of the gods), which supplies the world with cocoa and chocolate. When the fruit splits open it is a brilliant scarlet with an orange tinted interior. Along the parted edges are the seeds, oval and black, covered with a rich purple bloom. The fruit, being tough and leathery, remains on the tree a long time, forming a most effective display in the gloom of the jungle.—T. P.'s London Weekly.

pal Board and local engineers of satisfactory tests made of the hard pan on which to build the foundation for the eastern river pier, as published in the press.

To Ald. Gainey, Ald. Hamilton replied that he was not in a position to say whether the bridge would cost more than the estimates or not.

Ald. Gainey's idea was that if Council felt certain that the bridge would cost more than the estimates application to Parliament at this session for a large appropriation should be made.

On motion of Ald. Gainey and Morrison, Council will apply to the Dominion Government for payment of whole or part of their grant for the new bridge.

Plumbing Supervision.

Ald. Crowe's suggestion that the example of some cities in having plumbing inspection under control of the Board of Health would advantageously be followed here, was sent to the Property Committee to report.

Condolence.

On motion of Ald. Crowe and Morrison, Council passed a resolution of condolence with Mrs. Frank Sollitt, in the death of her husband. The late Frank Sollitt was an appointee of Council's on the Public Library Board.

Those Triplets.

Ald. Gainey asked how it was the Legal Committee had not made the presentation to Mrs. Albert Dorriss and her triplets as authorized last year.

Ald. Turner replied that E. W. Warne, with whom the order for a silver cup for each of the triplets and a gold piece—all suitably engraved—had been placed, had unfortunately been delayed by rush of business at the factory.

Council decided that unless these goods are received by March 30th the order shall be cancelled and placed elsewhere.

Extension of Time.

Ald. Turner and Hamilton moved that the city solicitor apply to the Railways and Municipal Board for extension of time by two years in which to erect a new electrical substation, and that the increase on the debenture rate be increased from 5 to 6 per cent. Carried.

ALD. CROWE SAYS ALDERMEN DO NOT WANT TO ACT FAIRLY ON SALARIES

Takes Exception to Voting Down of Resolution to Acquire Information as to Conditions Governing Salaries of Civic Officials Elsewhere.

In submitting his finance report to Council last night, Ald. Turner asked that the schedule of salaries of officials agreed on by committee last week and published be referred back to his committee, he having some changes to suggest. This was done.

Ald. Crowe wanted Council to secure information from other cities near Peterborough's size as to their number of employes in each civic department, salaries paid, and the population within the municipalities.

He confessed that he was not very well versed in office requirements or as to the question of increased responsibilities of officials, to conclude what increases, if any, are due, in these respects. He knew very conclusively the percentage of increase in the cost of living so as to govern himself in endorsing any increase in salaries for that reason, but wanted any claim for salary increase on the ground of increased service or responsibility substantiated.

Ald. Crowe and Gainey moved for information on salaries as outlined above.

Ald. Hamilton—"Don't you think that, as things are fixed for 1920, this motion might be left for another year?"

Ald. Crowe could not see it that way. The proposed salaries schedule had created a want of harmony, he said, and considerable public criticism had arisen.

The motion was defeated on the following division.

For—Ald. Gainey, Crowe, Morrison and Gordon.

Against—Ald. Copping, Whitehouse, Jones, Hamilton, Turner.

Ald. Crowe—"You don't want to be fair. I'm going to fight you on this thing."

Ald. Whitehouse—"You are too late with your proposition, Ald. Crowe."

Ald. Gainey—"The salaries could remain in abeyance until after we get the information suggested. Increases could date back to the beginning of the year."

RECOMMENDS DANCING FOR HEALTH

Margaret Blair Delivers an Interesting Lecture in Cressman's Rest Room.

The lecture on "Dancing for Health," delivered by Margaret Blair in the lounge room of Cressman's store yesterday afternoon, was listened to with special interest by a large group of ladies. A pleasing and optimistic personality, the speaker is in herself a marvel of inspiration. She radiates enthusiasm to such extent as to compel appreciation on the part of her listeners, at the same time appealing to the intellect with the saneness of her convictions—the clear logic of her theories.

There is, she said, in every living woman the possibility of charm—the promise of that lure which we call beauty. This regardless of time, for just here it might be mentioned that she herself is, in years, a very elderly lady—a grandmother—but in spirit as young as the youngest. We all recognize the fascination of perfect health and the woman who possesses this priceless treasure is what ever may be her features, a beautiful woman. The pink glow of health in a woman's cheek, the deep rose of laughing lips, the sparkle of luminous eyes, if these things are not there what can taone for them? All have, she said, a great deal of vitality and the secret of health and beauty is the developing and preserving of this vital force. Here the lecturer censured the young women of today for the way they are rushing through life, heedlessly overlooking the care of their health and giving no thought whatever to the preservation of vitality. This lack of rest, (and sleep is most indispensable to the well-being of a young girl) this ruthless squandering of the reserve strength that is in her young body can only lead to one result, that is, an untimely death at the age of thirty-five or say forty-five at most. Good plain food, fresh air, sunlight and sleep are the greatest builders; these and a mind free from worry and discontent are the birth-rights of every young person and the one who would deprive her of them is worse than cruel. Here the speaker commented on the indolence of some wealthy society women, pointing out that this lack of exercise was just as injurious as over-exertion. The speaker, who is a strong believer in the theor yof mind over matter, pointed out that any degree of ex-

OBITUARY

THOMAS DAWSON, SR.

The death took place at noon today of Mr. Thomas Dawson, Sr., of 530 Bonacord street, after an illness of over three years. Mr. Dawson was troubled with hardening of the arteries, and it was this ailment which compelled him to give up his work nearly four years ago. On Friday he took a turn for the worse, and during the week-end it could be seen that his condition was fast becoming serious. In spite of all that loving care and medical assistance could do the end came at noon today.

Mr. Dawson was born in Ireland sevnety-six years ago, and at the age of twenty-six came to this country, Peterborough being his first home in the new country. Since that time he had been a member of All Saints' Anglican Church and an active worker in all religious and social enterprises in connection with the congregation. For more than forty-five years he was an employe of the Wm. Hamilton foundry, and those remaining employes who will remember him there will learn the news of his demise with feelings of sincere regret.

He was a member of the Canadian Order of Oddfellows and was at all times held in the highest esteem by his fellow lodge members.

He leaves to mourn his loss, besides a sorrowing wife, three sons, John, of Easton, Pa., Richard, of Chapleau, Ontario, and Thomas, a well-known grocer of this city, and four daughters, Mrs. James Johnson, city, Mrs. R. L. Hamilton, Welland, Mrs. Samuel Carter, Vancouver, and Miss Birdie Dawson, at home.

Up to the time of going to press the funeral arrangemetns had not been completed.

THE LATE CHAS. HOLLAND

The funeral of the late Charles Holland will take place from his residence, 384 1-2 Water street at 8:45 tomorrow morning to St. Peters Cathedral, where there will be a requiem high mass and interment will then take place in St. Pauls Cemetery.

W. H. Wortman, London, left an estate of $96,175.

: : AT THE GRAND : :

"Male and Female," a photoplay founded on Sir J. M. Barrie's famous play, "The Admirable Crighton," made its initial appearance in Peterborough at the Grand last night with Gloria Swanson starring in the part of Lady Mary. The story concerns the household of Lord Loam and more particularly the butler and scullery maid in that household. Lady Mary and her sister, Lady Agatha, are two very much spoilt aristocrats when in their home in London and Admirable Crighton, the butler, shows wonderful patience under their continued complaints. Lord Loam arranges to go on a voyage in the south seas and the butler and scullery maid are included in the party. All goes well until one day the helms-man is comforting the scullery maid over the fact that the butler ignores her and he forgets his wheel until it is too late and the boat is on the rocks. The scenes which follow are a trifle far fetched, but interesting nevertheless. All the family are rescued but apparently none of the crew are saved.

Admirable Crighton immediately assumes command of things and sets tasks for each to do so as to provide food for all. Naturally as peers of the realm would, Lord Loam objects and as Crighton won't leave them they leave him. Crighton, however, is the only one of the party who even understands how to light a fire and the rest of the party are soon won over to his command. For two years he reigns as king of the lonely island with all willing to serve him.

One day he saves the life of Lady Mary from a leopard and each confesses love for the other. Most shipwrecked parties are generally unconventially devoid of a minister in these circumstances, but this party was fortunate enough to have a clergyman ship-wrecked with them and the ceremony that is to make the Lady Mary and the Admirable Crighton man and wife begins. The scullery maid, who is herself in love with the Admirable Crighton, is disconsolate but suddenly sees a ship in sight and in the excitement the ceremony is not continued. Lady Mary realizes that this may mean the end of her "dream" and she attempts to prevent the signal being given to the ship, but the Admirable Crighton insists that it is his duty. Back in London again Lady Mary is fighting the conflicting emotions of love and pride, but Admirable Crighton answers her himself by announcing that he and the scullery maid are going to get married and go to America. There are little bits of humor surrounding each scene which hold the interest of the audience right to the end. This wonderful drama of classes will be showing at the Grand again tonight and on Wednesday.

INVENTS NEW ETHER.

Dr. J. H. Cotton of Toronto Discovers Anaesthetic.

The new ether, perfected by Dr. James H. Cotton, a young Toronto surgeon, has been proclaimed in the papers of the United States as one of the most important discoveries in medical science for many years. Once again, it would seem, the prophet has not been appreciated or encouraged in his own country. As far back as May, 1916, Dr. C. K. Clarke, the present Dean of Medicine at the University, wrote to the press in enthusiastic terms about the new discovery, but nothing was done. To-day Toronto hospitals are buying the "Cotton Process Ether" from the great DuPont firm, which has perfected the manufacture of the product at last.

There are many things claimed for the new ether, which is really a development of the old that was discovered in Boston many years ago. It acts more quickly, almost eliminates the nausea that follows the use of ordinary ether, allows many operations, even of a major character, such as the removal of an appendix, or a deep-seated growth, to be accomplished without the patient losing consciousness, and gives up its hold on the patient inhaling it almost as soon as the cone or tube is removed from the face or nostrils. Compared to the old ethers and anaesthetics only about one-quarter of the quantity needs to be used, and sleep can always be induced by the addition of a few drops more.

"In the ether that I have perfected," Dr. Cotton once explained, "there is no reaction, because sensation is blocked. With the old ether, you could have the patient drunk, and yet the sensory nerves would not be blocked. With the new ether, the mind can be made a complete blank."

The idea came to Dr. Cotton in 1915, the year he graduated in medicine. He had been interested in chemistry even when he was attending Harbord Collegiate, and followed his bent in a course of Physiology and Biochemistry, which led to a B.A., then an M.A. degree, at Toronto University, before he entered medicine.

The first promising results took place when a number of animals were able to be relieved from pain without going to sleep. At this time, May, 1916, the material could only be manufactured very slowly, one pound every three weeks, and it cost about $80 a pound. It was offered as a discovery to the Toronto General Hospital, and the University of Toronto, combined, to do what they will with it for war purposes.

In June, 1917, a paper and a demonstration were given at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, with two operations. The result was so satisfactory that the new product received the active approbation of the whole Dominion Association. The DuPont people, who approached Dr. Cotton then, only received the complete rights of the new discovery, after the delay in Toronto, and then to speed up processes and production for war purposes. It took exactly eight months to produce in quantity even then, after the intricate secret process had been handed over.

Another important aspect of the discovery is in its relation to crime. "It is capable," said Dr. Cotton, "of making the most hardened criminal tell the truth, and nothing but the truth."

GinPills FOR THE KIDNEYS

Continents and Animals.

Once on a time, so the zoologists affirm, the continents ran around the earth instead of up and down as they do now. This does indeed present a novel geological story, and it is interesting to know that it originates with the students of existing life instead of with the student of rocks and geological strata. Although he did not originate the suggestion, Prof. R. F. Scharff, of Dublin University, has written a good deal in support of the hypothesis, which is in fact, that the past history of the continents may be read in the distribution of the living animals of to-day. A single example will show how the upholders of this idea have marshaled their facts. The Scottish hare is not the Irish hare, although now separated only by a narrow body of water. The latter is the Arctic hare, which came into Ireland, it is claimed, from Greenland when there was a land bridge across the north Atlantic. The Scottish hare is the species belonging to the continent of Europe and came into the "tight little isle" while it was a peninsula of France or one of the other countries of northern Europe. North American sponges and a pond bivalve from the waters of that continent are to-day at home in Ireland, and do not exist in England. Similar arguments in great numbers have been assembled to show that Africa and South America were once connected. Ethnologists have for a long time been speculating on a "lost Atlantis" in the Pacific Ocean, by which Asia or at least a great Pacific land was connected with South America, while with Behring Strait so narrow and the submerged mountain range now the Aleutian Islands, there can be no question about a former bridge here. The zoologists find affinities between the fauna west of the Rockies and those of Asia, and so the story goes in the development of unsuspected ties of ages ago that served to make up continents in very different fashion from those we now know.

It's a good idea to make an orator of every child, but it's a better idea to give him ideas to talk about.

'Twould take the average man about three days to do all the things he expects to accomplish tomorrow.

The fool shooeth his neighbor's hens from his back yard, but the wise man fixeth up a snug place for them to lay in.

Movie scenes of animals that flourished at the creation afford an additional excellent reason for living at the present time.

THE MOVEMENT IN PETERBOROUGH

The results of the Anglican Forward Movement in Peterborough City are gratifying and encouraging alike to clergy and laity, especially the latter, to whose untiring energies is due the rolling up of a total of $20,000. 60. The allotment for the whole of Northumberland Deanery, in which Peterborough, is the main centre, was $30,000 and this city's Anglicans voluntarily determined their own objective of $20,000 divided as follows: St. John's parish, $8,000, St. Lukes $6,000 All Saints' $6,000. The canvass resulted in a total of $8,540 for St. John's $5,581 for St. Luke's and $5,939 for All Saints.

An outstanding feature of the campaign was the fact that the three parishes worked unitedly in the interests of the whole Anglican faith, under the general chairmanship of Mr J. A. Aylmer of St. Johns

CANVASSING TEAMS

Following are the names of those working teams in this big movement to whose loyal efforts are due the most satisfactory results recorded:

St. John's Church—B. D. Hall, captain, A. W. Turner, C. G. Graham R. N. Jones, H. Long, F. J. Linton, H. J. Bird, R. N. Stuart, F. C. Hungerford, H Rush, F. J. Jamieson. C S. Whitney, P. C. Davidson, G. O. Cameron, F. L. Roy, W. J. Kent, J. B. Horne, W. E. Conway, Walter Hooper, A. L. Killaly, C. C. Abbott, J. Comstock, C. E. Jamieson.

All Saints' Church— C. Curtis. T Dawson, William Buller. W. J. Howden, Frank Dawson. Chas. E. Sisson H. A. Sisson, W. J. Worth, Charles Lacheur, James Price, L. G. Dobbin, W. H. Barry, Herbert Rush and Messrs. Conley, Wolstenholme, Tucker and Hayfield, under the energetic captancy of Mr. Edgar Worth.

St. Luke's Church— T. H. Adams captain; Robert Hamilton, Hugh McWha, H. A. Perry, F. Sedgwick, A. Moffat, F. Patterson, W. H. Carter, R B. Rogers, A. E. Dawson, H Fitch G. Carpenter.

It is worthy of note that St. Lukes Church subscribed the largest percentage, according to congregational number of any parish in the diocese of Toronto.

Diocesan Work

The Anglican Diocese of Toronto is an extensive one, extending from Brighton on the Southeast to Collingwood on the northwest, and the whole of this immense territory, exclusive of Toronto was under organization by Archdeacon J. C. Davidson rector of St. John's and of Peterborough. Hence headquarters for the campaign in this diocese, apart from the Queen City were Peterborough.

The allotment for this diocese was $550,000; $400,000 for Toronto City leaving $150,000 for rural parishes to subscribe, according to their giving power. Canada's total objective was $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 has been raised. Each parish voluntarily determined its own objective

Archdeacon Davidson, during the campaign travelled the diocese for six weeks, stimulating clergy, and enthusing laity with a recognition of the needs of the hour. His trip was full of incidents, interesting in the extreme, and the results tremendously encouraging for the present and conveying great optimism for the future

Bishop Sweeney is convening a meeting in Toronto, Friday, to discuss how the movement can be carried into spiritual and other channels of the church. Definite lines of work will be laid down.

How Movement Originated

This Anglican Forward Movement originated through the missionary societies of the Mother Church in England concluding that Canada shall support entirely her own missions to the exclusion of any help from England. Headed by James Nicholson, M. P., of Champlain, the laity undertook the task of raising a capital fund, the interest of which shall be applied to Canadian mission work at home and abroad, but more especially, perhaps to the spiritual needs of our Northwest Indians and the Esquimaux. Mr Nicholson first made this suggestion to the general synod of the Canadian Church in 1918 and the result has been the financial campaign just closed with a capital sum of $3,000,000 for Canadas Anglican mission needs, and for a Forward Movement also spiritually and intellectually.

The original organizer for Toronto Diocese as a whole was Dr. Seager of Toronto, while Mr. Evelyn Macrae, of Toronto organized that city. Archdeacon Davidson followed with splendid organization work in all parishes outside the Queen City. The way for this Forward Movement was paved by letters from the Primate of all Canada Archbishop Matheson of Winnipeg and from all Canadian Bishops. Liberal circulation of literature, special sermons by gifted speakers and addresses from members of the laity followed.

Clergy and Chairmen receiving this paper, will kindly acknowledge the same with any comments.

John H. Salter, a well-known Hamilton resident, is dead, aged 68 years.

A WORD FOR THE FARMERS

Perhaps no word would seem to be needed on behalf of that truly important body of men who have the government of our province in their hands. And yet, since the virile backbone of Canada has not always been credited with an overpowering generosity, it may be only just and fair to point to the remarkable total rolled up in the purely rural districts, such as the townships of Cavan, Mulmur, Clarke, Hope, Lloydtown and Emily and the two Deaneries of Durham and South Simcoe with others. And we may point to the splendid total of nearly $170,000 from the whole field of the country districts and to the wider results obtained by other communions.

While unstinted admiration goes forth, naturally, to the brilliant efforts of leading Toronto parishes, the fact remains that by a splendid record Toronto has become accustomed to giving on a lofty and generous scale. On the other hand, those living apart from the stimulating influences of the city, do not find it in the least natural to separate themselves with sudden and joyful readiness from what loom up before the eye of the imagination as huge chuncks of well-earned savings. Yes, the farmers have certainly done well, and incidentally have raised themselves in the doing of it; and the future may have greater things still as the power of financial co-operation for high aims is realized

FORWARD STILL THE CALL

Now that the financial objectives of the Forward Movement have been so generously and satisfactorily met it is well to remember that after all these belong only to one part of the movement, the general effect of which depends entirely upon its being carried on steadily and continuously. It is to be hoped that even the financial liberality which has been aroused on behalf of religion will only prove to be the dawn of a new day in which the church, the greatest of all societies, and religion, our greatest treasure, will no more be regarded as cheap things to be treated in a poor mean way, and as a matter of fact, in many places, the first result of the financial campaign was to advance to a more worthy plane the pitifully small stipends of the country clergy. But the main object of the movement—a distinct advance in the spirituality and practical efficiency of the Church—is one which would be entirely defeated if it were not carried forward with unremitting efforts and grim determination. Yes, it is definitely up to both clergy and laity to see that the Church becomes more filled with life and power, and that her influence upon her own people and also upon the community around is distinctly greater than it was before the Forward Movement began. To this end let all strive together to get out of many old ruts and to escape from many stifling conventionalities.

Let the laymen, more particluarly who have given generous sums, now take a deeper personal interest in the Church, which they have helped to equip financially, contributing to its life and spiritual work, as they have contributed to its support. In all communions in Canada their co-operation is welcomed. Let that co-operation now be made to tell in a more robust and virile life. Why should not the canvassing committees become permanent church committees Yes, there must be no relaxation of effort at this critical juncture. Let full and continued advantage be taken of the Divine Tide. Let the Forward Movement, or rather, let God, through the Forward Movement, finish His work!

IN JUSTICE TO LARGE CONTRIBUTORS

Small contributions by some, sometimes involve greater sacrifice than large ones by others, but it is only just to those who with a big-hearted generosity have given large sums of money to note the simple fact that the large totals received are perhaps chiefly owing to them. They should therefore and probably do, receive the warm appreciation of less fortunate givers who would deserve nothing better than the privilege of giving such now [illegible]. All this has a local application right here in Peterborough, and we want financial leaders to know that their efforts on behalf of our common cause are not unrecognized.

FORWARD MOVEMENT AGAINST GREED AND EXTORTION

Preaching in St. John's, Sunday last, Archdeacon Davidson said that the Church should bring definite strong and continued influence to bear in checking the sins and social diseases of the community and thus tread in the steps of the Divine Benefactor of mankind. One of the most prominent diseases of today was the inordinate greed for money. The pitiable spectacle was presented of the hands of men not stretched upwards in prayer but stretched outwards for more and more money. And so prices were rising on all sides and hardships and anxiety and further unrest were being created. It was becoming more and more difficult for people of fixed incomes to live.

Surely, in the great Forward Movement, the Church had struck a united blow at this spirit of greed. In the midst of it, she had called on her members to give as they had never given before and without any expectation of a return being made; and this call had received a magnificent response. People had recognized and realized the blessings of Christian giving, even when face to face with anxiety.

Let individual Christians set themselves to carry on this principle. Let them set their faces against every kind of extortion, extravagance and inordinate demands. Let them practice economy and be fair, kind and generous to all. This is one kind of practical Christianity called for today

PERSONAL RELIGION

Clergy and workers often ask people to "come to church." These words are only used from the difficulty of finding suitable language in which to express the real message which they desire to bring, which is "come to Jesus Christ," or if you have already come, "come closer and continue in union with him.' This is our central duty in life and (rightly understood) includes all others.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. and Mrs. James Bryce, East City, announce the engagement of their daughter, Edith Agnes, to Mr. Ivan T. Lillico, Toronto, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Lillico, of this city, the marriage to take place quietly the second week in March.

WHICH ACCOUNTS FOR IT.

Some of the residents of the north end reported down town that they had heard canaries singing in that district early today. A cynical citizen accounts for this phenomenon with the remark that express rigs were busy yesterday in that section of the city delivering packages presumably from Montreal.

CARD OF THANKS.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cox and daughter, Ethel, wish to express their appreciation of the many kindnesses they received during their affliction and double bereavement. For the many beautiful flowers during our sickness, and the very many beautiful floral offerings we received at the time of our bereavement. To the neighbors and friends of the family who so generously supplied all our needs al through our hours of sore trial. For the many letters of sympathy also received we feel that words cannot express our thankfulness half enough to all and everyone who helped us in any way.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Cox.

A FAMILY SQUABBLE.

In the police court this morning Mrs. Minnie Mahaffey charged Mrs. Robert Mahaffey with assault. The charge resulted from a family squabble, the two persons concerned being wives of the two Mahaffey brothers. The case was adjourned for a week.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

CAMERON—EASTWOOD.

One of the most brilliant weddings of the season was the one which took place in Murray street Baptist Church at 1 o'clock today, when Miss Margaret Eastwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Eastwood, 610 George street, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. A. H. Cameron.

The church, which was charmingly decorated for the occasion, with a profusion of ferns and golden daffodils, presenting an exquisite spring-like effect, was thronged with guests and spectators, eagerly awaiting a glimpse of the wedding party as they passed down the aisle.

Gowned in a beautiful creation of snowy white charmeuse with bodice of rose point lace and wearing a white tulle veil with coronet of rose point lace and curls, the bride looked the picture of youth and charm, as she proceeded down the aisle carrying a bouquet of roses, ferns and lillies-of-the-valley, while the organist rendered an appropriate appeal.

The bride was assisted by her two sisters, Misses Agnes and Jean Eastwood. Miss Agnes wore a gown of pale blue taffetta silk, while Miss Jean was attired in pale pink taffetta, and the contrast was most artistic. Each young lady wore a hat of silver cloth.

The two little flower girls who attend the bride, Misses Mary McPherson and Margaret McCarter, of Toronto, looked specially sweet in dresses of pale pink georgette with white embroidered neck and pink georgette with silver trimming, each carrying a dainty basket of sweet-peas.

Mrs. Eastwood, mother of the bride, was handsomely attired in a gown of king-fisher blue, charmeuse trimmed with silver lace and wearing a becoming hat to match.

The groom was assisted by Mr. Bruce Clegg, nephew of Col. Clegg the ceremony being performed by Rev. J. R. Webb.

At the close of the ceremony Miss Lillian Eastwood, attired in pale pink silk, with black picture hat and carrying a beautiful bouquet of pink roses and ferns, rendered with ease and grace of interpretation a touching vocal number.

Following the ceremony the bridal party, with a large number of guests, repaired to the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. V. Eastwood, where an elaborate reception was held, at which were present a number of out-of-town guests.

The bride and groom left on the afternoon train, amid showers of well-wishes, for a honeymoon trip to New York.

Mrs. J. H. Feeis, 214 Aylmer St., will receive informally on Thursday, March 4th, from 4 until 6 o'clock and afterwards will be "at home" on the second Wednesday of each month.

Mrs. C. H. Wilson of Toronto spent the week-end with friends in Peterborough.

Mr. Gordon Lamb is spending a few days visiting his parents in the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith left on the early train this morning for London, Ont., where they will reside.

At the Cameron-Eastwood wedding today Miss Flavelle of Lindsay caught the bouquet thrown by the bride just before the wedding party started for the station on their honeymoon trip.

Miss Elda MacNab of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, is spending the week at her home, 528 Gilmour street.

Miss Proudfoot, of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, is the guest of Mrs. MacNab, 528 Gilmour street.

Miss Vera Whitfield, of the Royal Victoria Hospital is holidaying at her home in North Monaghan.

What God hath wrought

IN 1865 there stood alone on Mile End Waste, London, a young man fired by the Spirit of God to make war on sin.

MILE End Waste was then one of the toughest places in London. Policemen patrolled it rarely and then only in pairs.

HIS audience more than jeered—they were downright abusive—but the young man persisted, and generally attracted a few souls to his standard.

THE man is now dead—but to-day his example is zealously fostered by thousands of Officers and Soldiers of the Salvation Army in sixty-six Countries throughout the world, speaking forty different languages.

OBITUARY

MRS. PETER PIRRIE.

The death took place at Nicholls Hospital this morning of Mary Grant, beloved wife of Peter Pirrie, Wilson avenue, in her 32nd year. Mrs. Pirrie was born in Scotland but came to this country at an early age. She was a member of Knox Church, which she attended regularly, and was always known to take an active part in any church work.

She leaves to mourn her loss a sorrowing husband and one child, Stuart, aged seven years. There also survive two brothers, George Grant, Detroit, and James Grant, Chicago, and three sisters, Mrs. McPherson, Aberdeen, Scotland; Mrs. Ledingham, Glasgow, Scotland, and Mrs. Jones, Jacksonville, Fla.

The funeral will take place from the residence of her husband's brother, Mr. John Pirrie, 274½ McDonnel street, on Thursday afternoon. The service at the house will be conducted by Rev. J. A. McKenzie, pastor of Knox Church, at 2 o'clock, interment taking place at Little Lake Cemetery.

GEORGE REID MUNRO.

Few deaths which have occurred in the city have caused such widespread regret as that of George Reid Munro, who died yesterday at the family residence, 352 Brock street.

The late Mr. Munro, who was the second son of the late George Munro, of the Wm. Hamilton Co., and grandson of the late William Hamilton founder of the Wm. Hamilton Co., was born in the city on March 03, 1887. He received his education at the local public schools and the Collegiate Institute, and later graduated from the School of Practical Science, University of Toronto.

After graduation he was engineer of the preliminary survey of the Hudson Bay Railway, then on the staff of Smith, Kerry & Chase, consulting engineers, Toronto. He was also connected with Mr. R. P. Lea of Montreal. In July, 1911, he returned to the city to take the position of engineer of the Wm. Hamilton Co., which, with the vice-presidency of the company, he held at the time of his death.

He was a member of the Engineering Institute of Canada and president of the local branch of the Institute, having taken great interest in its organization. He was genuinely and whole heartedly interested in all local activities. He was a member of the Board of Trade, and of the advisory board of the Red Cross. Having lived in the city all his life, he took a deep interest in any city development and welfare. He was a member of the local branch of the Corinthian Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Toronto Lodge of Perfection. Last year he was secretary of Corinthian Lodge. He was a lifelong member of St. Paul's Church.

AT GEORGE STREET CHURCH.

Meeting for Women to be Held at 8 O'Clock Tonight.

Special services are in progress at George Street Methodist Church. A meeting for women will be held tonight at 8 o'clock. The pastor's subject will be, "A Women's Wise Choice." The women of the city are heartily invited. This hour of fellowship will help and cheer.

Mrs. Janet McCready, of Putman, Ont., is dead, aged 63 years.

RECOMMENDS DANCING

cellence is possible, even easily attainable, once we firmly will it. She herself was afflicted with ill-health for years, previous to the time she began to take physical culture exercises, and just recently, after a medical examination, was pronounced 100 per cent. efficient. And she went to to say: "In five years I will be ten years younger."

If we would be healthy—if we would be beautiful—we must see in everything and everyone only the beautiful. We must look only for the beautiful, we must be big enough to overlook the rest. Upon awakening in the morning, let our first thoughts be of things beautiful—singing birds and rippling rills and star-lit skies—all that is lovely and strive to keep these images before the mind's eye throughout the entire. All that is natural is beautiful, all that is artificial is unlovely.

Here the lecturer told of her love for the children of nature, and especially horses, calling up vivid memories of the beautiful race horse, Dan Patch. She used to love to watch him when lining up for the race with his dark head held proudly in the air, his intelligent eyes sparkling with excitement as the band played, and when the gong sounded he dashed off determined to win the race, and he did.

Speaking of dancing as a great natural aid to health and symmetrical development, the lecturer scored a number of the popular dances on the ground that they were crude, vulgar, ungraceful and detrimental to health. Especially was this true of toe dancing. This mode of dancing had the same effect as the wearing of high heels, throwing the entire body out of position. Graceful dancing means simply to fill the heart with the lilt of the music and then strive to interpret its harmony in poetrical motion. She, herself, who is a marvel of grace in dancing, received her first inspiration when down by the ocean watching the birds flying in. That ethereal floating motion, that blissful drifting through spaces, is the essence of beautiful dancing. Here the lecturer interpreted in a unrestrained manner much to the pleasure of the audience, such enchanting musical selections as "Birds and the Brook," "Spring Blossoms," "The Glow Worm," "Spanish Dance," "Japanese Dance," "St. Patrick's Day."

The management of the store are to be congratulated on securing the services of this talented lady, and there is no doubt but that their effort will be highly appreciated on the part of their friends an dpatrons.

FORWARD MOVEMENT

We can, and should, hold communion with our Lord everywhere—business, home duties, bodily infirmities—all these instead of being obstacles may be made means of closer union with Him if we really set our hearts to serve Him and "to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." But together with these other things, come to Jesus Christ in His own house of prayer, not so much to get as to give, to give to Him the worship which is due and in which you ackonwledge Him as your Lord and God.

THE POSITION OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

It is not for a moment claimed that the church to which some of us belong has any monopoly of truth or goodness. That this is not so is evident on the very face of it.

Neither do we argue on behalf of her claims as against those of any of our neighboring communions whom we sincerely respect and with whom we would dwell in Christian concord and peace. "One is our Master and all we are brethren" in Him.

But with many open deficiencies and failures, the Church of England has, we are convinced, a wonderful position, which may be frankly and kindly stated, as we understand it in the inetrests of Christian re-union

The Church of England is a branch of Christ's one holy Church, which has come down to us through England—both Catholic and Protestant. She is a Divine Body, instinct with Divine Life, not a human organization.

The Church preserves the Apostolic ministry of Bishops, Priests and Deacons, and the Liturgy and Prayers which originating in the Apostolic age have under the guidance of the Holy Spirit been gradually formed during successive centuries. Thus, as members of the Church, we inherit the Religious Wealth of nineteen centuries—the Ministry, the Sacraments, the Prayers and Praises, the examples of Apostles, Saints and Martyrs, all united to us in one holy fellowship.

The Church is broad and tolerant allowing wide freedom of thought and practice. She is in no sense a Religious Sect, as is evidenced by the fact that She has no human ceremony of adimssion — nothing but the simple New Testament Rite of Baptism (St Matt.xxviii, 19) folowed by Confirmation. (Acts viii, 16, 17,) as the completion of Baptism.

Privileged to be united to the Lord Jesus Christ, in His own Body let every member of the Church rightly exercise this liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, (Gal. v, 1), not allowing it to degenerate into license, (Gal. v, 13), but cultivating a ready obedience to God's Commandments, loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ and His Sipirt-directed Church and a generous Christian love to all for whom Christ died.

A CHURCHMAN'S DUTY AT PUBLIC WORSHIP

Men are expected to be workers (not loafers) in the Church as well as in the business of the world. To this end tools are provided and clear instructions given as to their use. The Prayer-Book provides a "lever," (so to speak) at which every worshipper is expected to "push." The place, time, and directions are clearly indicated in order that all may together bring to bear their several efforts of spirit, mind and voice in the service of God. It is important that the little "push—word" Amen at the end of the prayers should be audibly joined in by all. The worshipper who thus reverently and heartily does his part is not dependent on the sermon or other variable factors. tl is a case of duty well done and the satisfaction which is bound to flow from it as well as the inspiration of a glorious Congregational Service.

Those who are not familiar with the Service can readily become so by dint of a little effort and perseverance. Get a Prayer-Book and read over the simple directions for Morning and Evening Prayer (with help, if possible, from a Churchman) marking the book at the only two places at which you need turn over. Begin by doing the simple things, and you will soon be able to do everything.

Thus a deaf-man, who cannot hear the sermon, may take an intelligent and most useful part in the main business of the sanctuary, the united uplifting worship of God.

It is not as if Liturgical worship was the only right way of approaching the Most High. Extempore prayer has also its uses and advantages. But the service of the Church of England being Liturgical, it is for worshippers to enter into it fully and to bring out its full power and efficiency by active hearty and earnest partcipation.

JUST A SUGGESTION

I is suggested that Anglican readers of today's "Review" should pass on their copy of the paper to an Anglican neighbor, or send it to friends in other parts of the country.

The interesting statistics in regard to the Anglican Forward Movement returns, just completed, are today announced for the first time, and it has only been possible to secure them through Archdeacon Davidson's important position as Organizer for all districts of the diocese outside of Toronto, and Peterborough, through him, becoming headquarters for the county.

Copies on sale at this office (while they last) at two cents each.

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

While attention is especially directed in this issue to the distinctive positon and work of a particular Communion, at the same time, there is also as definite a realization of the greater work, the whole Church universal, the separated parts of which are steadily drawing nearer together. One of the happiest features of this movement has been the spectacle presented of different communions moving along, side by side, on distinct paths, but with similar aims, and in a co-operative Christian fellowship.

CURLING

The result of the finals in the scheduled games played between the rinks of Kay and Stevenson last night was 14 to 9 in favor of the rink skipped by Mr. Kay. Tonight Stevenson's rink meets Connal's rink. Three rinks left this afternoon for Campbellford to take part in some friendly games there. The rinks are composed as follows:

George Copping, R. Grant, C. H. Duncan, George Boucher (skip).

R. M. Waddell, A. S. Morrison, J. C. Read, W. J. Oke (skip).

H. Hair, Dr. McNeely, F. J. Linton, G. A. Benor (skip).

: : AT THE EMPIRE : :

It is to the movies, now, that Elsie Janis has taken her pep and personality, and after two years without even a glimpse of her, we get our chance to have her with us again during the week of March 8 when she comes to the Empire Theatre in her first Selznick picture, "A Regular Girl."

Elizabeth Schuyler, a social butterfly, returns to New York after her canteen service abroad and is loathe to fall back into the idleness of former days. Her dad credits her irritability with her need for a rest, and he sends her to a sanitarium. Here, Miss Schuyler's nurse turns out to be the one with whom she worked in France. Elizabeth confides he rplan to her, and is helped to run away and call in her overseas guise of "Lizzie" at a boarding house where many of her pals are stopping. She tells them she is with them once more, this time to help land them their old jobs. "Lizzie," with such struggling, finally gets her fiance, a young attorney, to acquiesce to her scheme. Of course, he knows that the sooner the song and dance team are signed by a theatrical manager, and the prize-fighter is reinstated into the ring, and the inventor has his brian-child patented, "Lizzie" will have a few spare moments to marry him. Therefore everything culminates blissfully with all the pals attacking employment.

BENEFIT GAME PLAYED FOR EDWARD DUGGAN

The final game in the City Hockey League was played last night at the Brock Street rink. It was a benefit game for E. Dugan, who had his collar bone broken in a reecnt City League game. Duggan played on the team of the C. G. E, tool room and this team arranged to play a benefit game on his belaf with the Auburn Woollen Mill team at the close of the league schedule last night. Both teams were strengthened by outside players and were perfectly matched at the opening of the game. From start to finish it was a clean, fast game and an example in both points to many professional games. Neither team could hold any advantage on the other although from time to time through the game first one team and then the other took the lead. At the close the score stood four all, which score was satisfactory to both sides. There was a fairly large attendance and it is understood that a considerable sum was raised by the game.

TO MY FRIENDS

We are getting acquainted with each other now, are we not, and I believe you have confidence in me and in what I tell you. This is why I have refrained from telling you about our most wonderful remedy until now, as had I told you about it at first you would not have believed me. I confess it reads like a fairy story or a patent medicine advertisement, but nevertheless this is every bit true. I am here appending a list of things which I know Gallagher's Golden Drops has done.

A young lady got an infection in her finger, a doctor opened it, used iodine and antiphlogestum for a month before getting it under control. Later a sister got an infection from the prick of a rusty tack, started with the same treatment but the finger began to cure with the inflammation, when she began the use of Golden Drops and in two days it was all right.

In another family a doctor treated a young man's finger for a month for an infection while a sister later cured hers in two days with Golden Drops.

A friend with a ringworm had tried all kinds of salves for a year with no result and took it off completely in two weks with Golden Drops.

I know of different ones who tried all kinds of corn cures without satisfactory results and removed them easily and painlessly with a plaster of Golden Drops. It will kill boils or carbuncles in 24 hours after being opened up. These are only some of the things it has done, more later.

It is composed of resinous gums and oils and will kill poison, draw out inflammation and will heal. Any place where antiphlogestum may be used I guarantee this to be 90 per cent. more efficient. To use it, first cleanse the part with boracic acid solution or peroxide, place some absorbent cotton between two layers of sterelised gause or cotton, spread the gum on one side and apply where it will adhere firmly. Try it.

Your friend,
JACK SPELL.

y Aldermen Struggle With Estimates for 1920--Increase of $200 for Police Magistrate Dumble—Council Determined to Keep Rate at 35 Mills.

he city's aldermen struggled h Council's estimates for its sev- l departments for nearly three rs last night in an effort to keep tax rate down to 35 mills.

inally, when the Mayor suggest- eliminating $2,000 from the rd of Work's demand of $46,850, Phelan, chairman of that de- tment, objected strenuously. He the engineer and he had gone the requirements thoroughly, they could not see where any ing could be done. In fact they nted 10 per cent. added to allow a possible demand for increase the wages of employees. Then it not good business to have an over- ft at the end of the year. Might ter allow sufficient in the esti- tes now, he added.

The Mayor replied to let the de- rtments do what they can with the propriations arrived at, and then it spending. He here suggested t the estimates as prepared al- dy be taken as a foundation on ich to strike the tax rate, and s should that rate exceed 35 mills the several departments agree on at paring can be done to assure rate going no higher than 35 lls.

Ald. Gordon heartily concurred in proposition, which will be fol- wed at once.

In the above some amendments are already agreed on. The tax collector's proposed salary was $2,250 and now he is allowed $250 for help and a salary of $1,800. One stenographer's salary is increased by $40. Salaries in the Fire Department are to be raised $200 each man and officer, and not with additional consideration for the chief and officers; a new car for the chief is frowned at and disallowed, and the bands grant is in creased from $600 to $1,000. These will affect the above estimates and before a definite conclusion is reached. Police Magistrate Dumble also gets a $200 increase.

Civic Salaries.

The following salaries schedule passed the committee, and will probably stand for keeps:

ank Adams, treasurer	$2000.00

More Grants.

One hundred dollars for the Poultry Association, $1,000 for the Health Association and $250 for Labor Day have so far passed committee.

$3,000 for Exhibition.

The Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is to get $3,000 as originally decided.

This was the motion of Ald. Phelan and Gordon.

Ald. Turner and Jones moved for $5,000, but got no other support than that of Ald. Copping.

In regard to the city engineer's salary, Ald. Gordon eulogised the engineer as one of the best construction engineers in the province.

Ald. Crowe regretted that he had had no increase in six or seven years. The engineer, he said, had a family to keep and his work is important to the city. Ald. Crowe believes in helping the man with a family, but he thought $3,000 would be a fair salary for Mr. Parsons. The $3,300, however, was allowed.

In discussing the sanitary inspector's salary, Ald. Gordon thought the Police Commissioners might allow Mr. Stapleton use of the proposed car for the police.

Raise For Magistrate.

Ald. Gordon said the salary of Police Magistrate Dumble had remained at $1,400 for many years and he is a large tax payer. Mr. Dumble, he said, deserved recognition from the Council.

Ald. Gordon and Copping moved that the magistrate's salary be increased by $200 the year. This carried.

Good Move.

On motion of Ald. Phelan Council will move for the appointment of the Medical Office of Health being left in the hands of the Council, from whence his salary comes. At present this appointment rests with the local Board of Health.

CHARGED IN POLICE COURT WITH THEFT

ALLEGED TO HAVE STOLEN $25 FROM FUEL AND TRANSFER COMPANY

When John Galvin returned to the city yesterday after an absence of several months, he found that the law is not forgetful. Detective Meagher was waiting to welcome him and escort him to the police station, where he was charged with stealing $25 from the Fuel & Transfer Co. on September 8, 1919, at which time he was in their employ as a driver.

His case was remanded this morning until tomorrow.

A local man donated $10 and costs on a charge of being intoxicated.

FIGHT ON IN EARNEST IN GERMAN DIET TO DEPRIVE EX-KAISER OF PROPERTIES

Deputy Greaf Declares Former Emperor Failed to Live up to Traditions of His Race--Fled Like Thief in the Night to Holland Where He is Promenading and Sawing Wood.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, March 3.—The fight to deprive the former emperor of his properties and fortune began in earnest yesterday, when a motion of the Majority Socialists of the diet to re-refer the issue to the National Assembly precipitated an cariminous debate.

Socialists vs. Independents.

Majority Socialists vied with Independents in a denunciation of the former ruler in an effort to defeat the proposed settlement by accomplishing the confiscation of Hobenzelloren possessions. This would be done through a constitution amendment, voting former emperor a fixed sum for his maintenance.

Kaiser a Failure.

Deputy Graef, Majority Socialist, declared that the ex-ruler had failed to live up to the historic precedents of his race. He had not died at the head of his troops. He choose instead, the deputy continued, a midnight flight to Holland where he is now promenading and sawing wood.

Referred to Committee.

Democrats and Clericals joined in voting for Government's measure providing that a settlement be referred to the Committee of Judiciary. The Judiciary Committee now takes the bill under advisement, and conferences are expected to last many weeks.

The motion of the majority Socialists providing for action by the National Assembly has been temporarily tabled.

War Criminals.

A proclamation issued today calls upon all Germans who believe their names to be on the list of men whose extradition is demanded by the Allies to make known their places of residence to the Attorney-General.

BELL APARTMENT HOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE AT EARLY HOUR THIS MORNING

Mr. & Mrs. Corbett Had Narrow Escape From Death, Loss of Property is Considerable.

The Fire Department was called out at an early hour this morning to a serious blaze which had started in the Bell apartments situated at number 197, 199 and 201 Hunter street, immediately opposite the offices of the Bell Telephone Company.

The fire was first discovered by Mr. James Lynch, the druggist, who called the attention of P. C. Lawrence to it and rang in the alarm. The constable and Mr. Lynch then entered the building and called the families residing there who, up to that time, knew nothing of their danger and were peacefully sleeping. By the time the Fire Brigade arrived all in the building had been rescued but one family, Mr. and Mrs. Corbett, who lived on the third flat where the fire apparently started.

When Constable Lawrence reached the Corbett family their rooms were filled with smoke and they could only be rescued by throwing blankets over their faces and crawling along the floor and through the doorway. At this point it was a matter of mere seconds upon which the fate of Mr. and Mrs. Corbett hung. They had barely emerged from the building in the company of P. C. Lawrence than the roof fell in and their rooms became one seething mass of flames.

When the brigade arrived flames werealready shooting out of the roof and it was seen immediately that a great part of the building was doomed. Two lines of hose were laid from a hydrant near the corner of Hunter and Aylmer, but when the water was turned on it was discovered that the hydrant was frozen. This caused a delay of many precious minutes while the hose was taken up and relaid to a hydrant opposite the Review offices. Luckily the water flowed freely from this hydrant and soon four streams were playing on the burning building.

From the start there was a danger of the fire spreading to other buildings and the occupants of the American Hotel were warned by telephone to make preparations for a hasty exit.

After more than an hour's hard work the firemen succeeded in controlling the blaze and saving the surrounding buildings and even part of the burning building itself. For several hours, however, it was necessary to keep a stream playing on the smouldering building and ice made it very difficult to get at the heart of the trouble.

When interviewed this morning, Chief Grange stated that in his opinion all the occupants of the building would have perished if the warning had come five minutes later. No definite cause of the blaze could be given, although in some quarters the blame was laid to defective electric wiring. It apparently got its start in the centre of the building somewhere in the rear of the third floor and it was through this fact that it was possible to save a large part of the first and second floors from total destruction.

The loss and inconvenience caused was particularly distressing in the case of Mrs. Clees, who was ill at the time and consequently was rushed to the hospital. In the case of the Corbett family, Mr Corbett had a sum of money in his clothes but he could not stand up in the room long enough to get it or even secure his clothes.

A peculiar feature was that none in the building realized anything out of the ordinary was occurring, and one man when aroused remonstrated strenuously against what he termed an "unwarranted intrusion." Before he was able to complete dressing part of the roof fell in and illustrated clearly enough what was wrong.

The building is owned by Mrs. Bell whose husband died about six months ago. Mrs. Bell was fortunate enough to take out a fire insurance policy quite recently as otherwise she would have suffered a total loss. As it is now the insurance is only sufficient to cover part of the loss. It is understood that very few of the tenants had any insurance on their household effects so that these, for the most part constitute a total loss. Water and ice added to the damage by fire, although the Fire Department used only as much water as was required to consume the fire. In all, 1,750 feet of hose was laid. The only damage on the ground floor was by water.

The tenants in the building at the time of the fire were Mr. and Mrs. Asker, Mr. and Mrs. Clees, Mr. and Mrs. McGregor and son, Mr. and Mrs. Corbett and Mrs. Bell. The ground floor was occupied by Stinson's (formerly Lawson's) grocery store and the Deering implement agency, run by Mr. O'Riley.

Up to the present it has been impossible to estimate the damage which will run into several thousand dollars at least.

Constable Lawrence's version is best given in his own report as presented to Chief Thompson this morning. It is as follows:

"About 2.45 a.m., while patrolling No. 1 beat and while passing corner of Hunter street and George street, I heard a man yell 'fire' west on Hunter street. I could not see anything, but ran west along Hunter street and saw smoke coming out of the Bell apartments. I ordered a man to turn in the alarm and then ran up the stairs to get the occupants of the flat out of the building. Mr. James Lynch, who first saw the fire, went up with me. Constable Boyd arrived soon after and we had all but one family out of the building by the time the Fire Brigade

PREMIER BORDEN IS MUCH BETTER

MAY EXPECT TO SEE HIM IN HARNESS AGAIN BEFORE LONG

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, March 3.—Sir Robert Borden, accompanied by Lady Borden, left this afternoon for Charleston, S.C. The Premier, after his sea voyage and a day spent resting here, was feeling much improved in health. He caught cold on the first day of his voyage and was still feeling the effects of it when he reached Halifax. He is now reported to have shaken it off, and appears to be well on the road to complete recovery.

Sir Robert declined to discuss his future plans, but it was predicted by those who saw him here that he would be able to resume his duties within a comparatively short time, and that Ottawa might expect to see him back in harness before the session is very far advanced.

GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT

Such is Financial Embargo — May Terminate Shortly.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, March 3.—Wall Street Journal this morning says:

"The end of the embargo, by which Canadian banks and financial houses will not handle transactions which send money out of Canada in exchange for securities, is predicted. The embargo is only a gentleman's agreement and there is no way of enforcing penalties."

SIR ROBERT TO RESUME LEADERSHIP OF PARTY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 2.—Hon. J. A. Calder and Hon. Dr. J. D. Reid returned to Ottawa today from New York where they met Sir Robert Borden on his return from England. They stated that the Premier is much improved in health and will return to Ottawa before the end of the season to resume the leadership of the Government.

23,000 CASES OF FLU IN FEBRUARY

TOLL OF DEATH HEAVY, BUT NOT AS BAD AS IN 1918

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 3.—During February there were more than twenty thousand cases of influenza and pneumonia in Ontario, and twenty-three hundred deaths reported to the Provincial Health Department.

The toll of deaths, while heavy, is not nearly as bad as in October 1918, when the epidemic caused more than three thousand deaths.

The cases of smallpox numbered 880, or a decrease of over 300 from the January figures. Nine deaths are reported.

The reports states that doctors are not reporting social diseases, as required by the regulations.

PROVINCES CAN ACT ON EIGHT-HOUR DAY

SUCH IS ANNOUNCEMENT MADE BY LABOR MINISTER KING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 3.—Right to enact legislation on the eight-hour day is in the hands of provincial governments, it is announced by the Labor Minister in connection with application of one of the provinces for ruling on the subject.

The position is that the Federal Government has jurisdiction under its treaty, making rights to enact such legislation as may be necessary to give effect to provisions of any international treaty, if provincial legislatures do not see fit to act in the matter.

INSURANCE MEN AND MEMBERS OF LOCAL BAR DINE TOGETHER

Fifty Guests Enjoy an Evening of Material and Intellectual Diet—After Dinner Speeches Illumenating and Entertaining—A Function Worth While.

The dinner of the Peterborough Life Underwriters' Association held last night in the Empress Hotel was one of the most successful affairs of its kind in some time. Mr. A. E. Dawson made an excellent chairman and introduced the different speakers of the evening in a most fitting manner.

There were present as invited guests His Honor Judge Huycke, His Honor Judge Ward (Port Hope), Mr. E. S. Muller (Regina), branch manager of the Imperial Life Association in that city and president of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada; Mr. G. H. Hunt, superintendent of agencies for the Imperial Life Association and honorary secretary of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada; President De La Plante and many other members of the Peterborough Bar Association.

On the motion of Mr. McKellan, bylaw No. 6 of the association was suspended for the occasion and all routine business postponed until the next meeting of the association. Four new members were also welcomed to the association.

Opening Address.

In his opening remarks the chairman welcomed Judge Huycke, Judge Ward and the president and members of the Peterborough Bar Association and other guests on behalf of the Life Underwriters' Association. He pointed to the fact that the practice of law was one of the oldest professions and life insurance was one of the newest. The members of the bar had been invited primarily out of esteem and affection, but also to give them an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the human aspect of life insurance. They already knew the legal aspect. Life insurance had no tradition like the bar. It was a new profession which depended upon ideals but ideals could have no effect unless there was a potential power behind those ideals. And in the lawyers they recognized a potential power and therefore desired their support against such evils as undue taxation. The chairman then introduced one of the guests of the evening, Judge Ward, of Port Hope.

Judge Ward.

Judge Ward stated that his human interest in life insurance was that he held a policy in the chairman's company. Another human interest to him was that the policy was nearly paid up. At his age he no longer had any fear of life insurance agents but he recognized that in these days when the high cost of living was forever looming large a life insurance policy was a great boon to the family. It was a great pleasure to him to meet the insurance men tonight. They conferred a benefit upon those whom they canvassed for insurance, and no body of men were entitled to a larger amount of respect than the underwriters.

He had vivid recollections of Judge Huycke and Crown Attorney Hatton, who had always made it a great pleasure for him to visit Peterborough and the lakes. These trips, he felt sure, had added many years to his life and he hoped, although he was by no means a young sportsman, to be with them about the lakes with rod and gun every season for many years to come yet. In conclusion, he stated that he could not say too much for the Life Underwriters. It gave him great pleasure to be present here tonight, and he hoped that at some later date he would have a further opportunity when he would be given more time to prepare a speech.

Mr. D. O. La Plante.

Mr. D. O. a Plante, president of the Peterborough Bar Association, made a few short remarks, expressing the pleasure of that association on being present tonight. He thought possibly that as, since prohibition took effect, there were no bars in Peterborough, the Underwriters had decided to call in the Peterborough Bar to fill the gap. He came prepared to listen to wise discourses on insurance. In conclusion, he said that the insurance men were the only people in business who never had a good word said about them until someone died.

The Crown Attorney.

Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton followed supporting briefly the words of the previous speaker. Life insurance was a subject in which not only lawyers but all people must be interested. Life insurance men were both bright and aggressive but he had greater regard for their aggressiveness. The members of the bar were not very often invited out, although he did not really know why. "We are as much human as other people when you really know us," he declared. In conclusion, the Crown Attorney pointed out that even the U.F.O. had to call in a lawyer sometimes.

The President Speaks.

Mr. E. S. Miller, president of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada rose to give some interesting information with regard to life insurance generally and the work of the organization in particular. He thought that in years to come people would look back upon the year 1919 as the year in which life insurance came into its own. During that year there had been unpreced-

IDEA OF ONE GOOD CITIZENS BAND GAINS GROUND IN CITY COUNCIL

$1000 for Band Purposes Embodied in City's Budget—So Far, Ald. Crowe Lands Bandmaster R. Glidden of 57th.

The City Council's Parks Committee last night demanded an appropriation of $1,500 for this year's needs. Last year's appropriation was $1 120 and $1,171 were spent.

The Committee expressed a determination to see that Central Park is better taken care of this year than last.

Ald. Gainey and Copping both declared this public resort to have been a disgrace last summer. For want of a little water the grass was burned to its roots.

City Engineer Parsons, who has been instructed to attend all meetings of this, now, important committee, pointed out that the band stand in the Central Park is in a positively dangerous condition. "It will collapse some time," he said, and he was afraid it would not stand up against the 12th of July needs.

Chairman Ald. Gainey: "We cannot get along with less than $1,500 this year, if we are going to take proper care of our parks, which I propose shall be done."

Ald. Whitehouse's motioin, seconded by Ald. Copping, for a $1,500 appropriation, carried, and was subsequently allowed by the committee of the whole.

Caretaker Wanted

On motion of Ald. Copping and Gordon, tenders for taking care of Victoria and Central Parks will be invited.

One Band

Ald. Whitehouse spoke for the organization of local bands into one good Citizen's Band. Such an organization for city purposes, he thought, would be more satisfactory all round.

Ald. Crowe: "That has always been in my mind."

Ald. Copping concurred in this view.

Ald. Crowe: "Give one band a grant of $1.000 to play for the public as required, instead of granting a smaller sum to two or three bands.

It transpired in discussion that the 57th. Regiment Band refused $200 last year, and Ald. Gordon and Copping declared they shouldn't get a grant then.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1920.

MORE HOUSES FOR PETERBOROUGH.

THE HOUSING CAPACITY of this city is now taxed to the limit. No one realizes this as do the manufacturers and other employers of labor, who would not hesitate to extend their operations if they could secure the necessary help, and this is impossible so long as there is a lack of housing accommodation for the families who otherwise could be brought to the city. Mr. W. R. Breyfogle made this clear in his address to the Board of Trade the other night when he stated that the employers of the city were opposed to the bringing to Peterborough any more industries until a number of houses had been provided to care for the strangers.

The Housing Commission appear ready for business. There is no reason why a system that has been successfully tried out in other cities should not be adopted here. This plan has long since passed the experimental stage. Municipalities that have undertaken the task of putting up houses for the working classes propose this coming season to venture still further.

There are plenty of available sites in the city limits for the purpose in view. It has also been suggested that the King Edward Park, now the property of the city, be utilized as a location for these municipal-built houses. There is room on this property for at least fifty homes, and these dwellings would be convenient to the factories, to the schools and churches, an ideal location, in short, for such a community.

A well-known resident of the city suggested to The Review the other day that a local company be formed to purchase the Oriental Hotel building and that the structure be remodelled into apartments. There could be secured in this way accommodation for forty or fifty families. Of course, the necessary changes would be expensive, but as much can be said for any style of building that may be undertaken these days. The walls and roof are already in place, at least. It does seem too bad that in this time of house shortage so large a structure should be allowed to stand idle right in the heart of the city.

QUALITY THE HALL-MARK.

URGING GOOD workmanship and maximum production as Labor's contribution to the Made in Canada campaign, the Canadian Labor Press, in its February issue, contends that "quality should be the hall-mark of Canadian products. It is the guarantee needed to ensure the success of the Made in Canada movement." "The time," it says, "seems to be curiously one of new political parties and class platforms. There is need for a national platform constructed in the interests of all the people, and for such a platform the Canadian Labor Press suggests and endorses the following planks:

Public support of the home market through purchase of Made in Canada goods.

Development of export trade.

Scientific determination and utilization of natural resources.

Maximum production in field and factory.

National thrift and rigid reduction of imports from the United States."

A CLASH OF AUTHORITY.

A FEDERAL FORM of government certainly has its drawbacks, breeding as it does class and local prejudices. Clashes between the powers of the central authority and that of the various states and provinces are inevitable. No matter how clearly these may be defined by the Constitution or terms of Confederation, the time of the higher courts is taken up to a large extent in interpreting the terms of the agreement.

In the United States a nation-wide prohibitory law is in force, a law more drastic than any temperance measures ever given effect in any country. Not all of the States, and by no means the people in all the States, are unanimously in favor of these sumptuary restrictions. Some of the State governments propose to set up in opposition to the Federal authority and to repeal or at least amend the temperance law. But the central powers are jealous of their prerogative and have served notice on the States that show signs of independence that the new regulation will be enforced at any and all cost. The powerful Federal machinery is at the disposal of Congress. Armed United States officials have been sent into rebellious sections to see that the law is observed. Others have been threatened with military action unless they submit to the will of the majority. The situation, especially when considered in the light of United States history, cannot be regarded as other than serious.

It was this very principle, this insistence on State rights, that caused the American Civil War. The people in the southern section of the republic had their own views on the tariff and slavery question, and they backed up these opinions to the point of armed resistance. That old problem has been revived. Is the minority bound to submit to the will of those who can show the greatest numerical strength?

There is one advantage in the American form of government over that which prevails in Canada, and that is the provision in the Constitution by which a law may be made nation-wide in its application. All that is required to change the Constitution is a two-thirds majority of Congress and a three-fourths vote of the States. The latter vote may be registered by the Legislature, or the question may be referred to the people in the form of a referendum. This was the procedure by which the prohibitory law now in force was made general.

Canada finds itself in a strange position today. Eight of the nine Provinces are practically dry. The ninth acts as barroom for the others, and can flood them with imports of liquor. It has not been decided with legal exactitude that the Dominion Government has jurisdiction to prohibit the importation. If that step is ever taken by the Federal Parliament, long and tiresome litigation is certain to ensue, litigation that will not stop short of the highest court in the Empire. There will always remain a weak spot in the Canadian constitution or at least until the constitution is amended. It will be found in all probability that it is just as impossible to pass a general prohibitory enactment as it is to adopt universal legislation for the regulation of marriages, divorces, labor affairs and the like.

WORTH MORE THAN THE MAN.

IN THE WAKE of the payment of $125,000 for "Babe" Ruth, the baseball player, comes the word from England that Major August Belmont has sold the famous stallion Tracery for $179,670. This would indicate that the animal is worth more than the man. The $100,000 race horse already is set down in sporting history, but the $200,000 baseball player is yet to come. Only twice in the annals of the turf has a thoroughbred brought more than the price which was obtained for Tracery. It is interesting to note that the buyer of the stallion is an Argentinain cattle dealer who is reputed to have made millions during the war.

IRELAND'S OPPORTUNITY.

IRELAND HAS NOW the opportunity to have most of its reasonable national aspirations realized, says the Guelph Daily Herald, and every true friend and well wisher of that country will indulge in the hope that the Irish factions can see their way clear to unite and at least give a trial to the home rule measure which was brought before the British House of Commons last week.

For generations Irishmen have been demanding complete self-government in all matters of purely Irish interest, and this in a very large degree is granted by the measure of government offered to the Irish people. The present bill adheres closely to the measure which was outlined by the Premier last December. The main feature of the project is the setting up of two parliaments in Ireland, one for the North and the other for the South. The bill is based on the doctrine that there can be no separation of Ireland from Great Britain, but it contemplates the largest measure of self-government that is possible under the circumstances. There will be ample opportunity to develop the Federal system to the fullest extent, and in the course of time to establish a united Parliament for the whole of Ireland.

There will be a council which will derive its powers from these two parliaments, and the members will be selected by these two bodies, and will be responsible to them. These legislatures will have control of education, local government, agriculture, transportation, municipal affairs, insurance and the collection of taxes, while matters of more serious import to the Empire, foreign affairs, defence, navigation and the higher judiciary, are reserved for the Imperial Parliament, in which Ireland will have representation.

The proceeds of land annuities will be given as a free gift to the two parliaments, and it is estimated that this will amount to £3,000,000 a year. This sum, or some other equitable provision will be made for the maintenance of the two parliaments, if the Government's bill is accepted.

It is too early to forecast the reception of the bill in Ireland. The division and strife have become so acute and there is so much riot and lawlessness, that the whole question is problematical. It remains to be seen how extensive the reversion is from Sinn Feinism to Nationalism.

HERBERT H. ASQUITH COMES BACK.

THE SUN and New York Herald says: It is only necessary to compare the vote by which the Scottish burgh of Paisley sends back Herbert H. Asquith to the House of Commons with that cast in the same district at the general election in December, 1918, to realize to what an extent he former Prime Minister now appeals to the Liberal party he led so long and to what an extent Mr. Lloyd George's influence has waned.

Mr. Asquith polled 14,736 votes, the Laborite 11,902, while the Unionist received only 3,795. On the other occasion Sir J. M. McCallum, an Asquith Liberal, headed the list with 7,542 votes; the Independent, supported by the Conservatives and Lloyd George Liberals, got 7,436, while the Laborite came last with 7,201.

Once more the Labor and Socialist Radicals will be face to face with a Liberal party and a real Liberal leader. Mr. Asquith has the experience, the parliamentary wisdom and the great personal qualities which fit him to guide the Opposition through a crisis which will end either in power or disaster.

A PECULIAR SITUATION.

(Detroit Free Press.)

The shareholders of the Grand Trunk having voted to sell out the system to the Canadian Government, Canada will soon be the greatest proprietor of railroads in the world. But there is one particular feature to the proposed deal. Some of the Grand Trunk lines lie within the boundaries of the United States, and we will have a foreign government administering them. However, the Interstate Commerce Commission will have jurisdiction over these lines, just as if they were owned by United States citizens, and will be in a position to regulate the rates charged. Here we will have a commission of the United States dictating to a foreign government, and the foreign government will have to obey orders.

THE UNREST ON THE FARMS OF ONTARIO

(By Rob Roy in Toronto Sunday World.)

What is the great problem today confronting Ontario, Canada, the continent—what, but rural depopulation?

People for years have been deserting the farms and crowding into the towns and cities. That this is an evil everybody admits. Government, press and church have been discussing the problem and trying to find a solution. The war and the munition factories literally stripped the farms, and few of the workers since the armistice have found their way back to the old concession lines. Labor last year was harder to secure on the farm than during any war year.

But the farmers and their families have got a new viewpoint of the subject during the present winter, one that is gonig to have a tremendous influence on the future of this country. Hundreds of families that never before thought of stopping farming, declare that this is their last winter at the business.

What Are the Reasons?

What are the reasons? In the first place, many farmers say they have been trying to carry on with very little help. Then the dry summer and fall caused a serious shortage of water for stock. This was further aggravated by the fact that December was unusually cold, with little or no snowfall, the result that ponds and streams that had furnished water for stock during the memory of the oldest inhabitant were frozen to the bottom.

With wells dry or frozen up, some districts have had to haul water for miles for hundreds of cattle. The badly drifted roads, often impassable, and the extreme cold, soon filling barrels and tanks, make this water hauling a most serious business.

Then the "flu" has brought a "reign of terror" into country districts. While the number of deaths has not been great, whole families have been prostrated, and how to get the stock attended to with the men of the farm sick and no water, is a most serious matter.

Nurses Unobtainable.

When pneumonia is present a nurse seems indispensable, but hardly anyone can be secured in the country. The drifted roads, no men to shovel them, makes it sometimes impossible for the doctors to make their rounds and a cloud of uncertainty and dread hangs over the concession lines.

What will be the result? Most of the farmers financially, are on easy street. Many were living there years ago, but the war years have moved them many numbers up the street. This is what they say:

FAMILY NO. 1.

If we live through this winter we will never spend another on the farm. We will sell all our stock in the fall, close up the gate and go south for the winter.

FAMILY NO. 2.

We will have a sale in the fall, keep only the horses and two cows, and practically retire on the farm. Then if we get the "flu" the chores won't be worrying us.

FAMILY NO. 3.

We have bought a house in town. We will live there in winter, return to the farm in the summer, and farm easy, cutting out all the cows but two.

FAMILY NO. 4.

We are going to live in town altogether and use our farm for pasture, buying stockers in the spring. We will then be able to thoroughly enjoy the summer and our car.

In Lonely Farm Houses.

The loneliness of the people where all are sick in a farm house is indescribable. This winter is giving thousands a dread of country life that they never had before.

This article does not strive to build up a theory, but is simply endeavoring to state a fact.

One thing, however, is sure—the state of society, chaotic as it is, will be more seriously disturbed this winter than ever it has been before.

FIRST LECTURE ON "FIRST AID"

TWO MONTHS COURSES OPENED IN C. P. R. FREIGHT OFFICES

The first of a two months' course of lectures on "First Aid" was held in the C. P. R. freight office on Charlotte street yesterday afternoon. The company invited the members of the local police force to take in the lectures and as many as could be spared from duty were present to hear Mr. Noble yesterday. Books illustrating the work of the course were distibnted to assist all in making the best of the instruction.

At the commencement Mr. Noble stated that these lectures would take place at the same time every Tuesday afternoon for eight weeks. He emphasized the fact that first aid instruction was not to take the place of doctor but simply to fit the students to render the necessary assistance until the arrival of a physician.

The use of stimulants was taken up first. This was to quicken the action of the heart. Alcohol was not a good stimulent as its effects were too temporary. Hot drinks with lots of sugar were far better for this purpose than alcohol.

"Never take it for granted that a person is dead. Always render first aid in any case as you can't do any harm to a dead man and if he is alive first aid will help him," said Mr. Noble. Bleeding was a matter which could not wait for a doctor as many other injuries could. A person might bleed to death long before the arrival of a doctor. He thought that first aid should have been taught in the schools as part of education. Mr. Noble pointed out the pages in his books treating with anatomy and advised his hearers to study the different bones in the body but not to bother with any technical names but use common place names wherever possible.

He then turned to fractures pointing out the three different ways in which fractures could occur. They were direct violence, indirect violence and muscular action. Compound fractures were a more serious matter which were best illustrated by fractures caused by bullet wounds. Then there was a complicated fracture which would include other injuries besides the broken bone such as the bone being driven into the lung puncturing it. In ignorance there was always a danger of turning a simple fracture into a compound or complicated fracture.

Mr. Noble described six forms of fractures and the different ways they were generally caused. He told how serious a thing it was to cut the artery of the thigh pointing out that in this case unless bleeding was immediately stopped by first aid action the patient would be dead in a few minutes.

He described the symptoms which showed where the fracture was. They were pain, loss of power, swelling, deformity and irregularity of the bone. There were two other symptoms but these should not be looked for by first aid men.

Mr. Noble then illustrated the use of the triangular bandage. A keen interest in the lectures was shown by all the employees who readily recognized the necessity, especially in railroad work, of a clear knowledge in first aid.

Another lecture for the women employes was held from 3 to 4 and for the passenger station employes from 4 to 5. This arrangement was made so that all employes could take part in the course.

APSLEY

Apsley, March 3.— Mr. William Scott and little daughter left last week for Saintfield, County Down, Ireland.

There are still a few cases of scarlet fever in the community.

Rev. J. H. Beck has been holding some cottage meetings in and around the village. The last one was held at the home of Mrs. Wellington Lean. The service was principally a song service, Mrs. W. Lean presiding at the organ. Quite a number were in attendance. All persons are cordially invited to attend these meetings.

A Ladies' Aid Society in connection with the Methodist Church will be organized in the near future.

Congratulations to Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Beck on the birth of a son recently.

Mrs. Benjamin Coones is visiting friends at Peterborough.

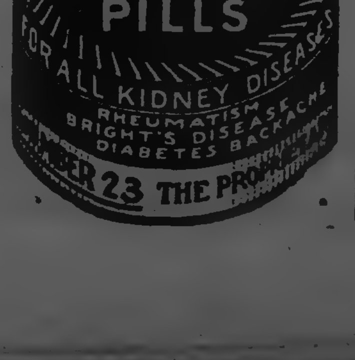
The death occurred at Hamilton on February 18 of Mrs. George Shaver. The late Mrs. Shaver was a daughter of Mr. Isaac Lean of this community death being due to influenza. She leaves to mourn her loss besides a husband and little daughter, a father, mother, four sisters and two brothers all of whom have our sympathy in their bereavement. The remains were interred at Hamilton.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Lean have returned from attending the funeral of their daughter Maud, at Hamilton.

We are sorry to learn that Miss Eliza Clegg, who has been ill for the past month still remains poorly.

The movement in memory of the soldiers who paid the supreme sacrifice has arrived, it having been ordered some time ago. It will be erected in a conspicuous place in the village.

Miss Myrtle Windsor of Toronto is spending a few days at her home here.



ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Sir Adam Beck was born at Baden, Ont., on June 30, 1867, and received his early education at the Baden public schools. Later he attended Dr. Tassie's School at Galt, Ont., and the Rockwood Academy.

He was employed with his father in the latter's iron foundry business and milling at Baden, from whence they removed to Galt in 1880 and commenced the manufacture of veneering thin lumber and boxes. In 1884 they moved to London, Ont., and built an extensive plant there and established branch plants in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg.

* * *

Adam Beck came to the forefront first as a municipal man and was mayor of the city of London, Ont., in 1902, 1903, and 1904. He was elected to the Ontario legislature for London in 1902 and re-elected in 1909 and 1911.

In 1913 he was appointed a commissioner to investigate the development and distribution of power from Niagara Falls and has been closely identified with the question of supplying cheap electrical power to the people of Ontario. He introduced the new power bill in Ontario Assembly, creating a Commission, called the Hydro-Electric Power Commission in May, 1906. He was appointed Chairman of the Commission in June of the same year.

SIR ADAM BECK.

* * *

Sir Adam Beck is a great public man in his community of London and holds office in various local associations. He is known far and wide for his interest in thoroughbred horses and both Sir Adam and Lady Beck have won numerous prizes with their horses, at Canadian and at International competitions and shows.

Sir Adam Beck, although he retired from the Cabinet on the formation of the Hearst government, has been popularly known as the Minister of Power. He entered the Whitney Cabinet as Minister without portfolio in 1905.

He was knighted in 1914 in recognition of his services with the Hydro Power Commission.

* * *

Sir Adam Beck is not a man of great wealth, but he gave more to patriotic causes during the war than any man in London. His personal cash contributions to the Patriotic Fund, the Red Cross, etc., total more than $50,000.

Almost continuously since the time he established Byron Sanitarium, he has carried the deficits of that institution on his own note, and today it is claimed that he has accepted personal responsibility for $15,000 of sanitarium debts in order that the place may be able to carry on its work on behalf of victims of tuberculosis, who are unable to pay their way.

The founding of the Sanitarium was based on an apprehension Sir Adam felt in the early childhood of his little daughter when physicians told him that her health was menaced by tuberculosis. Sir Adam then resolved to bring within the reach of the sufferer from the White Plague the best facilities the world could offer in his battle to regain health and vigor. Less than a year ago he erected a nurses' home that cost $25,000 for the Byron Institution, and when he handed it over to the London Health Association he said in simple earnestness that it was erected "in gratitude to God for the complete recovery of our daughter from a serious illness."

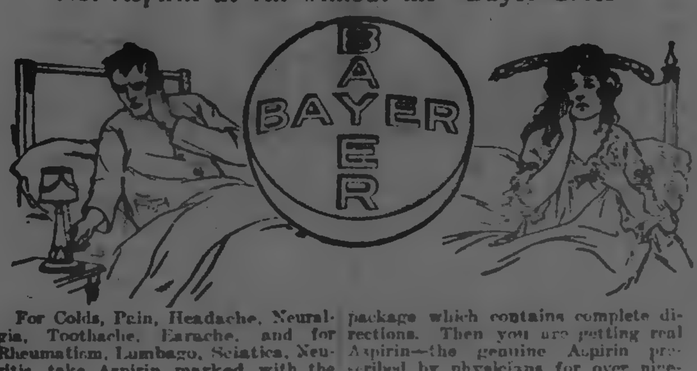
ONLY TABLETS MARKED "BAYER" ARE ASPIRIN

Not Aspirin at All without the "Bayer Cross"



For Colds, Pain, Headache, Neuralgia, Toothache, Earache, and for Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Neuritis, take Aspirin marked with the name "Bayer" or you are not taking Aspirin at all.

Accept only "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" in an unbroken "Bayer" package which contains complete directions. Then you are getting real Aspirin—the genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over nineteen years. Now made in Canada.

Handy tin boxes containing 12 tablets cost but a few cents. Druggists also sell larger "Bayer" packages.

There is only one Aspirin—"Bayer"—You must say "Bayer"

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

A Polite Stranger

By JOHN G. LARNED

The two Record girls were more pleased with the social life of Rome than the archaeological curiosities, though the younger, Edith, not only enjoyed the curiosities, but seemed bent on seeking them herself. Italy is not a safe country to go about in by oneself, but Edith Record did a great deal of rambling. She was repeatedly warned to cease hunting for relics of ancient Rome in the environs, but would not listen to the warnings.

One day, taking her brother Dick, fourteen years old, with her, she got on top of one of the double decker trolley cars that run to and from different environs of Rome and went to a place in the Alban hills. There she and Dick walked up a road till they came to a plateau. They were hunting a spot where recent archaeological discoveries had been made. Not succeeding in finding it, they looked for some one of whom to ask its location. Seeing a man on horseback approaching, they resolved to make inquiries of him. When they met him they noticed that, though dressed in a rather shabby velveteen suit, his face indicated a man of breeding.

"Could you tell us," said Dick to the stranger, "the location of the recent archaeological find?"

"I think you will find it over there—a short distance from here—about five minutes' walk."

He spoke in a soft voice, which was almost musical, keeping his eyes fixed on Edith admiringly.

"Thank you," replied Dick, while Edith nodded to the same effect.

"Perhaps," added the stranger, "I had better show you the way."

Despite their protests, he dismounted and, leading his horse, walked with them to a point near the excavations. There he stopped, took off his hat politely and said:

"Follow this path for a few minutes and you will reach the spot you seek."

"You have been very kind," said Dick. "When you are in Rome come and see us. You will find us at No. — on the Corso."

"Does the young lady join in the invitation?"

Edith inclined her head in a mute assent.

Having found the place they were looking for and examined the interior of a house of ancient Rome, they retraced their steps to the trolley and thence back to the city.

One evening during the following winter, when social functions were in order, the Records gave a ball. It was not a large affair, but very select. Among the guests who were entering Edith saw, clad in evening dress like the other men, the stranger who had conducted her and her brother to the excavations. She was surprised to see him avail himself of the invitation he had received to be present at a formal reception, but there seemed nothing to do under the circumstances except to welcome him. Moving forward to where he was, she expressed herself as pleased to see him and to present him to others of her family. He assented, and the introduction was given, though Edith, not knowing his name, was obliged to present him as "the gentleman who showed Dick and me to the excavations."

The stranger remained but a very short time, leaving before scarcely any of the guests had noticed him. He told Edith that he had made some archaeological investigations near the place where she had met him and had just opened some graves and exhumed articles placed in them 600 years before the Christian era. If she and her brother would meet him there he would be happy to have her take some of these archaeological treasures from the graves where they were found. Indeed he had called for the purpose, not knowing of the function given that evening.

To take things with her own hands that had been in one spot for 2,500 years was a delightful anticipation to Edith Record. On the day that she had appointed with the stranger she and her brother went to the place designated. The stranger met them with a carriage and drove them to a retired spot where were some graves recently opened. He opened some more near by and exposed a skeleton in each, surrounded by various trinkets, which he invited Edith to take out with her own hands. She did so and thanked him for them.

"And now," he said to Dick, putting them into the carriage, "can you find your way back?"

"Are you not going to return with us?" asked Edith, surprised.

"It would cost me my life to do so."

"Your life!"

"Yes, signorina. I risked it the other night when I went to your house that I might arrange to do you this little favor. I am Nicholi Sebastiano, a bandit. A couple of carabineers, who followed you to protect you, caught sight of me when I started to drive you here. They are doubtless much distressed about you, expecting you to be held for ransom. They are probably now deliberating what to do to save you. Go back and tell them that Nicholi Sebastiano, having been a gentleman, cannot sink so low as to rob a woman. But permit me to warn you, signorina, not to go about in this part of Italy unprotected."

True enough, the girl and her brother found the policemen deliberating in their behalf and thunderstruck to see them return in safety.

In the Days of Beaver Hats.

In the olden days in the United States soon after the Revolutionary war, a good beaver hat became a kind of family heirloom, and was handed down from father to son. For some strange reason it was considered to be rather frivolous and extravagant to be seen wearing a new beaver hat, and it was the custom when a man bought one to leave it out in stormy weather before wearing it, to "take the newness off."

Times Have Changed.

It is said that the post office in Philadelphia will lose $15,000 a day as the result of going from the three-cent back to the two-cent rate for letters.

That happens to be exactly the sum which Benjamin Franklin was able to turn over to Great Britain in annual revenues from the post offices in the colonies in 1774, after he had put in four years of hard work in creating a postal system.

To Take Baby's Picture.

Anyone who has tried it knows it is a difficult task to take an indoor picture of an active child. By placing the subject near a sunny window, but not in the direct sunlight, and with a sheet fixed at one side, high enough so that it reaches above the subject's head, good results may be obtained. If the child sits on the floor, the sheet will be high enough thrown over two chairs.

War Shipping Organization Demobilizes

One of the Transports used by the British Ministry of Shipping (Canada). Sir Arthur Harris, inset.

The British Ministry of Shipping (Canada) which during its five and one half years of existence practically controlled the export trade of Canada, inland and overseas, clearing over 3,000 transports and liners from Canadian Ports and Portland, will, according to an announcement by Sir Arthur Harris, its Director General, be demobilized on March 31st, next.

All correspondence relating to the affairs of the Ministry in Canada after that date is to be addressed to Mr. E. M. Raeburn, Director General, British Ministry of Shipping, No. 165 Broadway, New York.

The activities of the Ministry in Canada, including the Overseas Department which it succeeded, date from August 1914, at which time the Dominion Government, appreciating the importance of securing the service of an expert Overseas Officer, conferred with the heads of the large Canadian Transportation Companies with the result that the then President of the Canadian Pacific placed at the service of the Government Mr., now "Sir" Arthur Harris, who acted as Director Overseas Transport up to the 5th September 1918, at which date the Department was absorbed into the British Ministry of Shipping, Sir Arthur Harris continuing in charge as Director General in Canada.

During the period 1914-18 the Director General practically controlled the export trade of Canada, inland and overseas, and that the work was well and impartially performed was evidenced from the fact that the Railway and Steamship Interests were satisfied, and the general business of the Country continued with a minimum of disturbance.

The development of the Department may be realized by the number of vessels cleared from Canadian Ports and Portland between the 25th August 1914 and 31st December 1919, viz:—

1914	1915	1916	1917	1918	1919
Transports.	Transports.	Transports.	Transports. and Liners.	Transports. and Liners.	Transports. and Liners.
40.	122.	362.	737.	875.	975.

During the above mentioned period in excess of sixteen million gross tons of munitions, war material, and supplies, were moved inland and overseas.

The Director General was supported by an efficient staff drawn from the service of the Canadian Pacific. They did good work for Canada and the Empire, and the fact that it was done quietly, almost to the point of self-effacement, is recognized and appreciated.

The General Public little knew the onerous obligations devolving on the successful administration of an undertaking of such magnitude.

When the history of Canada's participation in the Great War is chronicled not the least of its achievements will have been the successful administration of its transport service.

The report of the Select Committee (Imperial Government) on national expenditure issued as a White Paper in London on the 5th January last pays a deserving tribute to the effective and economical administration of the affairs of the Ministry of Shipping not only in the United Kingdom but in various Outports of the World to which the operations of the Shipping Control was extended.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre to Hair.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

NO WIRES NEEDED

Invention Makes It Easy to Talk Through Space.

New Radiophone Can Be Connected to Ordinary Electric Light Socket in Any Building—Means Much to World.

The successful application of alternating current—the 60-cycle alternating current of any ordinary household or office building electric light installation—to the field of the wireless telephone is announced by Dr. Lee de Forest as the first result of a series of after-the-war experiments in the application of the new radio art to the purposes of peace.

Elimination of the "hum" is, accordingly, made possible when the wireless telephone circuit is now connected with the ordinary electric light line, a problem which, it may be said, has long confronted radio engineers.

Another advance in wireless progress to result from the new circuit employed by the inventor is the elimination of the high-powered generating stations for the production of direct current, the cost and complication of which has heretofore been beyond the reach of the ordinary layman.

All that is required now, in the way of voltage, is any ordinary lamp socket in house or office building. Remove the lamp, "plug in" a pony wireless panel and do your talking. That is what the engineers of the De Forest laboratories have been doing for the last several months between Highbridge, Westchester, and downtown, New York.

"After several months of constant effort and experimentation, in the field of the wireless telephone," said Dr. de Forest, "it is more than gratifying to be able to announce that we have at last succeeded in applying the principles of the radio art in such a way that any one may now, without technical knowledge, talk in space, without wires, from house to house and from city to city, by utilizing alternating current now employed in lighting the house, and when we stop to consider that probably nine-tenths of the electric light installations in the rural districts supply alternating current, the great benefit thus placed at the disposal of the world is readily observed.

"Such a feat may be, no doubt, a little surprising to the ordinary layman, but there is no question today but the dawn of a new wireless age—not for experimenters and laboratory workers, but for the public at large—is already here. Coupled with the ordinary lamp socket found in any house throughout the country, the new wireless panel will do the trick. The few requirements in the way of operations are no more difficult than calling central. In fact, with the new pony wireless there is no need of disturbing central. One may call the other desired party by wireless in person."—New York Evening Post.

What a Girl Did

By EVERETT P. CLARKE.

When I went to work for Farmer Grimshaw at the beginning of the harvesting there were three other hands employed by him. We took our meals at the farmhouse, but slept in an outhouse, in which each man had a room to himself. I was especially pleased at not being obliged to sleep with another, for I didn't like any of the hands, and one of them looked to me like a jailbird.

One morning I got up, as usual, long before the sun. My room faced the west, and there was but one window in it; consequently it was half dark when I dressed. I noticed as I went out to work that my shoes didn't feel easy on my feet, but thought very little about it. So long as they didn't pinch me I didn't mind the rest. When breakfast was ready we all went into the farmhouse, and while we were sitting at the table several men—they were policemen in plain clothes—came in and arrested every one of us farm hands and ordered us to take off our shoes. When we had done so they chalked our initials on the sole of each shoe, and two of them went out, while the others remained to see that we stayed where we were.

Now, I remembered that my shoes had not been easy on my feet, and when I took them off I saw that they were not mine. Evidently a substitution had been made during the night. I was seized with a terrible dread, for it seemed to me that this substitution and the arrest had some connection.

Grimshaw's daughter, Eliza, who had from my going to work for her father shown an especial preference for me, was in the breakfast room, where we were held by the police, and I called her to me and asked her what it all meant. She told me that she didn't know unless we were held on suspicion of the murder of Farmer Benton, who was found dead in his bed shortly before our arrest and $500 that he had drawn from the bank, intending to pay off a mortgage, gone. I told her about the changing of my shoes for others, and she added that she had heard the policemen talking about tracks leading from the outhouse where the hands slept to Benton's house and back.

It was all plain to me now. Some one of my fellow hands had done the murder and had worn my shoes in order to throw the crime on me. I told Eliza of my fears, and she turned pale. I saw her fix her gaze on each of the other prisoners in turn, and when she had gone the rounds she whispered to me:

"It's Brown."

Brown was the man whom I have mentioned as looking like a jailbird. After Eliza's hitting on him I watched him closely myself for a few minutes and saw under a very quiet exterior a restless eye. Eliza saw that I was very much broken up by this effort to fix a murder on me and said sympathetically, "Don't worry; it will come out all right."

She had scarcely spoken the words when the two policemen who had gone out with the shoes came back and right up to me, paying no attention to the others.

"A job has been put up on me," I said. "Those shoes are not mine."

My remarks had no especial effect on them, so far as I could see. They told me I was under arrest for the murder of Ezra Benton and told the others they would be held as witnesses. As we were marched off I saw Eliza making for the outhouse, where we had slept. A faint hope sprang up within me that she was going to look for some evidence to clear me, but this I knew was not to be expected.

There was not much doing in the courts, and my trial came on without delay. Farmer Grimshaw kindly employed a lawyer to defend me, and my advocate had a long talk with me in which he questioned me closely about the substitution of the shoes for mine, for the only proof against me was that the shoes taken off my feet by the police fitted exactly in the tracks made in the soft earth—it had rained the day before the murder—between the outhouse and Farmer Benton's. A worn place in the sole of one shoe and the heel of the other showed plainly in the indentation. Unless we could prove that the shoes were not mine it would go hard with me, and that would be a pretty hard matter to prove. The shoes found on Brown were very much smaller than mine.

When the case came to trial the police, who had made the discovery of the tracks and the shoes that had made them, and my lawyer were all put to shame by a girl. Eliza Grimshaw had done a bit of detective work that saved me.

While the trial was on Eliza gave her secret to my defender, and he at once put her on the stand. He drew from her that she was familiar with the soil between the outhouse and the home of the murdered man; that on the morning of the arrest she had examined dirt left on the floor of the rooms in the outhouse. She had found a yellow clay recently turned up in Benton's yard in Brown's room and before my door, but not in my room. She had collected bits of this caked dirt and produced it.

The result of this was that Brown was charged with the murder, and in time I was acquitted and he was convicted. I have thus far spent the remainder of my life in the service of Eliza Grimshaw.

What causes
Indigestion

An excess of acid in the stomach sours the food and starts fermentation. Distressing gases form. Your meals don't digest but lay like lumps of lead. Then you have heartburn, flatulence, fullness, belching, headache, and real misery in the stomach and intestines.

A few tablets of "Pape's Diapepsin" bring relief almost as soon as they reach the stomach. "Pape's Diapepsin" costs little at drug stores.

TROUBLE IN BUDAPEST.

Hungarian Cabinet Resigned in Opposition to Regent Horthy.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Budapest, March 3.—Immediately after Admiral Horthy had assumed his duties as Regent of Hungary the announcement was made by Premier Huszar that the cabinet had resigned. The Regent asked the Ministry to retain office, pending the formation of a new government.

It appears that Admiral Horthy asked the consent of the Great Powers before assuming his Regency and that he accepted it on condition that he would be empowered to dissolve the National Assembly if he found it necessary.

IDEA OF ONE GOOD

Ald. Crowe said Mr. Rupert Gliddon, master of the 57th Regimental Band is a bandmaster who cannot be duplicated in Ontario for musical qualifications and leadership.

Later on, in the Committee of the Whole, Ald. Crowe pointed out that Mr. Gliddon had spent $3,000 in building his Conservatory of Music Hall for public accommodation, and Council follows by exempting and financially assisting the veterans, who rent their hall for public use. This the alderman hinted, allowed competition to the disadvantage of Mr Gliddon, who, however, he said, had lodged no complaint. "Don't deprive Mr. Gliddon of a chance to earn his band salary."

In the Parks Committee, Ald. Crowe and Copping moved for an appropriation of $1,000 for band purposes.

In Committee of the Whole this appropriation was allowed, but how it shall be applied will be gone into more fully before the estimates and rates are struck.

.... Who Were There ....

There were in attendance, chairman Ald. Gainey, the Mayor and Aldermen Whitehouse and Copping, Gordon and Crowe.

GIRLS! A MASS OF WAVY, GLEAMY BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Let "Danderine" save and glorify your hair

In a few moments you can transform your plain, dull, flat hair. You can have it abundant, soft, glossy and full of life. Just get at any drug or toilet counter a small bottle of "Danderine" for a few cents. Then moisten a soft cloth with the Danderine and draw this through your hair taking one small strand at a time. Instantly, yes, immediately, you have doubled the beauty of your hair. It will be a mass, so soft, lustrous, fluffy and so easy to do up. All dust, dirt and excessive oil is removed.

Let Danderine put more life, color, vigor and brightness in your hair. This stimulating tonic will freshen your scalp, check dandruff and falling hair, and help your hair to grow long, thick, strong and beautiful.

TURKISH NAVY IS TO BE BROKEN UP

ARMY WILL BE LIMITED AND CONFINED TO ASIA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, March 3.—The disposition of the Turkish navy was definitely settled by the Allied Supreme Council today when it decided that the Peace Treaty should provide that the war ships be broken up. The Turkish army will be reduced to such a point that it would not be effective against another country.

Paris, March 3.—Turkey's army will be limited to the number of troops necessary to maintain order in Asia Minor, according to the Journal which says that Turkey will be compelled to kepe her armed forces on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus.

DIVORCE FOR CANADA

Immediate Establishment of a Court in Ontario Urged.

Toronto, March 3.—Uniformity of laws on divorce for Canada was the key-note urged by President Gash in his address to the Ontario Bar Association, which opened its fourteenth annual meeting at Osgoode Hall this morning.

In its report to the association the committee on law reform recommended immediate establishment in Ontario of a divorce court.

A Story of Stevenson.

After one of Dumas' plays which он saw presented in Paris and in which a man employs an unworthy stratagem against a woman Robert Louis Stevenson wrote:

"I came forth from that performance in a breathing heat of indignation. On the way down the Francais stairs I trod on an old gentleman's toes, whereupon, with that suavity which so well becomes me, I turned about to apologise and on the instant, repenting me of that intention, stopped the apology midway and added something in French to this effect: 'No. You are one of the persons who have been applauding that piece. I retract my apology.'

"Said the old Frenchman, laying his hand on my arm and with a smile that was truly heavenly in temperance, irony, good nature and knowledge of the world, 'Ah, monsieur, vous etes bien jeune' (Ah, sir, you are very young)."

WARSAW

(Special Correspondence.)

Owing to ill health, Rev. Mr. Knox was unable to take his two Northern appointments, Zion and Bethel.

It is hoped the people of Warsaw and vicinity will not forget the sale of farm stock and implements belonging to the late Mr. A. Miles of Clarina, March 3rd.

Mr. Allen Taylor spent the week end, the guest of his parents.

Miss Melissa and Miss Rhoda Alford spent Sunday in Warsaw the guest of their sister, Mrs. P. H. Lloyd.

Miss Alice Wason leaves on Monday for Peterborough, where she will train as a nurse.

Mr. Harry Blewett and Mr. Harold Tighe, spent Sunday in Warsaw with friends.

Mrs. C. Bowen attended the funeral of her niece, Miss Jean at Young's Point on Saturday.

Miss Elsie Tucker returned to her home on Friday after spending a few weeks visiting in Lakefield, Peterborough and Indian River.

Mrs. R. H. Alford of Lakefield is spending a few days the guest of her daughter, Mrs. P. H. Lloyd.

Miss Elsie Tucker is spending a few days in Peterborough with friends.

Mr. Verne Selkirk spent Sunday the guest of his parents.

Mr. Fred. Lonsdale, who has returned from England is spending a few days with Mr. Levi Payne.

Rev. Mr. Roberts of McMaster University, conducted the services in the Baptist Church Sunday last. His address was on the Foward Movement

The boys of the Dummer ctpital easily defeated Norwood in the return game by a score of 19-7. Both teams showed good team work and gave a fine exhibition of fast hockey Watson starred for Norwood, while Payne made an excellent showing for Warsaw.

The line up: Norwood—Goal, Patterson, defense, Watson and Cardwell centre, McKelvic; wings, Wier and Rogers.

Warsaw: Goal—Wason; defense, H Darlingand Bell; centre, R. Darling; wings, H. Darling and Payne; subs. Crowe and Douglas.—Referee: A. Kemp.

Warsaw-Lagefield

Warsaw and the Grove School Lakefield, played at Warsaw Thursday afternoon. It was the first game the small boys of Warsaw ever played. The score was 9-2 in favor of the Grove. The young players showed a good lively spirit an dwith a little practice, wilu make good. Morgan and McIlena doing excellent work on the defense, while [illegible] worked hard at centre.

Defi to Norwood

We would like to draw the people's attention to the article published in the Norwood Register, giving the score at Norwood as 10-5 in favor of Norwood. Now everybody knows this to be false as well as impossible, for the Warsaw boys allowed their eastern opponents to run the score up to 8-7 just to give them a little better spirit, but if they would like to play again the Warsaw boys will accommodate them at any time on the Brock Street Rink, the losers to pay rink expenses.

Grand Carnival

A grand carnival will be held at Warsaw on Friday night, commencing at seven o'clock. Ice reserved till 9 o'clock for those in costume. Prizes will be on exhibition. Admission, adults 25c. children 15c.

Rifle Club.

A meeting of the Warsaw Rifle Club will be held in Calder's Hall Warsaw, on Saturday evening, March 6th at eight o'clock sharp. A full attendance of old members will be expected and all interested in the club are invited to attend. As the Warsaw Club has always had a large membership they desire to beat the record this coming year.

Mr. Will Cuffe spent Sunday the guest of some Norwood friends.

Mr. Mark Lonsberry got a severe hammering while umpiring a goal at Norwood, being struck several times with the puck.

The ice on the village ring is at the present time second to none, and the young people are advised to make good use of it this week, as the March sun may soon find the bottom.

Don't forget the carnival. Reserved seats on sale at the ticket office.

PROVINCIAL HIGHWAYS.

Complete Announcement of System Promised Shortly.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 3.—Replying to a deputation from Prescott today, Hon. F. C. Biggs announced that the road from Ottawa to Point Fortune will become a provincial highway. Complete anonuncement of the provincial highways system will be made by the Minister in his address before the Good Roads Association this afternoon.

COUNCIL OF LOCAL BOARD OF TRADE

ELECTION LAST NIGHT— CHIEF OFFICIALS TO BE CHOSEN TONIGHT

For three and one half hours yesterday the Council room of the Board of Trade was thronged with members each seriously studying the official ticket of candidates, selecting therefrom and voting for his preferred fifteen.

A charter member said he had never during the thirty-one years of his membership in the Board of Trade seen anything comparable with the number voting and the serious concern of members as to the issue.

Garfield Cameron, chairman of the judges of election said: "The way the members turned out and the earnestness displayed by them in making the election of the council a success was most gratifying in that it was not a case of voting for Bill because he is a good fellow, regardless of his ability to serve; on the contrary realising that the council of the Board of Trade would have much to do in mould the character of our municipal development, everyone seemed anxious to select the best possible slate from the thirty capable men nominated."

Mr. Cameron's associates were: R L. Dobbin, E. L. Payne, F. C. Hungerford and C. E. Smith. These men were kept busy and it was not until ten o'clock last night that the count was finished and the following council declared elected:

Thomas Barrie, Barrie's Limited Furriers; Russell V. Copping, Alderman; Joseph J. Duffus, Manager Duffus Motor Sales; J. Wells Fraser Manager, Bank of Nova Scotia.

John J. Hartley, Building Contractor; Henry R. H. Kenner, Principal Collegiate Institute; Robert K. Kingan President, Kingan Hardware Company George A. Macdonald, Sales Manager The Quaker Oats Company.

William A. Richardson, Secretary Treasurer, Peterborough Canoe Company; Fred. L. Roy, Photographer William Sangster, Engineer, DeLaval Company; Charles E. Sisson, Canadian General Electric Company.

Peter P. Westbye, General Manager William Hamilton Company, Frank Whitehouse, Alderman; and Edgar Worth, General Manager, Canadian Woollens, Limited.

A continuity of policy is assured by the re-election of all the members of the retiring council, who were nominated. These are: Vice-President, Thos Barrie; Frank Whitehouse, Chairman pro tem of the Mercantile Association; John J. Hartley, Building Contractor and Joseph J. Duffus, ex-Mayor, all of whom were members of the executive committee.

The council-elect includes six representatives of manufacturing institutions and four of commercial houses while building, banking, education photography and the City Council have one each. Class or sectional representation seems to have been lost sight of in consideration of the personnel of the new council.

The council-elect will meet and qualify this evening and take up the choice of a President, vice-president treasurer and executive committee.

The duties of the new officiary do not begin until their inauguration at the annual meeting on the 9th of March.

FIRE CHIEF, OFFICERS AND MEN EACH GET AN INCREASE OF $200

This Was Motion of Ald. Gordon and Crowe—Council and Committee Decline to Consider New Car for Chief Grange.

In Committee of the Whole last night Council declared in favor of Ald. Crowe's contention that, based on the increase in the cost of living, a fair raise in salaries for the fire brigade this year would be $200 from and including the Chief downward to the lowest paid man.

On motion of Ald. Gordon and Crowe, Council adopted a resolution that the firemen, including all officers, each get an increase of $200 dating from January 1st last. The schedule of salaries now decided on is as follows, plus $200 for each member named. The figures given below are last year's salaries:

George Grange, Chief	$1700.00
Herbert Johnston, Assistant Chief	1322.50
A. McDonald, Captain	1236.25
James Warde, Lieut.	1207.50
Frank Degen, Lieut.	1207.50
Bert Trotter, Electrican	1250.00
Ed. Marchand, Engineer	1200.00
John Drummond, Motor Driver	1150.00
Harold Howell, Motor Driver	1150.00
George Degen, Motor Driver	1150.00
W. Copperthwaite, Motor Driver	1150.00
E. G. Johnston, Secretary	1150.00
Firemen—
R. Wilson	1150.00
George Crouter	1150.00
Victor LeBarr	1150.00
Bruce Menzies	1150.00
Thos. Hatley	1150.00
James Weyer	1150.00
E. E. Munden	1150.00
Norman Pammett	1150.00
William Jones	1150.00

Firemen Gordon Johnston and Victor LeBarr addressed the committee, and in a comparison with nine cities, showed the cost of living in Peterborough to be $25.25 a week as against a weekly average in nine other places of $23.48.

Fire Chief Grange said he could not do with less than his estimates, but the committee eliminated his item of $2600 for a new Reo car. This was the motion of Ald. Phelan and Crowe.

Duffus Motor Sales, in a communication, offered a new Ford 1920 model for $1825.

The Chief was scheduled at the last meeting of the Fire, Water and Light Committee for an increase of $400, but he was only allowed $200.

arrived. I just saved Mr. and Mrs. Corbett, who were in the top flat, by getting them through the door by crawling on the floor and covering up their heads as the rooms were full of smoke. Mr. Corbett was unable to stand up long enough to get $200 out of his pockets.

"The first hydrant turned in was found frozen after the hose had been laid and before the hose could be re-laid the fire had broken through the roof and made fast headway.

"We were unable to save anything in the apartments as the fire chief thought the walls were unsafe and would not allow anyone to go up. The building and contents were practically destroyed by fire and water.

"Amount of insurance is unknown. The fire was under control when I reported off duty at 350. a.m., leaving P. C. Young in charge.

FARMING CAN BE MADE TO PAY WELL

DEPUTATION ASKS FOR DEMONSTRATION FARM AT NORMAL SCHOOL HERE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 3.—A deputation from Peterborough city and district waited upon Hon. Manning Doherty, Minister of Agriculture, today asking the establishment of a demonstration farm in connection with the Normal School at Peterborough.

Farming Can Pay.

"We want the Government to establish this demonstration farm to prove to young men who take advantage of it that farming can be made to pay, that farming can be operated on a business basis and at profit," Fred E. Wilson, of Peterborough County Council told the Minister.

The U. F. O., County Council, City Council and Industrial Exhibition Board were represented in the deputation, which included Mayor McIntyre, Alds. G. N. Gordon and John Crow, Thos. Thooms, M.P.P.; G. A. Gillespie, ex-M.P.; W. R. Breyfogle, Reg. Turner, Webber Turner, R. Denne, R. B. Rogers, R. T. Lillico, H. G. Webber, Fred. E. Wilson, H. W. Zaptie and R. Grandy.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

BILL TO GIVE RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS POWER IN THIS CONNECTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 3. — Notice has been given by J. E. Armstrong, East Lambton, of a bill to amend the Railway Act, which, if carried, would bring all lake, canal and coastwise traffic in Canada under the Board of Railway Commissioners. A similar bill had been introduced in the preceding session but was defeated.

Many associations, representing both consumers and producers, are said to be in favor of the move, as at the present time, outside of certain steamship lines which are operated by railway companies, vessel men are practically laws themselves in regard to tariffs, and time and manner of calling at ports.

A despatch from Flensburg [illegible] Holstein, states that the Germans living in that territory attempted yesterday to make the district an independent State.

"COMING OF AGE SALE"

3 DAYS ONLY

An Anniversary Event That Marks The Twenty-First Birthday Of This Store

Commencing on Thursday and Continuing Until 9.30 O'clock Next Saturday Night

Twenty-one years ago this store opened its door to the Peterboro public. It has been twenty-one years of continual growth and pleasant relations. From a store of two thousand one hundred and sixty square feet that employed five persons and dealt exclusively in dry good lines it has spread to a departmental store of fifty thousand square feet that supplies this community with widely different kinds of commodities and now employs seventy-five persons. From the opening day to the present time the store policy has been—service, better service and a dollar's worth of goods in return for a dollar and many special events throughout the year that give more than a Dollar's worth in return.

It is only fitting that on the Anniversary of the Twenty-First Birthday of this business that we celebrate its growth and expansion by offering a large assortment of merchandise at prices much below their present day value.

$7.50 FOR A FRESH NEW SPRING HAT

Some Are Satin And Straw, Others Straw Only

We have made up several charming little Hats to sell at his price. We might also mention that several in the assortment are from New York. The color range includes: navy, taupe black, and combinations of brighter shades. The shapes are chin chins, and nearly all have brims that turn back off the face, for Fashion has decreed that such will be greatly worn this season.

Further Economies For The Economical Woman Who Does Fancy Work

$1.69 and $1.75 STAMPED NIGHTGOWNS 79c

The material is a fine white cotton end is in no way imperfect, but the stampings on some are slightly blurred. The sizes are generous. The last time we had them on sale we very nearly sold all of them, but we kept some in reserve for this event.

20c and 25c SOILED WOOL, 3 for 30c

This lot consists of double and single Berlins and the colors are mostly light blue, pink, green and brown. All are broken lines and some are limited to a small quantity of a shade.

12½c "AMERICAN MAID" CROCHET COTTON, 4 for 25c

There is no need for us to introduce the brand. In white the following numbers are obtaintable: 3, 5, 10 and 15; in ecru, 50 and 60.

$12.50 KEYSTONE VACUUM CARPET SWEEPERS FOR $8

We do not hesitate to recommend these excellent Sweepers—they are superior to any other sweeper we know of at this price. They are fully guaranteed, are easy running and have adjustable brush that adapts itself to carpets of various weaves and textures.

: : AT THE EMPIRE : :

"The Day She Paid," a Universal production featuring Francelia Billington as a beautiful clothing model, which will be shown at the Empire Theatre on March 4, 5 and 6, will advance another argument why the double standard should apply to women no less than to masculine sex.

Readers of the Cosmopolitan Magazine will remember this story by Fannie Hurst as "Oats for the Women," under which title is attracted considerable attention and created a great deal of discussion. It concerns Marion Lane, chief model in Adam Kessler's women's wear emporium in New York, who three years previous to the opening of the story, has had an affair with the proprietor of the establishment, having been deceived under promise of marriage. Kessler is a libertine who transfers his attentions from one to another of his feminine employees.

A wealthy merchant from an upstate town, a customer of Kessler's falls in love with Marion and proposes marriage. She discusses the matter with her employer, who advises her to accept the proposal and promises to keep silent concerning their former affair. She marries this man of whom she is really fond, and who is a widower with two daughters, one sixteen and the other a child of four.

Three years later Kessler visits his customer and falls in love with his elder daughter. His proposal of marriage is looked upon with favor by the father, but Marion, knowing the man's true character, tells her husband the man is not fit to marry the girl, whom she has grown to love as her own child. When asked for further details she is forced to tell her own story, in order to save the young girl from a life of wretchedness. Her past revealed, she leaves the house and returns to New York, whither she is followed by her husband and a dramatic situation is the result.

Deadly Arabian Sirocco.

The sirocco or sand storm of the Arabian desert is exceedingly treacherous. It often digs pits two hundred feet deep, scattering the sand for miles around.

Ineffective Hollering.

"De man dat hollers about his bein' jes' as good as any other man," said Uncle Eben, "mos' generally ain' doin' enough useful work to prove his argument."

Uncle Eben Says—

"Chillun must be a heap smarter dan dey once was. It's pufickly beautiful de way dey makes deir parents obey."

Much Gold in Wedding Rings.

More than 7,000 pounds of pure gold are required each year to supply the wedding rings for English brides.

Laissez-Faire.

Laissez-faire means letting alone; a general noninterference with individual freedom of action; the let-alone principle of policy of the government and political economy. The term was first used in France to designate the principle of political economy which would leave industry and trade absolutely free from taxation and restriction by government except so far as required by public peace and order. It has since been extended to include noninterference with any guiltless exercise of the individual will.

Find Date Valuable Food.

Dates form the staple food of the Arabs in a large part of Arabia and are served in some form at every meal. Sirup and vinegar are made from old dates, and by those who disregard the teachings of the Koran a kind of brandy is distilled from them. The date pit is ground and fed to the cows and sheep, so that nothing of the precious fruit may be lost. Whole pits are used as beads and counters for the Arab children in their games on the desert sand.

"Zouave" From Algiers.

"Zouave" is the French name taken from that of a tribe in Algiers and this kind of light infantry was first employed in that country in 1831, the members being Algerians and dressing in semi-Moorish uniforms. Other countries, including the United States, have adopted the Zouave system since. In the Civil war, and the Italian assault upon Rome in 1870, they were conspicuous, in the latter case defending the papal supremacy.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

TOO MUCH DELAY

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When I was a young detective I was sent from New York after a man who had given the slip to every officer of the law who had been sent to take him. One detective had got him cornered in a house, surrounded the house and went upstairs to nab him. A maid received him and admitted that the man he was looking for was in a back room. The detective went there, and the man jumped down on to the roof of a porch and started to slide down by one of the posts. The watchers collected under the porch to take him when he came down, and while they were doing this the maid walked out the front door. The maid was the man they were after, and the man they took was his wife.

There were other escapes equally ingenious, and I resolved to profit by them. I was told where I would find Ethan Hardwick, which was one of the names he used, and took a train for the place where he was or, at least, was reported to be. It was a three hours' ride. It occurred to me that if I arrested him I would have to bring him back over the same route, and I would have to watch him continually lest he give me the same kind of a slip he had given others.

On arriving in the city where Hardwick had taken up his abode I didn't go at once to his lodging to arrest him; I hired a room opposite and observed him. My object was to learn all about the approaches and exits that he would have to rely on when I should pounce upon him. I also desired to become familiar with his personal appearance so that I would know him under any disguise.

I saw him go into and come out of the house in which he was staying several times. I had a photograph of him borrowed from the rogues' gallery and by it knew him at once the first time I saw him. In coming and going he made no attempt to appear to be anything else than what he was. He never looked at the house I was in or in any way gave evidence that he suspected an enemy lodged there.

I was puzzled to know how to catch him, for he had chosen a retreat from which there were many avenues of escape. It was in a row of twenty houses, all the same height, and if he could get on the roof of any of them, not counting his own, there were nineteen roof scuttles down any one of which he could pass to freedom. To watch so many outlets would require a considerable force, which I did not have at my command and did not like to hire. I therefore concluded to watch my chance to take him outside of his quarters.

On several occasions I followed him on the street, but just as I was getting ready to run up to him and clap my hand on his shoulder he would suddenly disappear in some alley or basement, where I did not dare follow him lest the only result would be his getting on to the fact that I was after him. So sure was he to thus evade me that it seemed as if he must know who I was and what my errand was, and yet I could not see how he could have found out anything about me.

One day I saw him go out and followed him as usual. He went to the railroad station. To my surprise he went to the ticket office, where I followed him and saw him buy a ticket for New York. I considered myself in luck. All I had to do was to telegraph for a force to be at the station to take him when the train arrived. I bought a ticket for the same place and followed my man on to the train, getting in the same car with him. The telegram I gave to the conductor of the train to send for me.

Hardwick showed no suspicion of me whatever. My eyes were on him every moment from the time he entered the station till he got on to the train, but he never once looked at me. As soon as he took his seat he opened a newspaper and began to read. I would have taken a seat behind him, but he sat in the last seat in the car, and I was obliged to sit in front of him. But till the train moved out I kept him in sight.

There was but one stop for that train, Trenton. I didn't think it necessary to keep turning to watch my man while the train was running at the rate of fifty or sixty miles an hour, and after leaving Trenton, knowing that we would not stop again till we reached Jersey City, I refrained from close observation. As we approached the terminal I looked for my quarry.

He was missing.

I went through the train looking for him, but did not find him. He must have jumped off while the train was moving at least forty miles an hour. If so, I supposed he had been killed. At any rate, I returned without my prisoner, but made a resolution never again to delay an arrest.

Several years later Hardwick was arrested, and while he was being tried I asked him what had become of him on that memorable journey.

"I had seen you before," he replied, "and knew you were after me. But you surprised me by coming on the same train with me from Philadelphia. Not far from Trenton a train moved side by side with our train, and I simply went out on the platform and stepped aboard of the other train. It was a rare chance for me, for I was sure you had wired to have a force at the terminal to take me."

Don't pull up in the road to success and wait for the other fellow to go ahead.

Some men die hard and some others are dead easy.

A Fish Story.

"The inns of dear old England are picturesque," said Richard LeGallienne, "but the food they serve is something terrible.

"After a visit to Blenheim palace I entered an inn in the quaint village of Woodstock. As I lunched—or tried to lunch—my landlord said to me:

"'The great dook of Marlborough once set in that chair you're a settin' in, sir.'

"'Is that so?' said I.

"'And the dook once drunk 'is beer out o' that same mug you're a-drinkin out of.'

"'And I bet,' said I, 'I bet he refused to eat this fish too. Well, take it away, my man. I don't want it either.'"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Mighty Capella.

The star Capella is a hundred times brighter and hotter than our sun. If the earth were as near to Capella as it is to the sun the thermometer (if an instrument could be made capable of bearing such a temperature) would rise in July not merely to a hundred, but to 10,000 degrees F.! The oceans would fly off in puffs of steam. The forests and fields would kindle and burn like matchwood. The mountains and hills would melt like beeswax in a redhot oven! The earth in the rays of Capella would be as a moth in a candle flame.—New York Journal.

Insulted.

Here is an amusing instance of histrionic conceit. An interviewer, having obtained access to the presence of a famous actor, asked the great man if he would be kind enough to describe some of his early failures.

"Sir," snapped the tragedian, "I never had any! James—the door!"

Where It Pinched.

"Don't it aggravate you that I ask you for twenty-five louis?"

"No, that does not aggravate me; it is the giving of it to you."—Paris Pages Folles.

All Labor Is Worthy.

There must be work done by the arms or none of us would live, and work done by the brains or the life would not be worth having.—Ruskin.

Reason For Haste.

"I'm going to marry her at once."

"What's your hurry?"

"My salary isn't large enough to stand an engagement."

Kangaroo Sinews.

The sinews of the kangaroo are especially desirable for use in surgery for sewing wounds and binding broken bones together.

A Red Spider Gone Wrong.

The chigger is really an embryo that never got out of the chrysalis stage. He started out to be a red spider and stopped at becoming a pest. His papa and mumma are red spiders, about the size of a pinhead and bright red. They inhabit old stumps and logs in the woods and feed on vegetable diet. But their offspring are divided into two classes—the bloodthirsty and the non bloodthirsty. The nonbloodthirsty, like a well behaved child, heeds mother's advice and dines on grass and leaves and old woods. He grows up to a red spider. But the bloodthirsty little cuss hunts up a quadruped or a biped when he feels hungry and burrows. He has no control over his appetite, says the entomologist, and gorges himself. Ergo, he dies. He is the chigger. He is so small that he can scarcely be seen by the naked eye. Of course he doesn't rear a family, in consequence. But his nonbloodthirsty brothers and sisters will reach years of maturity and acquire offspring. And among their children will be chiggers. So the race is kept up.—Kansas City Star.

Debt.

Debt is the one thing which goes contrary to the laws of nature, because you can contract and expand it at the same time. Nothing exceeds like debt. Every one is always in debt to some one else. Every debtor is a creditor, every creditor is a debtor. There being no clearing house of humanity the thing goes on from day to day, getting more complicated. Everybody starts by owing the government his part of the interest on the national debt. As this is increasing all the time, the fatal habit some people have of putting off the day of their birth counts against them. Debt is a poor sleeping companion. He won't stay hitched. If you put him off in a room by himself and draw down the blinds he always breaks loose and interrupts you just when you are beginning to enjoy yourself. If you fail to pay his board and lodging he grows larger and eats more. And what a vicious companion he is!—Life.

BOWLING

St. Paul's Church bowlers met the Excelsiors for the first time in the league last night, and the former team added two games to their credit while the Excelsiors gained one.

The first game went to St. Paul's with a 100 point lead, while the Excelsiors took the second, but the last one belonged to St. Paul's to the tune of a 50 point elad. Herbison starred in last night's match, bowling an average of 21 points.

The next games are scheduled for March 4th, at 7:30 p.m.: Murray St vs. St. Andrews. March 5th, at 7.30 p.m: George St. vs. All Saints'

BOWLING AT THE Y. M. C. A.

The closing game of the Y.M.C.A. Bowling League which had been postponed for some time for various reasons, took place Monday night, when Centrals met and defeated the Lawn Bowlers in three straight games. However, the victories were not easily won but were the result of a hard fought contest in each case. All the way through the league these two teams have been playing about equal, although whenever they played against each other, the Centrals generally scored a victory. Their position in the league was a tie and Monday night's game was to settle it. Fred Green for the Centrals, was high man for the evening, with a total score of 275. The scoring was kept by secretary Roper of the Y. M. C. A.

The teams which composed the Y. M. C. A. League were Centrals, Lawn Bowlers, Busy Bunch, Big Five, Rollers and Winners.

KINGSTONS QUALIFY FOR THE O.H.A. FINAL

STAGE RALLY IN LAST PERIOD AND BEAT BRAMPTON NINE TO THREE

Kingston, March 2.—Kingston executed a whirlwind finish in the return game last night with Brampton, and won the round by three goals. The game resulted 9 to 3. Kingston had to make up three goals which Brampton had to their credit last Friday night, but when the second period ended they led by only 3 to 2.

In the last period Kingston scored six goals, as against one by the visitors. Jimmy Stewart scored four in succession in this session for the locals. The game was a splendid exhibition.

Kingston—Goal, Tobin; defense, Brown and Elmer; centre, Stewart; wings, Cook and Smith; spares, Stanton and Derry.

Brampton—Goal, Core; defense, Duggan and Ingolsby; centre, Burrell; wings, Clarridge and Anderson; spares, Beecham and Graham.

Referee—Percy Leseuer.

Bobby's Suggestion.

Bob was out visiting his aunt at a lake with his grandma. One evening he suddenly decided that he wanted to go home to mother. His grandma told him there were no trains and he couldn't possibly go that night. He said: "Well, grandma, can't you put me in a box and send me parcel post?"

Close Relationship.

One day when our insurance man came in he asked how old the dog was, and when he was told he turned around to ask how old my little sister was, and before my brother had a chance to answer him my sister said, "The dog is as old as me. Me and him is twins."—Exchange.

Comrades Three

By SAIDEE E. BALCOM

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

There were three suitors for the hand of pretty Mina Dale, at least that number of young men resident at Wooster or its vicinity who called regularly upon her once a week.

"I reckon Mina has her pick of a very fair bunch," observed her sensible homespun father to his neighbor. "They are all likely young fellows, and it would be a pretty particular girl who couldn't be suited with some of the crowd."

"Which one do you favor?" was propounded.

"That's not for me to say," replied Mr. Dale. "I've always followed the principle with my children that when they get ready to leave the home nest I won't interfere, and I won't begin with our youngest. Of course Val Worden is the best off of the group. His father left him a neat little farm. Then young Ned Bradley is getting a good salary at the Empire plant."

"And that Vernon fellow?"

John Dale shook his head dubiously. "Tell you," he answered, "Bert Vernon is a fine young man. He's smarter than the others, and sort of more refined, but he's barely started in the law, and all his prospects are way ahead. Between you and me, Mina favors him, I think. He writes poetry and talks it, and gets it into the minds of the girls he knows until they're all sentiment. Well, I've got my own affairs to look after, and I must let Mina attend to hers. You know the big case brought against me by Seth Dover is about ready for court."

"Yes, I have heard it comes up next week. Think you're going to win it?"

"Vernon says so. He says it all depends on a possible flaw in the Dover claim. It's pretty hard to think I may lose every foot of land I've toiled so hard to get, just because my father forgot to record a release deed 20 years ago. Hain't I paid the taxes and been in possession all these years? Don't Dover know he is leaning on a measly pettifogging trick to dispossess me? Well, I'm trusting to the smartness of young Vernon to keep me in possession of my land, and I know he will do his best for me. The other side is trying to get a delay."

Each one of the three young men named was well known and liked in the community. Val Worden was a great, strapping fellow, manly appearing and handsome, with muscles of iron and a fearless and confident bearing. When he came to see Mina he walked ten miles.

"I reckon I'd better get a pedometer and keep track of the odd thousand miles I've got to tramp to even give Mina a hint of how much I like her," he told Bradley, with whom and Vernon he was on the very best terms, although tacitly they were rivals.

"Well, I don't see much chance for myself," acknowledged Ned. "Fact is, Val, we don't stand much show with Vernon in the field. I can't help admiring him. He is certainly as smart as they make them."

"He's a fine fellow and a genuine friend," declared Worden, "and the best man wins!"

Val was welcomed on Saturday evenings, and made it a point to pitch in and help in the heavy work about the Dale place. He no more minded the long tramp his coming involved than if he were a professional sprinter. Bradley, who was a natural-born mechanic, won the old farmer's good will by deftly putting his harvester and other vehicles in order. Vernon, outside of dividing his fund of information with the family, did all the hard sums for the children.

"Worden all feet, Bradley all hands, Vernon all brains," was the terse way in which Mina's sister expressed her estimate of the three suitors. One Saturday afternoon Vernon was in his office when Worden, who happened to be in town for his regular call on Mina, dropped in and shortly afterward Bradley followed suit. They were chatting familiarly when Vernon's clerk rushed into their presence, pale and excited.

"Oh, Mr. Vernon," he panted, "Seth Dover is in town and he's wild with drink, and he's bragging that he'll fix Mr. Dale so he'll make him postpone the case Monday till he can get some more witnesses he needs. He's got a crowd of rowdies with him—"

"I'll see that Mr. Dale is kept safe out of that ruffian's way," announced Worden, and made a bolt for the door, never doubting that he could outdistance the rioters.

"And I'll have no boisterous hoodlums alarming Mina," said Bradley stanchly, and started out to intercept the enemy.

Vernon's share was to perfect the case so near to a hearing. He was glad when he learned that the nimble feet had conveyed a warning in time to Mr. Dale, and that Bradley with his deft hands had met and beaten back the disorderly crowd. He was gladder still as with a sense of rare confidence he went over the case he was working on. He felt sure he would succeed.

Which he did, and he saved Mr. Dale his property. And Mina, right in the court room, crying with joy threw her arms around his neck and kissed him.

"That settles it," observed Worden, "and he deserves her."

"And she surely will be very happy," added Bradley, "and what more can you and I ask?"

Out of His Way.

Mrs. Long—You're going out, are you not? Mr. Long—Yes, my dear. Mrs L.—Well, I wish you'd drop into Brown & Co.'s on your way and match the— Mr. L. (hurriedly)—I've got to see Jones, and that will take me some distance from Brown & Co.'s. Mrs. L.—Well, Mr. Jones' office is only a short distance from the Finery Bazaar, and that will do just as well. Take this and ask— Mr. L. (hastily)—After leaving Jones I must see Smith, who lives in the opposite direction to the Bazaar, you know. Mrs. L.—No matter! Green's will do. They are near Smith's. Mr. L.—But I've got to take a roundabout way to Smith's in order to see Brown, my dear. Mrs. L. (impatiently)—H'm! Where are you going after you leave Smith's? Mr. L. (helplessly)—I'm going up in an aeroplane!

Peculiarities of Charles Reade.

Charles Reade was peculiar in many ways. Here is the reason he gave to Henry Watterson for never visiting America. "I dare not think about it," he exclaimed. "In the first place, I can't drink or smoke, and I should not get on very well with the natives. Next, I have a weakness for high living, and you Americans have such an awfully jolly lot of things to eat that I'm afraid I should cram myself to death." One of Reade's peculiarities, says J. H. Harper in "The House of Harper," was that he liked to keep copies of the manuscripts he sent. Once, after a long period of illness, he forwarded an installment of a story having the names blank, as he had forgotten what they were.

Outspoken.

Mrs. Smith's four sons made the life of her old colored servant a burden. One day Uncle Andy was busy in the garden hoeing corn and for half an hour Tom, the most mischievous of the quartet, had amused himself throwing clods of dirt at him. At last Andy threw down his hoe and stumped indignantly down to the house.

"Mis' Ella," he said to the little culprit's mother, "Ah jes has to tell yu dat dat boy 'Tawm am de meanes' chile yu got; an' Ah tells yu fo' yo' face and tells yu behine yo' back!"—New York [illegible]

Her Shopping Tour.

The other day the missus went shopping. She returned and reported that they showed her a simple little tailored suit for $185; another that she liked fairly well for $210 and one that gave her a thrill that made her feel that she would like to own it for $225.

"They didn't charge you anything for looking at them?" we asked.

"No," she replied.

"Something wrong there," said we. "If those simple little suits are really worth that much they're worth charging an admission fee to see."—Exchange.

Japanese Rent Profiteers.

The renting agents of Kobe, being accused of extorting higher rents without the consent of the owners of the houses, have brought down upon themselves, strict regulations by the governor, according to the bulletin of the Japan society. The new rules specify that rental agencies must not be conducted by "minors and incompetents, people who have been sentenced to more than one year's imprisonment (unless sincerely repentant), unredeemed bankrupts, and persons of bad behavior and dangerous to public morality."

Far East Short of Rice.

The crop failures in the far East are causing grave anxiety in British North Borneo, and the prices of Siamese rice are more than three times as high as two years ago. The shortage is even now so acute that a food controller has been appointed. The government conducts the import of rice through agents, and the laborers in the estates have been rationed.

Poisoned "Fire Water."

Chicago liquor is full of poison, and it isn't the word of woman reformers that has spread the alarm, either. It is an honest-to-goodness chemist hired by a jurist who was puzzled by the antics of the young and old men who were called "drunk." The chemist, after careful analysis of the fire water, exclaimed that the drink was the worst kind of stuff and nothing short of poison. The report states that the "licker" contained wood alcohol, fusel oil, creosote and water. The gin which is sold extensively in Chicago saloons contained a concoction composed of either oil of juniper berries or the berries themselves. Another substitute found to be very popular was "bitters," which is made largely of tincture of cinchona.

The poisonous drinks are stupefying and frequently make the drinker deathly ill.

[illegible] Mr. David.

Do you know Edward Albert Christian George Andrew David?

This is not the first name of several people. Instead it is the full name of his royal highness the prince of Wales who has been visiting Canada. When Emperor Joseph of Austria died he had a string of names which made a long paragraph in the newspapers.

Royalty has family names like other folks. The British royal family is often spoken of as the Guelphs. The ill-fated Russian imperial family was known as the Romanoffs; the former ruling family in Portugal was called Braganza. The family who before Napoleon ruled France and later ruled Austria was the Bourbons. Everyone knows who the Hohenzollerns used to be.

Queen Victoria was originally Miss Azon von Este. King Edward VII, grandfather of the prince of Wales, was named Albert Edward Wettin.—Boston Post.

Prosperous Mines in Sweden.

In one of the mining fields in Dalsland, Sweden, belonging to the Mangano Steel company, several deep borings have been made which gave a good result. The company's newly erected smelting works at Trolhattan, which are arranged for a yearly production of about 4,000 tons of preparation alloy, can be considered as provided with the necessary ore for ten years in advance.

Electricity in Bombay.

Electricity is replacing all other forms of power in Bombay's extensive cotton mills.

Jade Favorite Gem in China.

Light green jade is the favorite gem of China, and it is difficult to get the stone in uncut form even in that country. Sometimes a rich Chinaman's estate will consist in part of a lump of jade. Sometimes it can be obtained in pounds. But even the leading jewelers of Hongkong usually obtain it in cut form.

New Plant Fertilizer.

Experiments in England with a new bacterized peat fertilizer have resulted in remarkable increases in plant growth and productivity, while plants believed to be dying have been restored to better than normal conditions.

Course in Athletics.

In answer to the question: "What are the five great races of mankind?" a Chinese student replied: "The 100 yards, the hurdles, the quarter-mile, the mile and the three mile."

Extraordinary!

When little Junior saw six jet black baby kittens the other day, he was so surprised to see them exactly alike, he said, "Oh, mother, come and look; why each one is a twin."

IMPORT OF LIQUORS WILL BE PERMITTED

BUT GOVERNMENT CONSIDERING AMENDMENTS RE ENFORCEMENT OF ACT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, March 3.—Hon. W. E. Raney stated today that a misunderstanding had arisen with reference to his reply to the Dominion Alliance request. The impression conveyed by morning newspapers is that there will be no amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act, the Attorney-General explained.

"As a matter of fact, the Government now has under consideration amendments to sections relating to enforcement of the Act. My statement to the Dominion Alliance was to the effect that there would be no amendments designed to restrict importation of liquor into the province."

SWISS ADHERES TO THE LEAGUE

NATIONAL COUNCIL APPROVES OF ENTRY INTO LEAGUE OF NATIONS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berne, March 3.—Adherence to the League of Nations by Switzerland was approved by the Swiss National Council yesterday, the vote standing 114 to 55. This decision does not bind this country to enter the League, but constitutes a recommendation for a plebiscite to be held during April or May, in which the people will voice their desires.

The National Council was asked to approve Switzerland's entrance into the League by the government a few days ago, after it had been decided to abandon what were known as the American clauses, by which Switzerland would delay action until the United States Senate had ratified the Treaty of Versailles, part of which is a covenant of the League of Nations.

OBITUARY

HUMPHREY JOSEPH O'ROURKE.

A very sad and touching event took place this morning when Humphrey Joseph O'Rourke, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Harry O'Rourke, of 627 Oxford street, 5th ward, passed away at the age of 16 years. He had been ill for some little time, and on Sunday underwent an operation which it was hoped would be the means of saving his life. Unfortunately the operation proved unsuccessful and he passed away this morning.

The funeral will take place from the residence of his father, 627 Oxford street, on Saturday morning to the Church of the Immaculate Conception and thence to St. Peter's Cemetery, Peterborough.

SISTER MARY CELESTA.

After an illness of a few days' duration Sister Mary Celesta of Mount St. Joseph passed to her eternal reward this morning. Before entering the convent deceased was Miss Nellie Keon of Wyman, Que.

The funeral will take place tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

R. J. MUNRO

Another well known citizen of Peterborough passed away last night at nine o'clock in the person of Mr. R. J. Munro, proprietor of the Munro House, on the corner of Water and Hunter streets. Mr. Munro was taken ill with stomach trouble two weeks ago and was forced to take to his bed. From then on his condition became critical and it was thought that there was no hope for his ultimate recovery. Within the last few days, however, Mr. Munro had shown a slight improvement and hope was held out that the verdict of the doctors might prove to be incorrect. But he then suffered a relapse which resulted in his passing away last night.

Mr. Munro was born at Port Hope 62 years ago. He has been in the hotel business for many years, first owning a hotel in Lakefield in 1889. In the year 1900 he came to Peterborough and took possession of the Munro House on the corner of Water and Hunter streets which was then known as the Morgan House. Throughout the province, Mr. Munro had a reputation of being an upright and honest business man and a model hotel keeper. Any hotel kept by him was always known to be first class as his record in this respect was outstanding. As long as he was in the business he was never known to contravene the law with regard to hotels in the slightest respect and in the days before the Ontario Temperance Act abolished the bar, Mr. Munro's house had a reputation as being absolutely beyond reproach. His large connection with fraternal societies stands in evidence of the high measure of esteem and respect he enjoyed in this and other communities. Mr. Munro's interest in fraternal societies began in the early days of his career, when he lived in Port Hope, and at the time of his death he was a member of several different societies and was highly respected in all. He was a member for many years of the Independent Order of Foresters, Port Hope, and Sons of Scotland, Lakefield. Mr. Munro was also a prominent member of several Masonic Orders. He was a member of Clemente Lodge No. 313, A. F. and A. M., Lakefield, of which lodge he was also a Pastmaster. On January 10 1901, he affiliated with Peterborough Lodge No. 155 A. F. and A. M. Besides this he was also a member of the Coronthian Chapter No. 36, of Royal Arch Masons, a Knight Templar and a member of Rameses Temple, Toronto, the last named being one of the highest of the Masonic Orders.

Mr. Munro has always been an Anglican by faith, and he was held in the highest esteem as a member of St. John's Church. He could always be depended upon to take his share in church or community work and rendered assistance in many valuable causes during the war.

He is survived by his wife and four children; Irene, an American Red Cross nurse, serving in Ratton, New Mexico, Harold John, now of Toronto, and two children aged six and four years.

funeral will take place at 1:30 on Thursday afternoon from his late residence to Little Lake Cemetery, Peterborough.

LATE M. H. ANDERSON.

The remains of the late Mr. M. H. Anderson, who died at Nicholls Hospital yesterday afternoon, were forwarded from Belleghem's funeral parlors to Lindsay today, where interment will take place tomorrow at Riverside Cemetery.

THE LATE THOMAS DAWSON.

The funeral of the late Thomas Dawson, Sr., who died yesterday, will take place tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock from his late residence, 520 Bonacord street. The services at the house will be conducted by Rev. R. B. Grobb, rector of All Saints' Church, and the pallbearers are being chosen from the Canadian Order of Foresters, of which the deceased was a member. Interment will take place in Little Lake Cemetery.

INSURANCE MEN AND

ented gains. In the West this had been caused by a deflation of the real estate boom. There were many people in the west now who were wishing that they had put more money into life insurance and less into town lots. Then the war revealed to the people the necessity of life insurance. The influenza epidemic of 1918, which had taken toll of 1 per cent. of the world's population, and lastly, the decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar, had made it necessary to have more insurance to give the same measure of protection as formerly to dependents.

He thought that the change would be a permanent one which, while gratifying to members of the association, also carried with it an opportunity for them to render service to the community and to the country. The war had left the country in an unnatural and temporary prosperity. The need of saving was great. Insurance men were in touch with the people and could preach the doctrine of thrift.

Mr. Miller pointed out that one of the greatest effects of life insurance was that it helped the man to become a more responsible citizen. He thought that agents should give their attention to matters of public health such as housing, recreation, etc., and show the people that the things that were hostile to the interests of the company were also hostile to the individual's own good health. Briefly, he gave figures to illustrate how life insurance companies had aided industry and agriculture by their investments and also to show the lessening of pauperism and its expense to the Government. Although these great results had been achieved life insurance was only in its infancy. Continuing, Mr. Miller described the qualities necessary in a successful life insurance man, laying stress on honesty and integrity.

Turning from life insurance in general to the Underwriters' Association, he gave the advantages of such organisation, showing how rebating, twisting and the bitterness in competition had thereby been eliminated. It would be the duty of the association to oppose undue taxation by provincial governments, which was in effect a penalty imposed on thrift. The incompetent agent would have to be eliminated or made to measure up to the standard set as the public would judge the business by the individuals.

G. H. Hunt.

The chairman then called upon Mr. G. H. Hunt, honorary secretary of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada, for a few words. Mr. Hunt said that it always gave him great pleasure to come to Peterborough, but tonight that pleasure was greatly augmented. He was a great believer in get-together meetings which created good fellowship. There was always great benefit to be gained by discussion at such meetings. He would like to refer to Newfoundland as a concrete example of the benefits achieved by the Underwriters' Association. Two years ago rebating, twisting and such evils were rife to a greater extent than they ever were in Canada. Then the Life Underwriters' Association of Newfoundland was formed. Within six months a similar law to the Canadian Insurance Act was passed in Newfoundland and now rebating, twisting, etc., were entirely eliminated.

In the best the association had gone in for collective advertising, taking a page of the leading newspapers to tell the results of insurance, but not giving any agents' names and this system of advertising had greatly increased business. The Dominion association had secured the passing of an insurance act which was recognized to be second to none. The authorities at Queen's University had been approached with reference to including a course in insurance salesmanship in their curriculum and they had offered to do so provided that a sufficient number of students could be guaranteed. Sir Robert Falconer, president of Toronto University, had also expressed himself as favorable to this suggestion. The membership of the Dominion association had recently increased from 2,100 to 3,600, which was very gratifying. Mr. Hunt, in closing, appealed to all to give their local association vigorous and hearty support which would have the effect of backing up the Dominion Association.

Judge Huycke.

The last speaker of the evening was Judge Huycke. On behalf of himself and the other members of the bar, he thanked the Life Underwriters for their kind invitation to be present tonight. He was particularly delighted to see so many junior members of the bar present. On many an occasion it had given him much pleasure to see in the midst of sorrow and bereavement the comfort and sustenance provided by a life insurance policy to widows and children who might otherwise have suffered most severely. In a serious illness, when God alone could cast the die and one knew not whether it would be for life or for death, it was a great relief to know that what ever happened one's dependents were fully provided for. He would like to see the utmost good feeling exist between the insurance men and members of the bar at all times. Both were working for the good of humanity, although there were possibly some who did not think so. We did not always realise what the comfort of ready money coming in at a crucial time was. Judge Huycke said that he understood the local Underwriters' Association was in a very properous position and he was glad to know that the more they studied the better would they see the benefits coming from the profession for it was a profession and a very skilled profession at that. He hoped that it would become more of a profession and was pleased to know that the universities were taking the matter up. He thought that in these days of government inspection little could be said to differentrate between companies, but he felt sure that any man would become grateful sooner or later for having taken a risk in a good company. He was proud of the position of the bar in the province, but the bar is misunderstood sometimes like insurance. That was wrong. The idea of a lawyer was to do and administer justice and the object of the law was for the protection of and dissemination of good-will among the people.

Finally, he wished the association the greatest amount of prosperity and that good-will should always rest between the insurance men and the Bar Association, for he was convinced that, as life insurance became more prevalent, so would the world be happier and the people richer and better thanks to the efforts of the insurance workers of Canada.

Next Convention.

Mr. Miller announced that on account of lack of hotel accommodation in Quebec the next annual convention of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada would be held at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on August 18, 19 and 20.

On behalf of the Peterborough Life Underwriters' Association the chairman thanked Mr. Miller and Mr. Hunt for their presence, after which the gathering dispersed with the singing of the National Anthem.

GEO. ST. LADIES' AID PREPARE

PREPARATIONS FOR SALE OF WORK THIS YEAR UNDER WAY

A beautiful day and an enthusiastic spirit among the members of the society resulted in a very large attendance at the monthly meeting of the George Street Ladies' Aid yesterday afternoon. Through the kind hospitality of the president, Mrs. C. E. Smith, the meeting was held at her home, 405 Walton street.

The president being hostess, the vice-president, Mrs. H. Foote, occupied the chair, while Mrs. G. Robertson had charge of the devotional exercises. Mrs. Millar gave the scripture reading.

The reports of the various committees were heard. Mrs. Stubbs of the sick and visiting committee reported many ill and several messages of thanks were read from those who had been remembered with flowers and plants. Considerable discussion took place regarding the work being done at the present time by the ladies in preparation for a sale of old and new articles, which will be held in April. It is expected, almost a dozen quilts large and small will be completed for the sale. A paper collection will also be held about the same time and the society is anxious that all the church people will make preparations for this. A large bazaar is to be held in the Fall and the committees for the several booths, having been appointed recently, have already begun work.

The business being concluded, Mrs Hughes gave a solo, which was much appreciated. Following this a talk on consecration of our talents was given by Mrs. Shields, which was exceptionally appreciated and helpful. A piano solo was then given by Miss Mary Gardiner.

The ladies were much pleased to have Mr. Thomas with them and he addressed them briefly. A social half hour was then spent during which the hostess served tea.

PASTOR AT MARK ST. WAGES WARFARE ON SUNDAY CARS

Rev. G. E. Ross of Mark Street scores the Sunday street car proposition and church pool tables.

The Mark Street congregations at both services were very large Sunday. In his discussion of the morning subject, which was "The Great Cedar of Refuge," Rev. G. E. Ross, pastor, pointed out the responsibility of the church in relation to the young people. It is a poor compliment we pay to a boy or young man when we instal a pool table in the house of God in order to keep our young men out of down-town pool rooms. It is an insult to their moral manhood. Fancy, our church boys going out into a strange city equipped with the gamblers 'tools. "We learned the game in the church at home," is their enforced testimony. Some simpleton in clerical garb introduced this scheme to try to hold the young men and some invertebrate church official nodded his head and the thing was done. We must learn that as surely as face answers to face in water, so heart will answer to heart and soul to soul. We must feel for our young people and appeal to them high instincts and they will surely respond.

"If a pool table were introduced into this church," said the preacher, "I can find young men here who would help me to speedily change it into kindling wood, and we would do just that thing."

Sunday Street Cars.

The subject of the evening sermon was "God's Estimate of Man." There was no fawning sentiment in the discussion of the subject. The following points were presented to the congregation:

1.—Man as he appears to his fellows.

2.—Man as he knows himself to be here and now.

3.—Man as God sees him here and now.

4.—Man as he might have been.

The proposition for Sunday cars in Peterborough received attention, and by the keen, cold blade of logic was cut into shreds and patches.

The following propositions were discussed:

1.—"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

2.—Am I my brother's keeper? Yes.

3.—The Sabbath day belongs to God and is given to man for rest and worship. Hands off!

4.—You and I have no right to interfere with the gift of God to our fellow men.

5.—We cannot run street cars on Sunday without interfering in the Sabbath's rights and privileges of twenty or thirty men who will be required to operate such cars.

6.—Peterborough has no more need of Sunday street cars than your auto needs five wheels.

7.—Tom Black wants Sunday cars that he may give his family a little outing on Sabbath afternoon, the kiddies need it—a little Sunday picnic? But John White has kiddies too, and twenty or thirty other street railway employees want the Sabbath for rest and worship. Will you doom all these men to the Sabbath-breakers' curse just to give you a little outing with the wife and kiddies? These men who would be compelled to operate the cars have rights that must be respected.

But let us not quarrel or worry. The Sunday cars will not come because you want them or because I want them. If there is no money in the Sunday street car proposition, it is not likely to materialise. But we must fight this new curse if it lifts its ugly head. Remember, that while the city seems to be money-mad and pleasure-mad and hell seems to hold high carnival, there are thousands of splendid men and women who are looking to the church of the living God for strong, true leadership, and they will follow where we lead.

For the Little Ones

To Keep Their Digestion Perfect Nothing is so Safe and Pleasant as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

An experienced observer in charge of a large office said it was a waste of words to tell most people to eat plain food. They prefer the food that delights the eye. Checking up on the after effects the usual distresses of gassiness, sour risings, water brash, loginess and so on may be avoided by following the meal with one or two Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These supply the stomach with an alkaline effect thus promoting normal conditions as in health. This puts the O. K. on so-called rich food. Men and women are but children of a larger growth when it comes to eating the foods that satisfy, even though they may cause indigestion. Indigestion is not necessarily confined to those who live high. It may follow so simple a process as the flavor of a bay leaf, thyme, garlic, sage or any of the other savory flavorings so universally used in soups, roasts, dressings, etc. As a rule if the stomach balks at such things, it will be disturbed by cheese, milk, coffee, pies and almost anything that most people like so well. Such conditions as these are met quite adequately by following the meal with one or two Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They digest food and at the same time supply the stomach with an alkaline effect that prevents gassiness, heartburn, sour risings, drowsiness after eating and such distresses so familiar to those susceptible to indigestion or [illegible]. Get a box of these tablets at any drug store in the United States or Canada, price 50 cents, and then note how comfortable the stomach feels. Your [illegible] may use garlic without a protest.

$3,000,000 IN GOLD SHIPPED TO STABILIZE CANADIAN EXCHANGE

A Total of Six Million Will be Forwarded to New York Before Long.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, March 5.— Gold coin valued at approximately three million dollars, has been shipped here from Canada it was announced today. This metal is sent for the acount of the Canadian Government, and is understood to be the forerunner of further shipments. It is believed that shipment was made for purpose of stabilizing Canadian exchange.

Canadian Interests

It is understood that Canadian interests and not the British Government, are responsible for this movement.

A later report this afternoon stated that the total amount of gold shipped from Canada would likely reach six millions. The Canadian dollar openend at 88 cents at yesterday's close, and advanced to 89 early this afternoon.

The pound sterling advanced this morning to $3.63.

Huge Gold Movement

According to a story printed in the Sun and New York Herald, this morning, official announcement of the inauguration of an almost unprecedented gold movement may be expected within forty-eight hours. The paper declares this is learned from an authoritive source. Present plans contemplate shipment from Europe, principally from England and France, of no less than two hundred and fifty millions spread over a number of months, says the Sun. Current shipments of gold to Argentina dwindle insignificance in comparison with the determination of England and France to ship enough gold here to restore the credts of British ad French securities outstanding the United States and to create dollars in this market.

NO REDUCTION IN CUSTOMS REVENUE

FOR ELEVEN MONTHS RECEIPTS $12,000,000 AHEAD OF LAST YEAR.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 5—Fears expressed in the last budget speech of revenue reduction from Customs duties are shown by the latest returns of the Finance Department to be groundless. During eleven months of the fiscal year, up to February 28, the Customs revenue was twelve millions ahead of the corresponding period of the previous year. For the eleven months of the present fiscal year the Customs revenue was $147,112,000 compared with $124,832,000. Customs revenue for February alone also showed an increase of over three millions more than in February of 1919. The increase in the net debt during the month was $15,849, the net debt now totalling $1,916,995,-933.

JAPS TO WITHDRAW

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Honolulu, March 5.—The Japanese Government has decided to abandon the Siberian expedition, according to cable messages from Tokyo received today by "Shinpo," a Japanese newspaper here.

The first detachment of Japanese troops will leave Vladivistock March 20, simultaneously with the departure of the last Czecho-Slovak troops, the message said. The Soviet Government's peace offer to Japan, according to a cablegram, asks recognition of Lenine's de Facto Government, and resumption of full diplomatic relations promises to end terrorism and to recognize Japans' special rights in Siberia.

MANUFACTURERS' BLDG. FOR EXHIBITION HERE

LOCAL MANUFACTURERS PROPOSE TO PUT THIS PLAN INTO EFFECT

At a fully attended meeting of the Manufacturers' Association in the Council room of the Board of Trade last evening, presided over by Chairman W. R. Breyfogle, matters concerning the development of Peterborough were discussed.

The contemplated construction of the manufacturers' building for the Industrial Exhibition was brought to the notice of the meeting and a proposed plan was submitted from the Industrial Exhibition Board. The proposition was unanimously approved and a committee, consisting of Chairman W .R. Breyfogle, Vice-Chairman W. A. Richardson and Edgar Worth, was appointed to consider the details and submit a recommendation at the annual meeting to be held on Thursday, April 1.

Chairman Breyfogle believing that the employees should be given an opportunity of voicing their opinion as regards the "Daylight Saving Measure," suggested that a vote be taken at the next pay day using the period from May 1st to September 1st.

A nominating committee of A. E. Coulthard, R. M. Glover and P. P. Westbye was appointed to bring in nominations of officers for the coming year.

HON. DOHERTY IS IN ACCORD WITH PROJECT FOR A WINTER FAIR HERE

Minister, However, Holds out Little Hope for Grant Toward Buildings—Policy of Government as to Demonstration Farms Not Yet Fully Developed.

The deputations which interviewed the Minister of Agriculture in Toronto Wednesday with reference to the questions of establishing a demonstration farm and a grant for the winter fair, returned to the city Wednesday night well pleased with the reception they had been given. Mr. Tooms, M.L.A., introduced the deputations to the Minister.

Mr. Denne, president of the Peterborough Exhibition Board outlined the case for the proposed winter fair, and told of the great advantage it would be to the breeders of cattle and horses.

He mentioned that very high grade cattle were now being raised in this district, and the expense to breeders involved in exhibiting their stock at Guelph, the only stock show available at present was a big burden. Something new was wanted, he said.

Hon. Manning Doherty, the Minister of Agriculture, agreed that he had long ago decided that a winter exhibition gave infinitely more benefit to people than an ordinary fair, as exhibitors when at an ordinary fair, came in the morning, got cattle in position at about 11 o'clock, and were off again by four in the afternoon. As a rule people took little or no interest in exhibits unless, as at a winter fair, the buildings were warm, when they stayed right with the exhibits, and examined them at their leisure, thus deriving much more benefit than they would at an ordinary summer fair.

Ald. Gordon and Turner.

Ald. Gordon and Turner outlined what had been accomplished in the way of buildings on Peterborough's exhibition grounds, and showed that great progress had been made in the last few years in regard to the exhibition in general.

Demonstration Farm.

The Minister then received the deputation dealing with the experimental farm. Mr. T. Tooms, M.L.A., introduced Mr. Rogers, president of the Peterborough branch U. F. O., and asked him to lay the matter of an experimental farm before the Minister.

Mr. R. B. Rogers.

Mr. Rogers said he agreed with all that had been said with reference to the advantages of a winter fair, and declared such a plan was endorsed by the Peterborough branch of the U.F.O. He then read a petition signed by the warden, reeves and deputy reeves of the county, and also the mayor and civic officials of the city of Peterborough and many prominent citizens, setting forth, among other arguments, that Farmers' Clubs are unanimous with regard to the experimental farm.

Letter From Principal Walker.

Mr. Rogers also read a letter from Mr. Duncan Walker, principal of the Normal School, pointing out the advantages that a demonstration farm would be to students passing out of the institution. The letter instanced that the only means available at the present time for instruction in agriculture for students was by means of diagrams and lantern lectures, and the only practical experience that could be gained was in the small garden attached to the institution. Principal Walker also stated that about 150 teachers passed out yearly, and two-thirds took positions in rural schools. The only knowledge these had of agriculture, which was a compulsory subject, was that obtained in the above mentioned way, which, needless to say, had very little practical benefit to the actual farming community.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, ex-M.L.A., who was asked to address the meeting, said that he had given the matter of a demonstration farm a great deal of thought during the past twelve years. He had long ago made up his mind that this was the most practical way of imparting knowledge to the farming community. He urged that a farm be established and conducted along practical lines, so as to demonstrate the actual cost of production. This should be done in such a way by the Government as to show the farmer the best methods to be adopted in farming, and also to show the consumer the actual cost of production. Such a system would create better feeling between the city and the rural communities as when consumers knew the actual cost of production they would willingly pay a fair price for farm produce.

Mr. Jos. J. Duffus, representing the Board of Trade, also addressed the Minister, concurring in all that had been said in the matter.

Mayor MacIntyre also said that the city was quite in accord with the suggestion of a demonstration farm.

Mr. Fred. Wilson spoke on behalf of the county and went into the matter fully. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. R. T. Lillico Mr. Baptie, reeve of Cavan, spoke on behalf of the Poultry Association.

The Minister Replies.

The Minister in reply addressed the deputation, telling them that as far as a grant for the construction of buildings was concerned it was against the policy of the Government to make one. This had not been done in any case heretofore; but he was in hearty accord with the winter farm project, and would do the utmost in his power to further it. He promised to give as large an amount as was possible for prizes, which was as far as they had gone in any case so far.

The Demonstration Farm.

With reference to the demonstration farm the Minister said that the policy of the Government in this respect had not been gone into fully as yet. Demonstration farms up to the present time had been run at such an expense that the Government were a little shie in adopting this system of education. However, he said, that, as the immense debt of this country, had primarily to be paid by agricultural production, the present Government were prepared to go far beyond what had been heretofore appropriated for this basic industry of the country; and that, if the policy of demonstration farms were adopted, Peterborough would certainly be one of the first to be given consideration.

Mr. Breyfogle Explains.

Mr. Breyfogle drew the attention of the Minister to the fact that it was hardly fair to charge up all the expense to the running of a demonstration farm. Such a project was on the same lines as those large manufacturers have adopted in connection with their works, from which, owing to their being a work of education, they did not expect a direct financial result.

To Open Exhibition.

Mr. Roland Denne asked the Minister to keep the date of September 31 in his mind, and consent to open the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition on that date.

SELL WEST INDIES TO THE UNITED STATES

PROPOSAL TO COME UP IN BRITISH COMMONS ON MONDAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, March 5.—It is reported that the proposal to sell the British West Indies to the United States, as a means of helping to balance the war debt of Great Britain, will be discussed in the Home of Commons by Premier Lloyd George probably on Monday next.

Pending the Premier's statement, members of the Government display unwillingness to express their views for publication

CAPTAIN TOOK NO SOUNDINGS

BELIEVES A SIX-MILE CURRENT CAUSED DISASTER TO SHIP

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, March 5.— Capt. Ernest C. Hyscoe, of the Teland Liner "Bohemian," which was wrecked on Sambro ledges on Monday, told the Marine Court of Inquiry which opened today, that he believed there was a six-mile set of current, the day of the wreck to which he attributed his disaster. In answer to a question of the court, the Captain said he had taken soundings.

OWEN EAGAN, BOMB EXPERT IS DEAD

FIRE DEPARTMENT INSPECTOR, WHO OFTEN BRAVED DEATH, COLLAPSES IN STREET

HELD PERILOUS POSITION

OPENED THOUSANDS OF INFERNAL MACHINES DURING SERVICE—INJURED TWICE

New York, March 4.—Owen Eagan of 154 East Forty-ninth street, inspector of the Bureau of Combustibles of the Fire Department and the man who has opened more bombs and infernal machines than any other man in the United States, became suddenly ill of acute indigestion last night, about 10 o'clock, while he was taking a walk in Lexington avenue.

He fell unconscious in the street, and was carried by passersby into a drug store at 479 Lexington avenue where he died while waiting for an ambulance to come from the Metropolitan Hospital. His body lay in the store for some time before it was identified, but finally a poit was identified, but finally a policeman who had known Mr. Eagan entered the store. The body was then taken to the East Fifty-first street police station.

Mr. Eagan had one of the most remarkable careers of any official or employee of the city. He served as an inspector in the Bureau of Combustibles for about twenty-four years, and in that time he opened no less than 7,000 bombs and infernal machines, some of them with sufficient explosives to wreck the biggest buildings in New York city. He was in danger of losing his life every day of those twenty-four years, because hardly a day passed that he wasn't tinkering in some way or another with an infernal machine or a bomb, or with explosives in some form or another.

Mortuary experts have pronounced the job that Mr. Eagan had the most dangerous in the world. They openly expressed their wonder that he did not die a hundred times, and so dangerous did the life insurance companies consider his work that not one of them ever could be found that would write a policy on the inspector's life. No one who knew Mr. Eagan and the character of his work had any idea he ever would die a natural death.

Mr. Eagan became an inspector in the Fire Department, just about the time when the Italian gangs and the Black Hand killers were beginning their campaign of terrorization by high explosive. The heads of his department and of the Police Department learned Mr. Eagan had the courage and ability to open any sort of infernal contrivance, and since then he had done nothing else.

Every bomb that has come to light in the great bomb cases of New York city has been opened and inspected by him, and through his reports the police have been able to arrest many important criminals.

In all of this time Mr. Eagan suffered but two accidents. The first was in 1912, when a bomb which had been sent to Judge Otto A. Rosalsky exploded and tore a finger off Eagan's right hand, and the other case was only a year or so ago, when a bomb ripped his clothes from his back without injuring him.

GERARD TALKS ON NATION'S LEAGUE

FORMER AMBASSADOR GERARD SUPPORTS STAND TAKEN BY CANADA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Mitchell, S. D., March 5.—Canada's stand in regard to the League of Nations' voting power was supported by James W. Gerard, former American ambassador to Germany, in an address here last night.

"When orators denounce the League and declare that England is to have six votes and the United States but one, read the covenant of the League and discover the turth for yourself," said Mr. Gerard. "The League is governed by two bodies: In one, every British colony has a vote, but in the other each nation has but one vote and to be effective any measure must pass the approval of both these bodies."

David Spencer, Sr., owner of large businesses in Vancouver, Victoria and Nanaimo, is dead.

NETHERLANDS' GOVERNMENT WILL GUARANTEE TO GUARD WILHELM

Doornand Estate of Two Hundred Acres in Realty a Huge Cage.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Hague, March 5.—Holland's answer to the second Allied note relative to extraition or internment of former German Emperor William of Germany will probably be handed to Premier Lloyd George by the Dutch Minister in London this week.

Guard Him Well.

Intimations have been given that the Netherlands' Government will express its willingness to guard the erstwhile monarch, and prevent anything that might threaten the peace of Europe.

Night and Day Shifts.

Night and day shifts are working on the Kaiser's new residence at Doornand. It is reported he will move there from Amerongen on May 12th.

One Huge Cage.

While unprotected by either high walls or moat, the Doornand estate is now in reality a two hundred acre cage that can be easily guarded, and within which the Dutch Government expects William of Hohenzollern to spend the rest of his days.

Will Not Give Him Up.

The Dutch Government today for the second time refused to deliver the former German Emperor to the Allies for trial. In a note addressed to Lloyd George, however, the Government promised to take all necessary measures to minimize the liberty of Wilhelm, and to preventing him from endangering the world's peace.

Close Censorship.

A second communication from the Dutch Government, which was delivered in London this morning states that these precautions will be taken on the spot While Doornand is not mentioned in the text of the note, it is understood that in conversations with Allied diplomats here, Dutch authorities assured them that close guarding and censorship will be instituted when Wilhelm occupies his estate at that place.

WET VOTE IN 50 OF 67 TOWNS IN BAY STATE

SOME PLACES TURN DRY COLUMN FOR FIRST TIME

Boston, March 5.—Almost fifty Massachusetts towns out of sixty-seven voted "wet" in their annual town meetings, complete returns showed today. The majority of these towns returned substantial "wet" majorities, despite the fact that almost all had voted consistently "dry" for many years. Traditionaly "dry" towns, like Rockport, Middleboro, Lincoln and Mansfield, voted "wet" for the first time in their history. The few towns that stuck to the "dry" column did so in most cases by narrow margins or by substantially reduced majorities.

Rockport, noted North Shore town, had long been known as the Bay State's "rock ribbed" temperance town. In the early '60s women with hatchets raided and wrecked the "grog shops." The Supreme Court decided in favor of the women.

Brookline voted in favor of license, 1,449 to 1,093. It was the first time in thirty-four years that this town, the largest and wealthiest in the State, had voted "yes."

Among the latest towns to make returns and which went "wet" were Redham, Essex, Wilmington, Andover, Hull, Randolph, Barnstable, Hopkinton, Milford, Cohasset, Bedford, Natick and North Andover. Among the "dry" towns are Winthrop, Winchester, Wellesley, Dartmouth, Reading, Hopedale, Southboro, Mendon, Westwood and Saugus.

5,000 ARMENIANS WERE MASSACRED

FRENCH OFFICIALS SAY ARMY COULD NOT FORESEE MASSACRE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, March 5.—The total number of Armenians who were victims in massacres in the Marash region of Asiatic Turkey last month does not exceed five thousand, according to detailed information received by French officials. Reports from London yesterday stated that the number would be between fifteen and twenty thousand.

Army Not Strong Enough.

French officials point out that it was impossible to foresee and prevent this massacre, as an army of occupation is not large enough to furnish strong guards at every point at which the Turks are likely to revolt.

IT'S ABOUT TIME HE GOT BUSY

Los Angeles, Cal., March 5.—Jack Dempsey, heavyweight pugilist champion, will meet Terry Kellar of New York, in a four-round exhibition here Friday night, Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager, announced last night. Kellar's record includes a decision over Joe Beckett, English heavyweight champion, and a 21-round draw with Dempsey.

LOSS BY FIRE $75,000

Sudbury, March 4.—Fire on Sunday afternoon last completely destroyed the handsome Y.M.C.A. building under construction for the Canadian National Railways at their divisional centre at Capreol. The building was rapidly nearing completion and was soon to be ready for occupation. Nothing but two brick walls are now standing and the steel is a twisted mass of wreckage. The loss is between $60,00 and $75,000 and is covered by insurance.

BROWNE CONVICTED BY DETROIT JURY

Detroit, Mich., March 5.—Three out of six defendants, Grant Hugh Browne, of New York, and Soterious Nicholson and Lester Waterbury, two former army officers, were found guilty of conspiracy to defraud the Government in the purchase of army salvage, by a jury in the Federal District Court here last night.

ANOTHER DEATH FROM SLEEPING SICKNESS

HALF-A-DOZEN CASES IN PETERBOROUGH CITY TODAY

Sleeping sickness claimed another victim in the city today. The patient was taken ill with the disease fourteen days ago and was apparently suffering no pain, but seemed to drop right off to sleep, remaining unconscious until she died today. During the intervening time she was unable to speak or hear and appeared to have lost all use of her limbs. Towards the end, however, she opened her eyes and this was at first taken to be a sign of recovery.

Three different doctors were called in, but all were equally mystified as to the cause of the disease and the remedy for it. Medicine was prescribed at first, when the disease was thougth to be brain fever, but later this was stopped when the case was diagnozed as sleeping sickness.

When interviewed this morning as to sleeping sickness in Peterborough, Dr. McPherson, M. O. H., stated that there was at present half a dozen cases in the city and there had been three deaths so far. The average was fifty per cent fatal. There had been many cases reported in other parts of the province and up to the present little or nothing was known of the disease and its causes, neither had there been any successful method of treatment.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S NOTE

Reply to Latest Communication From Allies is To Hand

London, March 5—President Wilson's note in reply to the latest communication of Allied Premiers on the Adriatic question, reached the American Embassy here today. It will be delivered to Earl Curzon, Foreign Secretary this afternoon. Instructions with not from Washington, contain no mention of arrangements for its publication.

The Dominion Customs Association, in annual meeting at Ottawa, changed its name to the Dominion Customs Officers' Association.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1920.

A SANITARY MEASURE.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH has submitted a resolution to Council recommending that property facing on sewers be made to connect with them in the interests of public health. Where small property owners are affected, it is suggested that the city make the connections and accept payment for the same in easy installments, charged in the tax bills each year until paid.

This is not by any means a new suggestion here, for ex-Alderman Edgar introduced it into Council during his term of office, and, although not accepted by the Aldermanic Board, the scheme seems to have borne fruit in the minds of our new Board of Health. It is a move in the right direction, for public health should not be menaced by the maintenance of cesspools and other primitive sewage methods where the means for taking care of sewage on sanitary lines are at hand. The city has as much right to force connection with sewers as the Township of North Monaghan has to secure an order restraining the city from discharging its sewage into a river which flows through its properties. And when any costs connected with an order on any citizen for sewage connection are made payable on an easy plan what excuse can be offered for maintaining a nuisance on his premises?

This plan was one of several commendable ideas put forth by ex-Alderman Edgar and adopted or put into effect by others. He planned for the footway over the river paralleling the C. P. R. bridge, the credit for which went to his successors on the Aldermanic Board; he also originated the suggestion for a public park over the river, taking in the ball grounds, a measure endorsed by the ratepayers, but the consummation of which is left for others. Ex-Alderman Edgar has been peculiarly unfortunate in that, like the prophet who hath no honor in his own country, circumstances have deprived him of opportunity for putting into effect projects in the public weal which he advocated and others concurred in and followed up.

QUESTION OF TRADE ACCEPTANCES.

THE PRINCIPLE of trade acceptances in times of widespread financial stress is of great value and should be applied generally. The New York Commercial says the trade acceptance method will become a customary feature of business financing because of its efficacy under ordinary conditions, not because of its value as a refuge in emergency. Hence, in adding our voice to the appeal for the more general adoption of this system, we have not urged that such business men as are doubtful or reluctant on the subject should at any rate become trade acceptance users on the score of patriotic duty.

Occasions arise, of course, when it is eminently appropriate to make the public welfare the chief argument for the support of a movement. Such an occasion existed when, in the fall of 1917, the trade aceptance was selected as the particular commercial method whose merit was so convincing and whose bearing on the conservation of national resources was so direct as to justify its inclusion in the deliberations of the War Convention of American Business.

The effort of that convention in the interest of the acceptance did not stop with mere discussion of the merits of its use in a time of national emergency. In order to give definite and permanent value to the intentions which had been expressed, it was decided that there should be brought into existence a national organization whose purpose would be to secure for the acceptance the place in American business to which its merits so clearly entitle it. The American Acceptance Council is carrying forward the educational movement then launched.

Following the Armistice, the work in behalf of acceptances continued with increased vigor, because the general feelings of its supporters was, as we have shown ours to be, that the real merit of the trade acceptance lay in its value as a permanent feature of our business and financial life.

But has not the occasion again arisen when the appeal for the wider adoption of the trade acceptance method is properly an appeal to the public spiritedness of our business men and bankers?

There has been extraordinary inflation in values, with a natural result in a heavily increased demand for credit. The situation has been acute for some time, as the action of the Federal Reserve banks in regard to discount rates in the past few months has shown. Everybody realizes we believe, that an emergency exists.

The trade acceptance should be turned to, in a time such as this, by merchandising interests in virtually every line of business, because through its use the capital tied up in open book accounts receivable is transformed into liquid money available for prompt use.

HAVE WE FINISHED WITH COLD WINTERS?

THE ECCENTRICITIES of the weather, especially in regions of ice and snow, are precipitating a pretty quarrel among men of science, and we are all concerned in the dispute, says the London Daily Mail.

Old-fashioned weather is dead; and according to the newer view of the relation of our earth to the sun, this is no accident, but a certainty that can be prophesied. The one school asserts that warmer winters and cooler summers will prevail for the rest of our lives—not to mention the next two thousand years or so.

Let the facts come before the theories. It is beyond dispute that many glaciers are receding, growing smaller, shrinking toward their northern home. You can trace their rather rapid retreat in Switzerland and Alaska, and toward both poles.

Time was, as we know, when the ice and snow were permanent at Durham and broken bits reached London.

According to many geologists, this was not so very long ago, only 6,000 or 7,000 years. Ever since then the ice has been going back; and the process is particularly rapid at present because the glaciers have been slowly absorbing warmth and the accumulation is at last breaking them up.

We are, in short, just reaching the full temperate period which follows the glacial or ice period according to a definite formula.

What records there are of the weather itself, as well as the record of the rocks and remnants of evidence from prehistoric man, are very much in favor of the new theory. In fact, the climatic discoveries made in the last expeditions to the South Pole, where ice is receding rapidly, suggest that the old ideas about the glacial epoch and the succeeding temperate epoch are wrong in certain essential points.

So we come to the present dispute. It is this: The standard astronomical view is that the last ice age was at least eighty thousand years ago, and that the change to a temperate period is too slow to mark in one man's lifetime. Incidentally, the astronomers have no explanation why ice should shrink at both poles simultaneously.

In opposition to this, some geologists think that they have proof of a comparatively recent ice age. They are sure that within the last hundred or two hundred years the weather everywhere, with inevitable fluctuations, has been less extreme—warmer in winter, cooler in summer; and that what happens in the neighborhood of one pole also happens at the other.

Much of the evidence is quite new—of the last year or two—and, so the geologists assert, gives the lie to the standard view of the astronomers. They say: Facts do not support you. You must, therefore, change your theories.

They go further than this. They say that they have discovered a Nineteenth Century Newton. He was known as Major-General Grayson, and he developed a simple and ingenious theory which enabled him, and has enabled his followers, to make some astoundingly accurate prophecies and calculations. At the time—nearly fifty years ago—he was "turned down" by the astronomers. But so much that he said is supported by recent experience that his discovery has now been revived and is slowly gaining supporters all over the world.

Roughly, his view is that the earth has a double rotation, that it tilts more than astronomers hold, and that his tilt or "obliquity" changes more rapidly. The more upright it is, the warmer are the poles, and the smaller the circle of ice. The more oblique, the colder the poles and the warmer the equator. Whatever the truth, the view of the Graysonians demands an answer from the astronomers.

WILL BE ACCEPTABLE.

LAST MONTH the Canadian National Railways Magazine made its bow to the great family of workers of the Government-owned transportation system serving the nine provinces of Canada.

Referring to its aims and objects, this new publication says: It marks the beginning of an attempt to show the employes on the National lines the present greatness of the system and its future possibilities. A vast amount of study and work must be put into the task before the Magazine will become all that it ought to be to the workers on the National lines who receive it each month. This Magazine cannot follow along the exact lines of any other because the conditions it has to deal with are unique. Public ownership and operation of steam railways on a grand scale is still an ideal—something to be fought for, something to be attained.

We believe that success can be achieved in this field in Canada through the Canadian National Railways. Success can come only through efficiency and loyal co-operation of the staff from Atlantic to Pacific.

The fifty thousand workers in the "National" Railways army are distributed over the nine provinces of the Dominion. Canadian National Railways Magazine provides a most desirable means of intercommunication, and the management believes it can be made a great force in promoting that feeling of unity which is essential to the success of all great institutions.

It will be made abundantly clear through the Magazine that merit will find its own reward. The pages of the Magazine will tell, month by month, those in the eastern provinces of the present day development and the possibilities for the future of the western lands and communities tributary to the railway, and will also inform those in the West of the great productive activities in the areas in the East. The Magazine will endeavor to convey the information that is essential to a better understanding of the manifold resources of this great country and to demonstrate the vitally-important part the railway worker plays in the maintenance of prosperity in Canada.

The Canadian National Railways Magazine will aim to prove acceptable to the workers on Canada's National Lines, and will work for the closest sort of co-operation among all ranks throughout the system.

PREPAREDNESS.

(Calgary Herald.)

Liberals all over the Dominion are reported to be organising for a Federal contest. But that does not mean that a Federal election is imminent. Rather it suggests that the Liberal leader recognizes the fact that it will take many moons to gather the remnants of the party together and many more moons to enable them to compose their family differences. After that we may have a Dominion election.

NEW USE FOR ARMY TANKS.

(Detroit Free Press.)

Some day we will find a use for our army tanks in pressing down the snow after a blizzard and making the streets passable. They have been found useful for hauling logs in lumber camps, boats on canals, and even plows on the farm, but our city managers continue to deal with snow in the methods approved by their grandfathers.

MAY BE ABLE TO TELEPHONE SOON WITHOUT WIRES, SAYS MARCONI

Today's System Will be Replaced by Vocal Wireless Communication—Waves of Electric Energy Released by Pressing a Button—Remarkable Economic Advantage to Follow.

Milan, March 4.— Within this present year vocal communication transmitted without wires will replace the cumbrous system of today.

will follow this, because it will dispense altogether with the cost involved in apparatus and the maintenance of lines— not to speak of the utter elimination of interruptions now so frequent through the effect of bad weather and the occasional isolation of entire regions in consequence of snowfalls.

It is a curious phenomenon that while the most progressive peoples of Western Europe have not yet contrived to adopt wireless telephony on an essentially commercial basis, China—the most retrograde among nations—is making daily use of the wireless telephone for communications between urban centres and rural districts which have not been linked up with the ordinary telephone system.

United States inventors have shown themselves capable of producing a really practical instrument for transmitting the human voice by means of electric waves.

Science Will Find a Way

Today we cannot concentrate the expansion of energy within a limited sector of the circles so as to reach the furthest distances, but eventually science will find a way of directing electrical energy without wires in a straight line.

This established, we shall undoubtedly be able, by means of powerful machines, to gird the whole world with waves of electric energy without wires by the simple pressing of a finger upon a transmitting button

In respect to wireless telegraphy I have a radio-telegraphic receiver no bigger than a gramaphone, by means of which—without any other wonted communication with the atmosphere—I am receiving all day long in my study every scrap of wireless news sent to the European press

Very shortly, with an instrument of this kind, bankers, politicians and business men in general will be able from minute to minute to keep themselves in contact with both hemispheres.

Very soon, too, that miserable ticking machine whereon all newspaper offices depend will yeild place to this mighty invention—which is apt for news sending, news receiving and simultaneous communication with any number of receiving stations.

In this way the journals will be able to wipe out considerable costs besides saving the great loss of time now necessary for sending separate messages.

In the matter of popular education it is easy to understand the remarkable influence this invention is destined to exert when all its possible applications are fully developed.

Before long its development will have reached a stage when, in contact with an automatic apparatus at the four corners of the earth, news will be registered in clear language without the present-day necessity of the Morse code expert.

With the instalment of radio-telegraphic receivers throughout the civilized globe, in every public school, university and library, the prevailing languid interest of the public in international happenings will be immensely stimulated and there will be no longer any valid reason why every boy should not be as well primed as the most inveterate reader, and without his outlay.

ACCUSES GREEN OF TWISTING TRUTH

MR. LOUIS JOFFE REPLIES TO L. GREEN'S STATEMENTS

Editor Review.—I beg leave to express through the medium of your column my emphatic refutation of the remarks purported to have been made by Mr. L. Green, who claims to be a native Russian, and an electrical engineer at that.

Mr. Green is reported to have stated that I have not been in Russia for the last nine years. Well, it seems that Mr. Green has more information about me than I have about myself. I have been in Russia twice during that period. Once, I was forced to take a compulsory journey to Siberia by the officials of the Czar not for theft or robbery, but for making public my admiration of British institutions. When the war broke out I did my "bit."

But I do claim to know Russian affairs at least up to about three months after the usurption by the Bolsheviki of the Russian Government. If Mr. Green is at all familiar with Russian affairs, he ought to know that a very close kinsman of mine, Mr. Joffe, was the president of the Russian delegates to the Russo-Germanic Peace Conference at Brest-Livtosck. He was later Bolshevik ambassador to Germany and was assassinated by the Pollocks at Vilna after their occupation of that city. I think I ought to know a little about the present God-forsaken Russian.

Seeing that Mr. Green is so well informed, he will no doubt give his listeners a true account of conditions in Russia, or as he states, he will tell the truth of Russian affairs. He certainly has made a bad start of it by giving an untruthful account of the proceedings that transpired at St Paul's Church on the evening that I delivered my address there. He states that I refused to answer his questions. This is not merely twisting the truth as he accuses me to have done but is a deliberate misstatement of facts. I did answer all his questions and asked for more, but Mr. Green wished to make a speech which I had no authority to permit, not being the convenor of the meeting. I, however offered to debate the question with any person at any time, in any suitable rules.

To show my personal willingness to hear him I put the question to the audience, whether they wished to listen to him speak or not, and only three were in favor, while about sixty were against the proposition.

But as he was still as full of questions as an egg's full of meat, I offered on my own authority to give him the platform for a short time, which he declined as he professed to not be a public speaker.

And now, O ye Gods! in this short interval he has acquired the gift of public oratory, and will in due time, enlighten the minds of the people of Peterborough, regarding affairs in Russia.

I notice that an opportunity is to be given me to be present at the meeting and to give my version of the matter. I beg to state that I shall not be there because he has already deliberately misrepresented me and I decline to have anything further to do with him. I shall again give my version of the fall of Russia at Trinity Methodist Church on the evening of Wednesday, March 10th.

In conclusion I would like to state that my lecture was first delivered two years ago, and was later published in books-form by Thos. Allen publishers. Many publications have quoted from this book.

So far the Bolsheviki emissaries in this country as well as in the U.S have been unable to disprove my statements. Some of my predictions made in that book may have been overdrawn regarding the number who died, due directly or indirectly to Bolshevik rule, but my statements on the whole have come true.

Yours truly,

LOUIS JOFFE

IS FRENCH QUEBEC IRRECONCILABLE?

GAUTHIER INCIDENT FOLLOWED UP—PRESS REPORTS VOLUMINOUS

Press comments upon the Gauthier incident, when that gentlemen in the House of Commons use the words, "House of Quebec," are general.

The Ottawa Citizen says:

"Never a session of Parliament but what witnesses some attempt to put Quebec into a seething cauldron of party politics. Session before last and a while before, the attack was peculiarly vicious. Last year it quieted down though, now and then, some one would come along and take a poke at the smouldering embers. This year there were hopes of escaping but, it seems, not yet. Mr. Gauthier, of St. Hyacinthe, indulged in a few observations the other night, induced by certain olive branches which, an hour before, Herbert Mowat had waved to the breeze. He quoted, with obvious subscription to the view, the words of a distinguished but anonymous individual to the effect that Quebec awaits her "hour" and is inclined to regard with suspicion those who so suddenly have discovered, there, the existence of great and latent virtues. Mr. Burnham, later, proceeds to jump on him, a little flare up occurs, the Speaker intervenes and order is restored amicably, but, from this little flash in the pan, renewed attempts are evident in some quarters to pour oil on the embers of racial and provincial antagonism. There was some further reference to the matter in the House yesterday and press reports are quite voluminous."

Mr. Trahan, M.P., Quebec, followed Mr. Gauthier's line of attack, showing that it was deliberate.

Arthur Trahan, Nicolet, condemned extensive military and naval plans while the country is half bankrupt. He said Quebec is not ready for conference with the other provinces.

Party-Line Consideration

A two-party line is a single circuit, shared in common by two subscribers. It is not reserved for a single user and should be used on the share-and-share-alike basis.

On a two-party line, it is possible for both users to try to talk out on the same circuit at the same time. There is also the liability of both being wanted at the same time to receive incoming calls.

Therefore, there are special considerations which we urge a party-line user to keep in mind:

1 Long conversations prevent the use of the line by the other subscribers; therefore party-line talks should be as brief as possible.
2 Whenever another party-line subscriber requests the use of the line for an emergency, courtesy should prompt the first user temporarily to give up the use of the line.
3 Whenever a party-line subscriber takes the receiver from the hook and finds the line in use, the receiver should be replaced at once in a careful manner.
4 At the end of a conversation the receiver should be replaced upon the hook immediately, otherwise the other subscriber cannot signal the central office.
5 Be sure always to give the operator the letters W or J in calling a party-line subscriber.

Co-operation is required to ensure good service of any kind.

STORY OF ADELE HUGO

DAUGHTER OF FAMOUS AUTHOR LIVED IN HALIFAX.

Romance of the Gifted Young Woman Who Followed Her Faithless English Lover to Nova Scotia, and Suffered Many Privations Rather Than Tell Her Family of Her Wrongs—Tale Sounds Like Fiction Rather Than Fact.

THE recent announcement of the death of Mlle. Adele Hugo at the age of over eighty, recalls the sad history of this sole surviving child of the distinguished novelist, Victor Hugo—for his daughter Leopoldine and his sons, Charles and Francois, predeceased their illustrious father; and the demise of this aged lady reawakens the sympathetic interest of the public in one whose life has been practically that of a recluse.

Immediately after the coup d'etat of Napoleon III, Victor Hugo — for whose body, dead or alive, a reward of five thousand francs was offered by the Imperial Government—escaped to Brussels and thence to Guernsey, where he was joined by his wife, two sons and Adele. Having decided to make his home among the French-speaking inhabitants of the Channel Islands, the family of the poet-politician became acquainted with the son of an Anglican clergyman—Albert Andrew Pinsen—to whom the beautiful twenty-year-old Adele speedily lost her heart; and the young man, apparently reciprocating her ardent affection, gave ready promises of marriage as soon as the objections of his father (founded solely on religious grounds) should be overcome.

After several years of waiting, Victor Hugo, desirous of promoting his daughter's happiness, at last induced Pinsen to sign his name by the side of Adele's on a marriage contract; but he departed immediately for England, from whence he wrote that he preferred to have their marriage celebrated in London rather than at Guernsey, as he had purchased a commission in the British army. As even a lieutenant's commission would have been beyond Pinsen's means, the supposition that his father—on whom the young man was dependent—had decided upon this step to separate the lovers gains weight from the fact that when Adele's supplications prevailed upon her mother to accompany her to London, for the marriage ceremony, she discovered that her fiance had sailed with the regiment for Halifax, Nova Scotia.

So enamored was Adele, however, of her faithless lover, that despite the entreaties of her family, she determined to follow him even to the ends of the earth; and provided with the money intended for her trousseau, she left her home (to which she and her mother had returned from London) boarded a channel boat and traveled to Liverpool and New York, whence she proceeded to Halifax, where she registered at the Halifax Hotel as "Miss Lewly." Her knowledge of English at this time (about 1861) was very imperfect, but improved during her stay in Canada, and through the kind offices of a French cook at the hotel she soon engaged a furnished room in the house of a waiter, who was much in demand at both private and public functions. Here she lived in almost complete seclusion, seeking no companionship, for though she had immediately notified Lieut. Pinsen of her presence in the town, he, being greatly chagrined at her sudden arrival on the scene, only paid her occasional short visits; and while fervent in his professions of undying love and affection constantly protested that circumstances still hindered their marriage.

Ere long the money brought with her became exhausted, and Adele was forced to turn to literary work as a means of support, for in addition to being a striking handsome, cultured and entertaining woman, Mlle. Hugo had marked attainments, having inherited much of the great intellectual ability of her father; who, she asserted, had declared that her style of writing was decidedly sensational, and in that respect eclipsed anything from his own pen. While living in this secluded and erratic fashion Adele maintained a regular correspondence with her family, but evidently led them to believe that Pinsen had at last married her, and keeping them in total ignorance of her many deprivations and sufferings.

By a curious turn of fortune's wheel, however, a French chef, while engaging the services of Mlle Hugo's landlord to assist as waiter at a dinner to be given by the general in command of the troops at Halifax, chanced to notice on the hall-table a letter addressed to "Monsieur le Vicomte Victor Hugo, Guernsey, Great Britain," which had been placed there to be posted by "Miss Lewly." By dint of shrewd inquiries as to the personality of the writer the surprised Parisian had little difficulty in convincing the landlord and his wife that their lodger could be none other than the distinguished novelist's daughter; and at once the waiter wrote to Victor Hugo describing "Miss Lewly's" peculiar way of living, her scanty wardrobe and such minute details of her appearance that the return mail brought him a letter of gratitude for his thoughtfulness, and a request that his wife provide everything necessary to Mrs. Pinsen's comfort and to remit the bills to Guernsey for payment. These instructions were faithfully carried out and from this time onward monthly remittances of twenty-five pounds sterling came regularly from the author, payable to the order of "Mdme. Pinsen," and these she collected personally at the bank. This income would have permitted her to live in luxury had she not lavished it upon that pleasure-loving dandy—Pinsen—who, while still refusing to marry her did not scruple to accept her money to further his great love of gay apparel—which had won for him in the garrison the soubriquet of "the Count."

Outside of the money expended upon her worthless fiance—one of the gayest officers on the station—economy seemed her ruling passion, and when she fully realised his studied neglect of her, combined with the report of his marked attentions to the daughter of a prominent Nova Scotian family, she paid less and less attention to her personal appearance. A deep depression of spirits, followed by intense melancholy, now settled upon her and she spent sleepless nights pacing her room to and fro, and only sought the air after dark, attired in man's apparel, simply to avoid molestation.

After several years of this miserable existence, the second battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment, of which Pinsen was lieutenant, was transferred to Barbados, and in spite of past experiences of that "hope deferred which maketh the heart sick," Adele determined to follow him thither, thinking that time would surely soften his heart and compel him to fulfil honorably what she considered the sacred obligation to which they were both bound by the marriage contract of the old, sweet past. With this intent she followed him secretly from one West Indian station to another—for none of his brother officers ever knew of her existence—until finally his regiment was ordered home to Dublin, Ireland, in 1869; and in the following year, Pinsen (now advanced to a captaincy) was again transferred to Canterbury, England, where he sold his commission and married an English lady of Norwood, near London, who was said to have had an annual income of fifteen hundred pounds.

The terrible strain on mind and heart, aggravated by her enforced and self-inflicted seclusion, could have but one ending—mental collapse—and Mlle. Hugo left the West Indies in charge of a nurse for an asylum in the United States; but not long after was found wandering alone in the streets of New York unable to say more than "I am the daughter of Victor Hugo." She was kindly cared for and sent back to her friends in France, but with wide-staring eyes and sealed lips as to the complete history of her long martyrdom; and thus a stranger and more absorbing drama than her father ever wrote was never fully revealed to the world. She never wholly recovered her reason, and since her father's death occupied his villa, morose and solitary, seldom speaking and never of the past. Occasionally she went to Paris to witness from the back of a darkened box a reproduction of one of her father's plays, doubtless dimly realizing that the tragedy of her own life—now at last ended—arose from "not loving wisely, but too well." — The Canadian Bookman.

SANTAL MIDY

CATARRH of the BLADDER relieved in 24 HOURS

Each Capsule bears the name MIDY

Beware of counterfeits

Heydey of the Muskrat.

The modest muskrat has at last obtained his proper meed of appreciation. His coat, the "Hudson seal" of commerce, has become the most fashionable of furs, and costs just about treble the price that it fetched before the war.

For the latter fact there is another reason, viz., that the extraordinary cold of winter before last froze multitudes of muskrats to death, thereby reducing very largely the available supply of the animals.

The value of the muskrat to-day seems strange to many a middle-aged Canadian who trapped these little animals, about a quarter of a century ago, when he was a lad attending high school, and received from 10 to 25 cents per skin.

Some muskrats are stream-dwellers, and make their homes in burrows in the banks thereof. But mostly they live in swamps, and build for themselves houses of twigs and refuse vegetation two or three feet high. The house has a hole, for entrance and exit, beneath the surface of the water; and in winter time the occupants make their way out under the ice to look for water-lily roots, mollusks or other food.

In the winter before last, however, the ice over many marsh areas froze right down to the bottom, so that the poor rodents, unable to get food, starved to death.

A muskrat is nearly as big as a fair-sized cat. It "molts" in summer, shedding its hair, and its new peltage is not well grown until early in the following year. Skins taken in February and March (known to the trade as "spring" pelts) are in best condition and fetch the highest price.

About seventy skins are required to make one of those long and beautiful coats that are so much admired nowadays. But the average person who buys a muskrat coat does not realise that one may be worth more than twice as much as another, even when the two are fashioned exactly alike. How far this is true may be judged by the prices paid for skins at the great annual fur auction in St. Louis last September. On that occasion 552,396 muskrat pelts were sold in wholesale lots at $2 apiece for "fall" skins, $3.05 for "springs," $3.60 for "spring dark," $3.90 for "spring, extra large" and $5.10 for "spring extra large and dark."

The Groundhog.

Nobody knows where the groundhog got its "rep" as a weather forecaster, but belief in its powers in this regard seems to be very ancient.

It is a kind of marmot (therefore related to the prairie dog) and makes its home in a burrow twenty or thirty feet long, which descends obliquely four or five feet, and then gradually rises to a large round chamber, where the groundhog family sleeps and brings up the young ones.

In the daytime the wood chuck (as is otherwise called) never goes far from its burrow. When angry or alarmed it makes a chattering noise, sometimes utters a shrill whistle. Its bite is severe, and it will make a desperate fight against a dog.

Sugar Bearing Trees.

Prof. John Davidson's discovery of a rare specimen of sugar, scientifically known as melezitose, in a limited area in British Columbia, on leaf tips of Douglas fir trees is arousing considerable interest throughout that province. Previous to its discovery by the head of the department of botany in the British Columbia University, melezitose was obtained only in Turkestan and Persia.

Prof. Davidson first heard of the strange phenomenon in 1914. Stories had come from the interior telling of large gatherings of Indian tribes, who, during the summer would hold pow-wows for a month or more, depending on plants for their food. Answers which Prof. Davidson received regarding his enquiries as to what plants were eaten by the Indians, so roused his curiosity that he decided to explore the upper country. While he was preparing for this trip he received a specimen of Douglas fir sugar from James Teit of Spence's Bridge, who said that Indians in his district had used it many years for food. Immediate investigations were made by Prof. Davidson, who was surprised to find that no previous record had been made of the existence of Douglas fir sugar. The professor says that the sugar cannot be relied on as an annual crop, as some years it is abundant, other years very little is found.

The region in which the sugar-bearing firs are most abundant includes the driest and hottest part of the British Columbia dry belt, namely, Thompson Valley, west of the mouth of the Nicola river, near the junction of the Thompson and Fraser rivers, including Lytton and above Lillooet in the Fraser Valley, Spence's Bridge, Kamloops, Savona, Nicola and Similkameen valleys, and is said to be in the southern portions of the Okanagan Valley.

When asked about the commercial possibilities of the discovery, Prof. Davidson said sugar-bearing trees were in such a limited area and conditions under which they exuded sugar have to be so ideal, that its use as a household substitute for the Cuban variety is unlikely. It would probably cost $66 a pound, he added. Its chief value is to scientists and chemists, with whom it is in great demand. They use it to test other grades of sugar, as melezitose has three times the food value of ordinary cane sugar.

A Prehistoric Niagara.

What engineers believe is an ancient Niagara Falls, buried for thousands of years, has been uncovered during the course of excavations for the new Welland Ship Canal, reports the Universal Engineer of New York. It says:

"The 'skeleton' of this great prehistoric cataract, according to engineers in charge of construction, was fully as wide and probably had a greater fall than the present Niagara Falls. The first indications of the former cataract came to light when workmen uncovered a series of ledges in the form of steps with a total drop of twenty-five feet and a width of four hundred feet. The rock from this point sloped sharply and at a distance of about one hundred feet from the end of the ledges showed a depth of seventy-five feet.

"Here was discovered what is believed to have been the main precipice over which the rushing water plunged hundreds of feet to its bed below. The surface of the rock showed unmistakable signs of having been worn smooth by the action of water rushing over it for countless years. There is nothing in history that mentions this former cataract, but experts believe it once formed the chief link between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. Eight-Mile Creek, a small stream, now flows over part of the course of the prehistoric waterway, and this in turn will soon become the new ship canal.

Finland occupies about 144,000 square miles of territory, of which 125,689 square miles are land. This territory, which is slightly larger than Norway, has a population of only 3,484,000 people. It is said that illiteracy is almost unknown.

To match any material, have druggist show you "Diamond Dye" Color Card.

Solitude.

What period do you think I recall most frequently and most willingly in my dreams? Not the pleasures of my youth; they are too rare, too much mingled with bitterness and now too distant. I recall the period of my seclusion, of my solitary walks, of the fleeting but delicious days that I have passed entirely by myself, with my beloved dog, my old cat, with the birds of the field, the hinds of the forest, with all nature and her inconceivable Author.—Rousseau.

Life Not Merely Lapse of Years.

The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat and drink and sleep; to be exposed to the darkness and the light; to pass round in the mill of habit; and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our bookkeeper and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened; and the sanctities still slumber which make it most worth while to be.—James Martineau.

Lavender Smokers.

Long before tobacco was known or smoked, sweet lavender was a favorite smoking mixture. Pipes have been dug up in Roman settlements, adorned with base-reliefs picturing the lavender plant. From which it is surmised that the Romans smoked lavender, which, according to writers of the time, is said to produce a feeling "active, ardent, and vigorous."

The Queue for Canadian Rye.

Walking down Oxford street, London, Eng., the other day we saw an extraordinary sight, a long double queue of all sorts and conditions of men and women waiting to gain admission to a public house. The queue stretched around the corner of Soho street, and at each end was a constable, with a mounted policeman in front of the door. On asking a sergeant the meaning of this protected crowd, we received the laconic answer, "Whiskey!" It is stated in some of the papers that there are large importations of American and Canadian whiskey from the useless stores of those countries.—Saturday Review.

THIS MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Both Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Steele, Ala.—"During the Change of Life I had hot flashes, was nervous, run down, and had sick headaches for two or three days at a time. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am much stronger and better in every way than I was. My daughter's health broke down last June from teaching school without a rest, and she has taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the Blood Medicine with good results. She is much better and teaching now and I give your medicine the praise. You are welcome to use this letter for the benefit of other suffering women."—Mrs. F. A. GAINES, R.R. No. 1, Steele, Ala.

Women who suffer as Mrs. Gaines did should not hesitate to give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial, as the evidence that is constantly being published proves beyond question that this grand old remedy has relieved much suffering among women.

For confidential advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of their forty years' experience is at your service.

Importance of Good Health.

Good health of itself, to be sure does not sum up the whole secret of personality. But it is a most important element, as you will presently appreciate when you adopt rules of living that result in a distinct bettering of your health. You will begin to feel more self-confident. You will attack business problems more masterfully. You will find it far easier to sway others by your personal influence.—H. Addington Bruce, in Chicago News.

Meaning of "Selah."

The word Selah, which occurs so frequently in the Psalms, is usually believed to be a direction to the musicians who chanted the Psalms in the temple. Mattheson, the great musical critic, wrote a book on the subject, in which, after rejecting a number of theories, he came to the conclusion that it is equivalent to the modern "da capo," and is a direction that the air or song is to be repeated from the commencement to the part where the word is placed.

"Good Night" Is Too Long.

The countryman's "How do?" or "How be?" is outclassed by the London printing trade's "Good" or "Good, George"—omitting the "night" and the "morning."—London Chronicle.

That's the Question.

"I bought one of those fountain pens I was telling you about today. The price has come down." "But will the ink come down?"—Boston Transcript.

ART AND ITS INFLUENCE

A Lecture of Most Interesting Nature Delivered at Women's Art Association by Mr. W. H. Pretty C. E..

Before a very thoughtful and appreciative audience, a well-thought-out and interesting lecture on the subject of "Art and Its Influence" was delivered to the members of the Women's Art Association of Peterborough at the Conservatory last Thursday evening by Mr. W. H. Pretty, C.E.

Mr. Pretty, who has his subject at his finger-tips, so to speak, is one of the engineers of the Trent Valley Canal and being a member of the University of London, Eng., is well competent to speak on such a theme which from his readiness of detail would appear to be a hobby with him.

After Mrs. Mowatt, the vice-president had called the meeting to order—and requested those present to join in singing our National Anthem, God Save the King—in a few well-chosen words she introduced the lecturer to his audience. She said that these Thursday evening talks, which the society had arranged and which at the present—so far as this season is concerned—she enumerated, had been very helpful and the opportunity of hearing about the influence of art from a man who had lived in the old land, gave the society a far better chance than they could get otherwise, for in this land we have so few opportunities of seeing good works of art.

What Constitutes Art?

Mr. Pretty then said in substance: "What constitutes art? There are many definitions. For my own part I prefer, first of all, those things which embody everything beautiful, and which appeals to the best instincts of mankind, all that is highest in thought, tending to the highest relations of love to mankind. To one it is a decidedly religious question. The late well-known Thomas Carlyle, that well-known crabbed critic, spoke volumes when, referring to his story, he said: 'I think myself that art is one of the most outstanding facts in history.' This is Carlyle's thought; it is a concisely written and short sermon.

How Art Itself is Really a Collection of Facts.

"These are before our eyes, when in early days art was connected with language marks and scratches were made. These constituted hieroglyphics and in Egypt more particularly these marks became records, indelible records on monuments giving names of rulers under whom such monuments were erected. These hieroglyphics being the writing of the times, examples of ancient sign writing were here shown on an old black-board.

"From these hieroglyphicys grew the modern languages.

"In Egypt essentially the first hieroglyphic work were inscriptions on tombs, thence a wonderful development of sculpture arose, the oldest piece known being made some 2,500 years, B.C. This was composed of linen covered with a species of stereco and finally painted. The eyes of the statue were made of opaque quartz with a metal button in the centre to represent the pupils."

Step by Step.

The lecturer went on from the first crude ideas of the Egyptians to the much advanced style of ancient Greeks. There were many slippery stones in the path of art, whether in music, speech, jewellery, ornamental work, bronze reproduction, weaving, carving, architectural painting or sculpture. The first advances after hieroglyphics were the reliefs, viz., bas relief, medio and high relief.

To the lover of art an artist is the interpreter of the idealism of the real. In Egypt and more particularly Greece, there were large numbers of skilled men available. Phydias, the great Grecian sculptor, must have had all his time taken up in directing, rather than in actual carving.

Pathetic scenes do not readily lend themselves to be represented in either painting or sculpture. Many works of art are historical. For instance, Gustave Dore's great picture of "Christ Leaving the Pratorium." There are some things impossible to reproduce on canvass or in sculpture. For example, the pathos of Barrie or the humor and pathos of Charles Dickens. To reproduce with proper climatic effect his marvellous picture, "The Shadow of the Cross," Holman Hunt spent a long period in the Holy Land studying the effects of weather under all and every condition. The picture, "Behold, I tand at the Door and Knock," so well known to every lover of art, will go down as an historical picture to posterity.

Greece was the first country to develop art. Later on they were followed by the Romans. Some of the sculptures of the time are to be found in the ruins of the Acropoles or Temple of the Athene Panthenos (the Virgin Athene), a church or temple erected to this goddest long before the Christian era, now about 2,500 years old. So perfect is the work that even now the joints cannot be discovered. Parts may be seen in the British museum where they are known as the Elgin marbles.

Through Florence, with its Leonardi d Vinci, Michel Angelo and Dante, through Venice, with its marvellous art treasures, the lecturer brought us down to later times.

Gothic Art in England, instancing Westminister Abbey as a splendid specimen of gothic art, now around 900 years old. Ely Cathedral, Fountains Abbey, Ripon Cathedral have most delicate slender form in pillars and arches.

Rheims Cathedral, so terribly maltreated by the Huns in the late war, has such an influence that people go there from all over the world to view at the magnificent specimen of gothic art. Very much the same applies to the Cathedrals of Chartres and Cologne.

Three Ems Space.

The space at disposal will not admit of a more detailed report of this most interesting lecture. Another column could be easily and profitably filled. Suffice it now to say that the lecturer advised his audience not to be satisfied with listening but to endeavor to produce.

"Let each member have her own little sanctum or work-shop and work in it and produce something in as perfect a form as she could possibly make it and which they could show to their friends."

Mrs. Fessenden then proposed a very hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Pretty, which was seconded by Mrs. Frank Mowatt, and conveyed to the lecturer by Mrs. Mowatt, and the very interesting proceedings terminated.

Suffering In Asia Minor.

Syria and Palestine have suffered unspeakably from the war. Over 600,000 were killed, another 400,000 perished from hunger, disease and abuse, and thousands have not enough rags to cover them. There are 300,000 orphans to be helped. "Some of the noblest leaders of today are the ophans who were saved from the massacres of 1896 and trained for service. Relief work helps to break down bigotry and to open human hearts to God's message."

The Canadian Thistle.

An up-to-date way of doing battle with the Canadian thistle is that used by an Oregon man, who inoculates patches of the beautiful but strangling weed with a fungus growth which destroys the plants, root and all.

A Mohammedan Meal.

It is a rule with the Mohammedans to begin a meal with salt and finish with vinegar. If they begin with salt they think they will escape the contagion of seventy diseases. If they finish with vinegar, their worldly prosperity will continue to increase.

Cats In London.

Thirty thousand starving cats are rescued from London streets every year. They are painlessly killed, their skins being used for muffs and gloves.

On the north of Australia is the greatest coral reef in the world. It is more than 1,000 miles wide.

German Baroness Wants To Become Once Again An American Citizen

THE international marriages of Uncle Sam's fair daughters who have gone title hunting, with large bank accounts as bait, have not always turned out happily, but Miss Frances Scoville, formerly of San Francisco, has met with more financial disaster than has fallen to the lot of any of her sisters. When the daughter of an American millionaire marries an impecunious count or an earl with a thoroughly decayed estate and everything in pawn but his title, she must expect to spend considerable money on the restoration of her poverty-stricken husband. But when Frances Scoville married the Baron Walter de Mumm of Germany, it was not a case of getting a title in return for so much money. Baron de Mumm had very valuable estates in France, and used his properties to carry on the big business there. Then came the war, and the French Government confiscated all his properties. The Baron and Baroness Walter de Mumm found their income materially reduced, but still the baroness was worth considerable. Then the United States went into the war. Now, under international law, the wife takes the same nationality as her husband. Feminists may wax wrothy that such is the case, but the fact remains. Baroness Walter de Mumm (nee Frances Scoville) was a German in the eyes of the law, and the American Government accordingly had the right to take possession of anything that belonged to her. She was an alien enemy. Since the end of the war Baroness de Mumm has taken rather unusual proceedings in order to secure a share of the property that used to be hers. She is appealing to the American Congress to have her United States citizenship restored. The case is an unprecedented one, and the results are being awaited with interest by other women who have suffered along the same lines as Baroness de Mumm, though to a lesser extent.

BARONESS DE MUMM.

Don't Be Lazy.

A man may be a born genius, but if he will not exert himself be can achieve little.

Laziness is fatal to success.

History contains few instances where sluggards have risen to the top.

All worthwhile results are achieved by effort, usually by painstaking, persistent, unsparing effort.

Ignorance usually is a consequence of laziness.

And ignorance leads, not to success, but to failure.

Mental laziness is more common perhaps than physical laziness.

It is not hard to go on doing things which require no mental exertion and little bodily effort.

But hard, earnest, sustained mental comfort is beyond the sluggard.

Laziness acts on one as a drug

It tightens its grip upon one silently, stealthily, but, in course of time fatally.

It can always find excuses for itself.

Poverty is one of the commonest fruits of laziness.

The path of laziness is the straightest of all paths to want and woe.

To combat it, cultivate a healthy body and a sound mind, and once you doggedly try you will be surprised how much more fun there is in doing things, than in doing nothing.—Forbes Magazine.

POTATOES COME A FOOT IN LENGTH

PEACE RIVER CLIMATE AND SOIL ENCOURAGES GROWTH

Mr. Frank White, an old Peterborough boy, who now conducts a successful ranch in the Peace River district, is the guest of his brother, Mr. Gus White, proprietor of the White House.

As this is Mr. White's first visit to his home town in many years, he naturally notes many changes in Peterborough. Mr. White's ranch is situated some four hundred miles from Edmonton. When asked whether the climate, that includes a 60 below winter, precluded the growing of crops, he replied:

"Well, we have to pretty near peel our potatoes with a draw-knife as 'murphies' a foot long are quite common. Price of potatoes in this district is $2 a bushel, due to the fact that tens of thousands of this vegetable were frozen in the ground, winter unexpectedly striking Peace River district in one night without the usual warning signs."

Mr. White returns home in a few days.

Red Tape Citadel

"Circumlocution office" is a description used by the great novelist, Charles Dickens, in his book, "Little Dorrit," to ridicule official delays and indirectness. It is described as the chief of "public departments in the art of perceiving how not to do it." The name has come into popular use as a synonym for governmental routine, "red tape," procrastination and delay in transacting public business.

"The Universal Marrier."

Canon Edgar Sheppard, chaplain to the King and Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal for thirty-five years, is contemplating retirement.

Canon Sheppard, who is in his seventy-fifth year, is a great favorite of the King and Queen, to whose children he has long been religious tutor.

His personality is so charming that he has smiled for many years under the sobriquet of "the universal marrier," from the fact that very few fashionable weddings take place at which the sub-dean is not there to officiate.

It is almost a proverbial saying that not one marriage by Canon Sheppard has proved unhappy. The sub-dean is so widely liked that it was once averred that to be baptised, married, or buried without his assistance was next to impossible.

An engraving of the coronation of the present King and Queen, signed by every person of the many figuring in it, is hanging up in his office at the Chapel Royal, St. James' Palace.

The excellence of the choir at the Chapel Royal is due largely to his musical knowledge. Dr. Sheppard once resorted to a novel method of composing his sermons, which during the war were characterized by a dignified lack of passion or panic. He often walked backwards and forwards in Hyde Park near the Serpentine for hours at a stretch, jotting down occasionally a few notes.

The present Bishop of London came to preach at the chapel not long after Dr. Sheppard was appointed sub-dean, and the usual bottle of sherry from the Buckingham Palace cellars—an old custom when an outsider preached—was opened. Dr. Ingram tasted the sherry, pulled a wry face, and pronounced it rank! The sub-dean, who had never troubled to taste the wine himself, discovered that the verger had been substituting for the priceless royal Madeira a bottle of the cheapest sherry procurable, and at the same time had made a little nest-egg for himself by selling the Queen's wine. The sub-dean dismissed the man, and took the opportunity of ending the sherry-bibbling practice, of which he entirely disapproved.

Damages Aplenty.

A lawyer tells of a visit he received from a Mrs. Delehanty, accompanied by Mr. Delhanty, the day after Mrs. Delehanty and a Mrs. Cassidy had indulged in a little differences of opinion.

When he had listened to the recital of Mrs. Delehanty's troubles the lawyer said:

"You want to get damages, I suppose?"

"Damages! Damages!" came in shrill tones from Mrs. Delehanty. "Damages! No, indeed, I've got damages enough. What I want is satisfaction."

BRICKLAYER CLAIMS TITLE.

Wants Seat in House of Lords and Rent Roll of $150,000.

If John G. Rackshaw, erstwhile bricklayer of Sunderland, can establish his claim to the peerage of Dumbarton and estate of Burnbrae, carrying with it the title of Lord Lennox, he will give up his trowel and sit on one of the red-leather covered benches in the House of Lords, with a top hat cocked a bit on one side of his head in the accepted House of Lords manner. No women having as yet got into the House of Lords, the peers can still comfortably wear their toppers.

But Rackstraw the bricklayer has a long way to go before it will be decided whether or not he is Lord Lennox, especially as there has been an eleventh-hour claimant to the title in the person of Mrs. Margaret Jones of Birkenhead. It is reputed that an annual rent roll of $150,000 goes with the title, and with it all the accustomed prestige of a peerage.

Rackstraw tells his story thus:

"I remember as a lad that every night when I came home from school my old grandmother, who brought me up, used to tell me that I should be a nobleman one day. Her story was that my great-great-grandmother was a descendant of the Douglas family of Scotland, and that we were really related to Mary Queen of Scots. She had but little money, but she made many sacrifices to keep me at school in order that I might get some education to fit me for the position to which I was entitled. For a time I acted as a school teacher, but I fell out with the headmaster and gave it up, and learned the trade of bricklaying, at which I have worked ever since."

One day, when Rackstraw's life seemed just one brick after another, he saw an advertisement in a London paper which flashed vividly on to his mind screen the story told him by his grandmother.

There was something else that gave Rackstraw a "hunch" that he was the man who, despite his proficiency in bricklaying, was destined to rightfully take his place in the nobility. Mrs. Rackstraw, his wife, had dreamed just about this time that she had been walking through a castle and a big estate in Scotland along with her eldest brother.

Rackstraw immediately began collecting evidence in support of his case.

Owing to shortness of money, Rackstraw said, he has been hard put to it to pursue his claim, but one of his sons, a draughtsman, has helped him. He estimates his cost up to date at $4,000. Rackstraw, who is a hale and hearty man of sixty, is optimistic about his claim

"I am the heir, and there is no doubt about it," he declares. "I can trace my ancestry back to 1581, and I think I shall win."

Rackstraw's solicitor, John Anderson, of Edinburgh, has informed him that the three women who are the present holders have withdrawn their defence, but that he must contest the claim of Mrs. Margaret Jones, who says she is a direct descendant of the Lennoxes and Grahams, and therefore more closely related in lineal descent to the last Lord Lennox of Dumbarton than the Hays, from whom, it is asserted, Rackstraw traces his forbears on his mother's side

DANDRUFF SOON GETS YOUR HAIR

Let "Danderine" check nasty scarf and stop hair falling out

To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a small bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter for a few cents, pour a little in your hand and rub it into the scalp. After several applications the hair usually stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff. Soon every hair on your scalp shows new life, vigor, brightness, thickness and more color.

"BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS" BOUGHT BY GOLDWYN

GRAHAM MOFFAT'S FAMOUS Pulls t heStrings" was received with COMEDY TO BE SCREENED

The most famous of all plays dealing with Scotch character, and the most successful from an artistic and popular standpoint, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. For a number of years motion picture producers have sought the rights to this great stage triumph, but without avail until last week, when the deal that assures the screening of the play by Goldwyn was closed.

The Shuberts and William A. Brady were associated in the stage production of "Bunty Pulls the Strings" at the Comedy Theatre, October 10, 1911, and for many months thereafter the producers and Graham Moffat, the author, reaped large profits from a run that was one of the sensations of the season. Hailed as a unique contribution to the stage of this country, Mr. Mocat's play started a vogue of comedies with Scotland as a background, but nothing since has equalled "Bunty Pulls the Strings."

A Success Everywhere.

After a Broadway season, "Bunty Pulls the Strings" was received with equal acclaim in other large cities. The name is known wherever there is a public for stage plays, and the magnificent film presentation to be made by Goldwyn will profit by the great popularity of Mr. Mogat's original work. The reputation of Molly Pearson was permanently established after her inimitable portrayal of Bunty, who was a past-mistress of the art of "pulling the strings," in other words, directing the actions of those with whom she came in contact. Supporting Miss Pearson was a company of Scotch and English players.

While "Bunty Pulls the Strings" is essentially a play of character, and appeals by reason of its charm and simplicity, there is enough action to assure an interesting photoplay story of a type new to the screen and well in accord with the policy of Goldwyn making pictures of the highest artistic merit. It is not announced what star will be presented in the leading role that is rich in opportunities for exceptional acting.

ICELAND A FREE STATE.

Story That Canada Would Adopt Country Was Wrong.

Information has been received from Copenhagen, Denmark, that the Danish Consul-General in London, J. E. Boeggild, has been appointed Danish Minister to Iceland. Denmark surprised the world last year by recognizing Iceland as a free and sovereign state, united with Denmark only by the same king. In further acknowledgment of Iceland's position as an independent state, the Danish Government has now sent a Minister to Iceland, the first ever credited to the old Saga Island.

This recent action of Denmark sets at rest the story current last year that Iceland would be adopted by the Dominion of Canada after the Peace Treaty was signed. The story always seemed ridiculous to Canadians.

Mr. Boeggild seems especially fitted for this post, as he has Icelandic blood in his veins. On the maternal side he is descended from the well-known Tulinius family of Iceland, which traces its origin back to Thorfinn Karlsefni, one of the famous Norsemen who discovered America nearly a thousand years ago. Karlsefni, of whom a statue was recently erected in Philadelphia, was the first white man to settle in America, spending two years in "Wineland," where his wife, Gudrid, gave birth to a boy, who was called Snorri. From Snorri descended a numerous and distinguished lineage, among whom is numbered the Tulinius family, and the new Minister to Iceland can thus lay claim to being descended from the first white man born in America.

Iceland, which has now formally taken its place among the free states of the world, being absolutely independent in home affairs and only represented by Denmark in foreign affairs, has an area of 40,437 square miles. But the inhabitants of Iceland number only about 90,000. The mountain ranges and extensive lava deserts make a large part of Iceland uninhabitable. Since 1870 a considerable emigration from Iceland to America has taken place, and about 15,000 Icelanders are now living in Canada and the United States.

Although the main industry of Iceland is farming, the country does not produce a single bushel of grain. Wheat, corn, barley—everything in the line of breadstuffs—must be imported. There are no trees on Iceland, and the story, published last year in some newspapers, that the Icelanders were suffering from famine and had to make bread out of the bark of trees was, therefore, an amusing piece of fiction. But grasses grow in abundance and on their meadows the inhabitants are dependent for the keep of their live stock.

Sheep are Iceland's main source of wealth. The 90,000 inhabitants own more than 600,000 sheep, exclusive of lambs. Large quantities of wool and salted mutton are exported yearly. The number of cattle is not quite 30,000, but the Icelanders nevertheless are able to export about 300,000 pounds of butter yearly, having learned the co-operative dairy system from Denmark.

The Icelanedrs are noted as some of the ablest, most daring and persevering fishermen in the world, and the cod fisheries in Icelandic waters stand second to none in importance; excellent profit is also realized from the herring fishery. The fishing was formerly carried on from open boats, but the Icelanders now own a modern, strictly up-to-date fishing fleet, consisting of decked motor boats.

Iceland is not a rich country, the national wealth being estimated at about 120,000,000 kroner, or $33,000,000. But the Icelanders point with pride to the fact that no people's national wealth yields a higher interest than does theirs.

Before the war, Iceland was in the unique position of having no national debt. Instead, it had a balance of 250,000 kroner. But during the war it became necessary for the Icelandic Government to take over most of the trade and for this purpose heavy loans had to be raised. At the beginning of 1918 the national debt, therefore, amounted to nearly twenty million kroner (over five million dollars), but for this the Government has values in steamships, merchandise, etc.

The Uses of the Shark.

Valuable as are the minerals of Alaska, and important as is its promise of future agricultural development, the world seems in a fair way to owe yet another debt of gratitude to it for a new kind of leather. The cow, horse, sheep, and goat have shod us, provided us with gloves, trunks, traveling bags, and whatever else is made of leather, but leather is becoming far more expensive than one likes to think of, and the idea of a new and unlimited supply is available, for an Alaskan plant has for some time been tanning the skin of the shark with results indicating that shark leather is not only something "just as good" but quite a bit better than the leather of ordinary use. The practical development of the plant was shown the other day by the visit of J. F. Lavarne, of Alaska, expert in the art of the tanner, to the east, to secure new machinery, and to interest some of the fishing vessels of Gloucester in the new industry of gathering material for shark leather. For some time past, it appears also, various governments have been experimenting with the new product, taking up nearly all the shark leather that has yet been tanned, but at the same time sharkskin shoes have been worn by persons employed in the industry with results that bear out all the claims made for shark leather.

Belgians In Toronto.

Eight families and nine unmarried men, making altogether 28 persons, have arrived from Belgium to make their homes in Toronto. Twenty of these Belgians are spinners, and will be employed in the York Knitting Mills. To build up new industries in this country skilled hands from the countries whence we imported products of such industries are needed at the outset.

Mrs. Wm. Reid, wife of a farmer near Cottam, 24 miles south of Windsor, has been missing since Tuesday afternoon.

WHAT THE HEXATHLON CONTESTS AT LOCAL Y.M.C.A. REALLY MEAN

Peterboro Ranks With Biggest Cities in America in These Sport Competitions.

To the average person the word Hexathlon means absolutely nothing but to those who are interested in the athletic side of life a picture of competition unfolds itself. Peterboorugh Y. M. C. A. boys are familiar indeed with this phase of sport wherein the team from our city runs and jumps in the local "Y" gymnasium and matches its record against that of every association in North America. And in the race Peterborough has made known to other cities that she has within her boundaries men and boys who are well fitted physically for the battle of life. Three years ago Peterborough Y. M. C. A. stood in ninth place and two years ago in seventh place, even in competing with such associations as New York and Chicago.

Ere now, the average person before referred to, will have grasped that Hexathlon had something to do with sport and athletics, but just in what form he knows not. Hexathlon in itself means six events; it is in these of various degrees, that each group competes. Why, I have heard of an age limit in athletic fields but never of a weight group unless it be the fat man's race. But in the Hexathlon, were it run on the age basis, John Brown in New York might only be 14 years of age and a much larger boy than Willie Smith in Peterborough of the same age. It would not therefore be fair to match these two on the same basis of award. What is done however, is that each boy or man is weighed and those weighing 60 to 80 pounds are grouped into the 80 pound class; 81 to 95 in the 95 pound class; 96 to 110 lbs. in the 110 pound class; 111 to 125 lbs. in the 120 pound class and all over this weight in the unlimited class. These weight groups are only confined to Junior or boys' Hexathlon contest for those under the age of 18 years. All senior Hexathlon contests are run in the unlimited class.

The Hexathlon contests are the working out of a Canadian idea. About 15 years ago they were started in Canada and have spread to the States, and are now a basis of International competition.

Peterborough numbers among her boys at the present time many who in the Hexathlon trials run off in January, registered in excess of the 100 points provided as the standard in each event. These youths are bound to make a great showing in the International Hexathlon which will be held in the United States and in Canada during the last two weeks of the present month. Each week's trial in the gymnasium shows an improvement in the individual score of each young athlete.

Six Events

But in what do they compete. As we have said there are six events for each weight group.

80-Pound Class

One Potato Race— 4 3-5 seconds; 100 points.

Three Potato Race—16 3-5 seconds; 100 points.

Broad Jump— 7ft. 1 inch; 100 points

Target Throw—4 bull's eyes; 100 points.

95-Pound Class

One Potato Race—4 seconds; 100 points.

Four Potato Race—22 seconds; 100 points.

Broad Jump—7ft 7 1-2 inches; 100 points.

High Jump— 4ft 5 1-2 inches; 100 points.

Snap Under Bar— 6ft 4 1-2 inches; 100 points.

Target Throw—4 Bull's eyes; 100 points.

110-Pound Class

Two Potato Race—9 3-5 seconds; 100 points.

Five Potato Race—27 seconds; 100 points.

Broad Jump—8ft 10 inches; 100 points

High Jump—4ft 7 1-2 inches; 100 points.

Snap Under Bar—6ft 7 inches; 100 points.

Target Throw—4 Bull's eyes; 100 points.

125-Pound Class

Two Potato Race—9 2-5 seconds; 100 points.

Six Potato Race—33 seconds; 100 points.

Broad Jump— 8ft. 7 inches; 100 points.

High Jump—4ft 9 1-2 inches; 100 points.

Shot Put— 37ft. 10 inches; 100 points.

Fence Vault — 5ft. 7 inches; 100 points.

Unlimited Class (over 125 Pounds)

Three Potato Race— 15 seconds; 100 points.

Six Potato Race—32 4-5 seconds; 100 points.

Broad JJump—8ft 11 1-2 inches; 100

High Jump— 5ft 1 1-2 inches; 100 points.

Shot Put—42ft; 100 points.

Fence Vault— 5ft 11 inches; 100 points.

On Saturday evening of this week the second of the trials of the Hexathlon training will take place in the form of a competitive Field Day between the different junior groups of the Y.M.C.A. Supper wil be served at 5:30 p.m.

FIRST GAME O.H.A. FINALS IN KINGSTON TONIGHT

LIMESTONE CITY HAS GOOD CHANCE TO WIN THE CHAMPIONSHIP

Kingston, March 5.—Collingwood will play here tonight with Kingston in the first of the home and home games in the intermediate O. H. A. finals. The return game will be played in Collingwood on Monday night. This was decided on Tuesday in Toronto when representatives of the two teams tossed for the first game, Charley Stewart, who represented Kingston, losing the toss to Collingwood, and the Northern team representative promptly picked the second game for Collingwood.

Friday night will be the first time since 1911 that Kingston fans have had a chance to see a local team playing in the finals. True, they were in the finals last year, but both games were played at the Toronto Arena.

Kingston has a very good chance to win from Collingwood and cop the intermediate championship. Collingwood has the same team as last year, while Kingston is a better team than when they last played Collingwood. At any rate there promises to be the biggest crowd at the game that ever attended a hockey match here, and excitement will reign from the drop of the puck to the end of the game. The O. H. A. has made all arrangements for the handling of the sale of seats and has decided to open the rink at 5.30 on Friday afternoon.

FIVE PINS NEXT WEEK

Next week's games will include contests in the Business Men's Five Pin League.

Monday—Centrals vs. Clerks.

Tuesday—Lawn Bowlers vs. De Laval.

The Ten Pin eLague:

The play-off between De Laval and Grocers will take place on Wednesday night for first place in the second round.

Tonight—Post Office vs. Brinton Carpet. As great game is expected as both teams will work hard to get into first place.

:-: BOWLING :-:

Bowling at the "Y" last night was between Murray Street and St. Andrew's teams, the latter being the winner by capturing two out of three in the night's bowling. To St. Andrew's bowlers a 200 score seemed easy, while Murray Street men only chalked in twice. Ward in the first game and Browett in the last.

The next league game is to be played on Saturday, March 6th, at 7.30 p.m., All Saints vs. George St.

NEW SKATING RINK

Belleville, March 4.—The city is assured of a new up to date skating rink, stated Mr. Ernest P. Frederick. The plan is to have a rink as the home of a real hockey team. The proposed rink is to be 125 by 200 feet. Already $10,000 has been subscribed. The purpose is to provide accommodation for from three thousand to four thousand people. Mr. Frederick favors the installation of an artificial ice plant.

The rink will be an all-year round structure, for use for assemblies, musical festivals and other gatherings when the hockey season is over. It is proposed to have as many citizens as possible take an interest in the project. A company is to be formed known as the Belleville Amusement Company, Ltd., to carry on the scheme.

WILL HAVE GIANT STATUE.

Monument to Christopher Columbus In Buenos Aires.

As voyagers entering the harbor of the greatest city of North America behold the Statue of Liberty, so within the present year those coming to the greatest city of South America will behold a majestic sentinel, a towering statue of Christopher Columbus.

The monument of the great navigator will not like the Liberty statue in New York, stand in the harbor, for Buenos Aires has no real harbor, but will rise nearly 100 feet in height from a point near the water's edge. The site selected is in the broad Paseo Colon, in front of the Government House, whence the statue will overlook the beautiful Plaza Colon and the wide expanse of the River Plate as it enters the ocean.

Representing ten years' labor of the sculptor Arnaldo Zocchi, appropriately a native of the country in which the discoverer of America was born, the monument soon will be shipped from the artist's workshop in Rome to Buenos Aires, according to recent advices. The image of the navigator is itself 22 feet high carved out of a single block of marble. It will therefor have to be brought over in one piece.

Critics who have visited the sculptor's workshop recently and seen the work virtually completed write that, for symbolic beauty and grandeur of proportions, the monument will be one of the most impressive in the world.

"The column supporting the statue of the navigator is placed upon an ample socle covered with sculptured scenes and figures," says a Rome correspondent of La Razon. "The front part of the socle is the bow of a Latin ship about to be launched into the sea by four youths with naked torsos bent with effort. The scene represents the start of the caravels of Columbus from the port of Palos, Spain.

"High up on the bow of the vessel is the figure of Civilization. In the toga of a Roman matron, she extends with naked arm the torch which illumines the new lands and toward which a youth beside her—Genius—gazes with inspired countenance.

Safety First In Shanghai.

Shanghai has what is called a "Safety First Club," the single aim of which is to prevent the introduction of disease into foreign households through servants. The organization is an outgrowth of activities of St. Luke's Hospital and it was formed to enable members, in return for fixed fees, to have their Chinese servants examined at the hospital periodically.

The need of such an institution in Shanghai is appreciated when it is remembered that the 20,000 or more foreigners are domiciled in a city of more than 2,000,000 which has no sewers and in which none of the ordinary safeguards to preserve the public health exist. Wages are exceedingly low in comparison with Occidental standards, and range from $6, Mexican, a month for the coolie house boy up to probably $15, Mexican, a month for a cook. It is a modest establishment that has not two or more native domestic workers.

Leprosy in advanced stages is to be met with in Shanghai's streets, particularly in the Chinese city, tuberculosis claims 15 per cent. of the Chinese who die every year, tracoma is common, typhoid and para-typhoid are ever present, the social diseases are most widespread.

The foreigner has sought to safeguard his health by following the common practice of engaging his physician by the year, under contract, and by other means. Yet it is felt that the door of the foreign household has been left open to infection by ignoring the condition of servants who are recruited from all quarters of the community and who for the most part come from outside the limits of the international settlement that forms the heart of the city. It is to deal with this source of danger that the Safety First Club was formed.

Churches In France.

Of the 38,000,000 people of France, 12,000,000 are attached to the Roman Catholic church, about 600,000 are confessed Protestants, with perhaps 200,000 more from Alsace and Lorraine. So that 25,000,000, people are without the Christian religion. One chaplain in France declares that there is now an unusual opportunity to reach men and women there with the Gospel, but they need help from other Christian nations.

Hon. W. E. Raney stated that a new Mechanics' Lien Act would be drafted and placed upon the statute books during the coming session of the Legislature.

GOSPEL HALL NOTES

The service in Gospel Hall last evening was up to its usual good standard. The messages given by Evangelist Harper dealing with the fundamental truths of the Word of God are finding acceptance in the hearts of the Christians who attend the meetings. Messages are given each night dealing with the sin of man together with the great love of God toward men as seen in Christ. Much is spoken about the death of Christ as that which gives to the sinner an acceptance before God.

The address last evening dealt largely with the security of the believer in the Lord Jesus Christ. It was pointed out that in John vi: 37 the believer had been given to Christ by the Father before the foundation of the earth. Furthermore, Christ came to earth to do the Father's will as seen in verse 38. And in verse 39 we have the will of the Father expressed, viz., that of all which He gave to Christ He should lose nothing. Emphasis was put on the perfect obedience of the Lord Jesus to the will of the Father, with the assurance that He would not fail in fulfilling this aspect of His Father's will. John x.: 28-30 was cited to prove that those who have trusted Christ are securely held in the hand of the Father and in the hand of the Son.

The death line has been reached on the chart, and the evangelist will be speaking of the condition of the soul after death, tonight. All are welcome to share in the ministry of the Word of God.

PLUMBERS' AND STEAMFITTERS' BANQUET

A very enjoyable event took place last night when the journeymen plumbers and steamfitters held a theatre party and banquet. The first part of the evening was spent at the Grand Opera House, when Fiske O'Hara was playing in "Down Limerick Way."

Afer the show the merry party adjourned to Hooper's Cafe, where a hearty meal was indulged in. A singsong followed and the party dispersed at about midnight.

PATRICK McMARTIN

The sad news was received this morning of the death, at his home, Lot 22, Concession 15, Otonabee, of Patrick McMartin, a well-konwn and highly respected farmer of that district.

Mr. McMartin had been ill for only a short time with pneumonia, and his condition was from the first, serious. Yesterday, deceased grew worse, and in spite of all that care and medical attention could do he passed peacefully away at an early hour this morning.

Mr. McMartin has farmed in Otonabee for many years, and was recognized as being one of the best farmers in the Otonabee district. He was a life long member of the Sacred Heart Church, and was held in the highest esteem by his fellow parishioners.

He leaves to mourn his loss, besides a sorrowing wife, seven daughters Mrs. Powers, Otonabee, Mrs. Styles Toronto; Mrs. Foley, Rochester; Mrs Ingalls, Rochester, Mrs. A. Crowley Otonabee, Mrs. Patrick Cavanagh Otonabee, Catharine McMartin, at home; two sons, Michael, Peterborough and John of Rochester, and three sisters, Mrs. John Dwyer, Peterborough; Mrs. Fox, Hastings; and Mrs. Maher of New Brunswick.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon to the Sacred Heart Church, and thence to St. Peter's cemetery.

MRS. M. WOOD.

An old desident of Otonabee district, Mrs. M. Wood, passed away early yesterday morning after an illness of six days. Mrs. Wood is one of the best known residents of the district, having resided there for the past twenty-three years. She was born in Prince Edward county and had reached an advanced age. Her husband predeceased her seven years ago.

There survive five sons, E. W. Wood of Otonabee, D. H. Wood of Cavan and J. A. and D. F. Wood of St. Catharines.

The funeral will take place tomorrow morning. There will be a service at the house at nine o'clock and the remains will be forwarded to Havelock on the one o'clock C. P. R. train for interment.

JOSEPH A. STABLER.

Joseph A. Stabler, son of the late Joseph Stabler, of South Harvey township, passed away after a short illness. His illness was not at first serious, but pneumonia supervined with fatal results. He is survived by his mother, two brothers, Henry C., 514 Aylmer street; John, Lakehurst, and four sisters, Mrs. Roy Preston, city; Mrs. Sanderson, 506 Chamberlain street, and Eliza and Mabel, at home.

The funeral will take place tomorrow at 1 p.m. from the residence of his mother, 540 Stewart street, to Lakefield Cemetery. Rev. A. J. Thomas, of George Street Methodist Church, will conduct the services.

ALEXANDER REID.

The death took place at 8:30 last night of Alexander Reid at the age of 73 years. Mr. Reid had been ill since Tuesday, and till the last it was not thought that his illness was serious.

His death removes a familiar figure from the life of Peterborough. He had been in the express business in the city for the past 24 years, and was known all over town. He will be greatly missed by tourists and visitors to Peterborough, who could always depend upon Alexander Reid to be there when wanted. He had been a member of St. Andrew's Church and was prominently interested in church and social welfare work. He was also a member of Court 29, C. O. F., and was highly thought of by all the members of the lodge.

His wife predeceased him eight years. He is survived by seven sons, James A., of Banff, Alta.; John W., of Bonner's Ferry, Idaho; Matthew, of Newburgh, Ore.; Walter, Ninette, Man.; Robert, Ernest and Edwin, of Peterborough, and two daughters, Mrs. Frank Lockington, of Nassau, and Miss Annie, at home.

The funeral will take place tomorrow at 1:45 p.m. There will be a service at the house, conducted by Rev. James Rollins, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church. Interment at Little Lake Cemetery.

MRS. A. HENRY.

Elizabeth Goodore, beloved wife of Mr. A. Henry, 238 Simcoe street, passed away at an early hour this morning, after an illness of two weeks' duration. Mrs. Henry was struck down with the dread disease, sleeping sickness. Before becoming unconscious she seemed to have a premonition of her death, and made all preparations, telling her husband that she would not get well again.

In spite of loving care and the medical attention of three doctors, she gradually sank until death came at 5 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Henry was 46 years of age, and had lived twenty-three years in Peterborough. She had always been in the best of health until attacked with the disease two weeks ago.

She is survived by a husband and two sisters, Mrs. Charles Biesterfield, of Saginaw, Mich, and another sister in Detroit.

The funeral will take place Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, interment at Little Lake Cemetery. Rev. W. H. White of St. Luke's Church will conduct the services.

YANKS' CHECK MISSING

Jacksonville, Fla., March 5. — "Lost, $13,000." That is what is worrying the Yankees ever since they heard that they were to land a check for landing third in last season's pennant race. The money has not arrived yet. One check was lost in the mails and another has been started out. The suspense is interfering with spring practice. Manager Huggins was on the scene yesterday and organised a definite schedule of training. Warmer weather helped too, and there was plenty of ginger in the workout.

HONOR FOR J. J. DUFFUS.

At the annual meeting of the Auto Retailers held in Toronto yesterday Mr. J. J. Duffus of this city was elected first vice-president.

A lively session was held and business of much importance accomplished. The association will meet in Toronto again next year.

COST OF LIVING IN FRANCE JUMP

Paris, March 5.—The cost of living in France has jumped 50 per cent as a result of the passage of a law nicreasing by from 40 to 100 per cent the cost of transportation, railroad, subway and taxi fares, and the prices of gas, electricity, bread, refrigerated meat, postal rates, adn municipal taxes.

Economists estimate that the purchasing value of the franc, reduced four-fifths since 1914, may be reduced still further as soon as the Federal Income tax, the percentages of which are as yet unsettled, is enforced.

A TALK ON THE HOUSE WE LIVE IN

MARGARET BLAIR HOLDS ATTENTION OF LARGE AUDIENCE OF LADIES

The lecture on "The House We Live in," by Margaret Blair in the lounge room of the Cressman store proved of much interest to the large number of ladies present.

"We are," she said, "all susceptible to the influence of the beautiful, unconsciously or otherwise. This is only natural, and when we gaze upon a panorama of conflicting colors or inharmonious outlines, the effect is jarring—depressing. So if we would make our home a real home we must turn to Nature for inspiration. We must borrow our ideals from the Great Artist.

"Stroll out ito the woods of summer," the lecturer suggested, "and observe closely your surroundings. Immediately a sense of peace, of rest envelopes you. Your worries seem to drop from you. You cannot think of irritating things in these precincts. It is impossible; and why? Look around you; you will see all is harmony. The massive tree trunks in deep browns and soft greys, the clustering foliage in softly blended shades of green, the deep shades of stone and moss, and pale blue of running streams—these with the canopy of blue overhead are the beautiful things that fill the soul with peace.

"This is the ideal which must prevail in the ideal home, and especially in that one room which is more important than all the others — the living room. Bring into it color scheme—the rich brown, the soft grey and the pale rose of the forest. Be particular to ascertain that there is not in drapery, upholstery, or picture, the least note of glare to mar the harmonious effect, and then we will have a living room that is a haven of restfulness."

Speaking of the old-fashioned style of home decoration, the lecturer was non-plussed to know how the people ever tolerated such discord. Scrolls on the wall and scrolls on the curtains and scrolls on the carpet—and every time you closed your eyes you saw scrolls. Then, again, in regard to picture. It was the frame that mattered, not so much the picture, and oftentimes the very impropriety of the frame, gorgeous though it was, would take every line of expression out of the photograph, every trace of beauty out of the scenery. The art of knowing how to frame a picture in such a way as to bring out all of its beauty is worthy of the homemaker's closest study. This and a knowledge of how to select pictures that are worth while. She exhorted her listeners not to hang up for observation pictures which cannot do otherwise than leave a painful impression. Go into some homes and glance at the walls. You are at once depressed by the sight of horses struggling through a storm. Look again, and you see a ship sinking beneath the waves with its crew floundering in the water. Yet another glance and you are saddened by the awful carnage of war. And then you go away and wonder why you can't smile the remaindes of that day. This is the sort of trouble we can well afford to do without.

MOTHERS WATCH CHILDREN STARVE

LACK OF CLOTHING ADDS TO SUFFERING AMONG JEWISH RESIDENTS OF POLAND

The patient resignation with which a mother in Poland accepts what the fates have in store for her children who frequently die of starvation before her eyes, is one of the things that leaves a lasting impression on relief workers there.

Jacob Bashein, who has just returned from abroad, where he had charge of a relief unit for the Joint Distribution Committee, which disbursed funds raised by the American Jewish Relief Committee and other bodies, said that food is distributed to the children in Lods on a ration basis, and that where the small folks were unable to appear in person because of lack of clothing or illness from the "starvation sickness," the allotment was given to the mother. On one occasion a little woman with great hunger-appealing eyes, asked for four rations. The following day she appeared again and asked for only two.

"Two?" repeated the distributing agent, "Why you received four yesterday."

"Yes, but today I need only two, because," and the worker may have only imagined that he caught a note of relief in the utter hopelessness of the curiously quiet answer, "two of my little ones died during the night."

PETERBORO AND TORONTO BUSINESS MEN INTERESTED IN BIG LUMBER DEAL

Limit Untouched by Ax of Lumbermen to be Acquired and Modern Manufacturing Plant Erected—John Duignan is Moving Spirit in the Concern.

All along the stretch of river and lake that mark the line of water communication from Georgian Bay to Lake Ontario and for a part of the distance intersecting the County of Peterborough, was a hive of industry in the palmy days of the lumber and timber business, that reached its apex in the middle sixties of the last century. From this part of the Midland District was exported a very large part of the forest products that brought into the district the money that in turn built up other industries and enhanced the farmer's opportunity. In process of time and with the ever-increasing demand to be met, the forests were denuded of the best of the timbers until at the present time what is taken out is only a mere song compared with what has been.

Remembering all this, it comes as a surprise to learn that there exists along the shore of Pigeon Lake, on the lands of the Township of Harvey, a large area of practically virgin forest, almost as it stood eighty years ago, and holding a very large quantity of the finest of merchantable pine, oak, spruce, hemlock, maple, elm, basswood and cedar timber. It has been assumed for years that the limits in this district have been practically exhausted other than to supply woods for minor purposes such as ties, rough lumber and fire wood. So it is of interest to know that recent developments and organization bring to public notice what promises to be a revival of the lumber interests in this district.

Directly north of Sandy Point, on Pigeon Lake, are limits as yet untouched. These limits were originally acquired by Mossom Boyd, the elder, and [illegible] Kelly of Bridgenorth. While the mills at Bobcaygeon and Bridgenorth cut immense amounts of standard sizes of merchantable pine and dimension timbers, all that was ever removed from the limits in question was in the shape of masts, which were taken out and sent to Quebec for use in shipping or for export. On the ground still stands the best of the forest growth. Pines that reach 130 feet in height and three feet in diameter, oak of the same diameter and over eighty feet high, spruce and other woods are abundant. Of oak alone there are fully one million feet. The limits also border on Ball Lake.

New Company Organized.

All this forest opportunity has been acquired by a new company, recently organized to exploit the limits and place on the market that which has been reserved so long. The company takes over all the Kelly interests as located at Bridgenorth, at Lakefield or elsewhere. The Kelly business as manufacturers of merchantable lumber passes out of existence and into new hands, to be made use of under a new name. Just how the existing plants will be made use of has not been determined, but it is the intention to prepare for manufacturing on a very large scale.

It is under consideration to build, possibly at Bobcaygeon, a finely equipped band saw mill, containing all the very latest improvements. The mill will be steam driven, as water power is out of the question. A determining feature will be the net cost of laying down at the mill site the logs, and it is to be considered that cost of delivery per 1,000 feet B.M., will be to Bobcaygeon 25 cents, to Lakefield $1.50, and to Peterborough $2.50. That is the cost of floatage and towage. Shipping facilities are good at Bobcaygeon and at Peterborough, while at Lakefield, in between, there is little difference once the lumber is on the cars.

Having the plant at Lakefield to either use or dispose of it will be for the future to decide, as well as to the ultimate disposal of the Bridgenorth mill and plant. As planned, the function of the new mill will be the manufacture of lumber, with, in prospect, that of hardwood flooring and quarter-cut oak and supplies from other hardwoods. It is expected that the capacity will be over 40,000 feet of lumber per day with 25,000 of lath, 25,000 of shingles, and 1,500 railroad ties. As a by-product, there will come out from the saws about thirty cords of slabs, a consideration in any community where fire wood is esteemed. Refuse will be burned under the boilers. Some idea of the opportunity can be had from the fact that three years ago No. 1 pine could be had at $25 per 1,000 feet. Today it cannot be found fast enough to supply the demand at $60 per 1,000.

John Duignan in the Saddle.

The new company, while formed and progressing has not selected its business name. That will be done so soon as the location of the business headquarters is determined, which will likely be at the point of manufacture. But it may be of interest to know that the moving spirit in the formation of the new company and in the grasping of the opportunity is one of our Peterborough men, Mr. John Duignan, so long and favorably known in connection with the A. McDonald Estate of this city. As a worthy introduction to a new business and to a prospective successful venture it may be in place to briefly refer to Mr. Duignan and his connection with lumber interests for the past thirty years.

Mr. Duignan, at the age of 18 years began his business career and gained his first experience with the late T. G. Hazlitt, long known as one of the leading and successful business men of Peterborough, and one of the few who made a success of the lumber business in this part of Canada. At the time mentioned, Mr. Hazlitt was manager of the estate of the late Samuel Dickson. Mr. Duignan was given a position in the lumber camps for three years, and on the formation of the Dickson Company was taken into the business office as bookkeeper, which position he held until the purchase of the Scott Timber Limits by the Company. He was then made superintendent of all the Company's business activities, with mills at Lakefield, Peterborough and at Harwood, with an annual output of lumber and dimension timber of 20,000,000 ft., the greater part of which found a market in the United States.

On the death of Mr. Hazlitt, Mr. Duignan became manager of all the Company's lumber business. He remained in this capacity for three years, when he, much to the regret of the directors severed his connection and accepted a position with A. McDonald in the lumber and box business, at Peterborough, taking the duties of sales manager.

Following the death of Mr. McDonald, in 1906, Messrs. E. A. Peck and J. Crane and J. Duignan became trustees of the Estate with Mr Duignan as manager. This position was held until Mr. McDonald's youngest son became of age, last June, and the business of the Estate was closed up and handed over to the beneficiaries. As a result of the management and in the face of the keenest competition and the demoralizing effects of the war on the building trade the volume of business was more than doubled and the value of the assets trebled, placing the new firm, the A. McDonald Lumber Co., in a very prosperous condition.

Mr. Duignan was offered but declined the management of the new McDonald Company. But, having been all his life actively engaged in the lumber business he could not remain idle, so secured all the said Kelly Lumber Co.'s timber limits together with the saw mill and mill site at Lakefield. It is expected that the guiding spirit in the new Company will be Mr. Duignan, who is so eminently fitted by experience and association in the lumber business to handle a proposition of such magnitude.

It is expected that the new Company will begin [illegible] operations [illegible] September first and that their pay roll for the first winter's cut will be between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. R. Sheehy Associated

The other Peterborough associate is Mr. R. Sheehy, the well-known contractor, and who would like to see this business established in Peterborough. But sentiment does not enter into the deal with the other interested parties, who are looking for profits commensurate with opefatoins.

LONDON TIMES DECLARES GOVERNMENT CONFESSES FAILURE ON IRISH HOME RULE

As Complete an Admission of Helplessness as Any British Chief Secretary Has Ever Pronounced---Policy of Administration Characterized as Increasingly Inconsistent---Door to Cooperation of Unionists and Moderate Iris men Closed.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, March 6. — Publication of the terms of the Home Rule Bill, says the Times, has opened a new chapter in the Irish controversy, and though events have marched apace in Ireland, the people of this country remain unsatisfied by any reasoned defence of the increasing inconsistency between the declared policy of the Government and the actual administration of Irish acairs.

Disastrous Confession.

Continuing, the Times says the Chief Secretary's description of affairs in Ireland in the House of Commons on Thrusday was in reality a confession of failure on his part and on that of the Government, as completely disastrous a confession as any which any holder of his office has ever mode. We have never doubted that had the Government frankly based their Irish policy on indisputable truth, the Unionists would have broken down and sought the co-operation of moderate Irishmen in the administration of their country, and there would have been today little, if any, of that reign of disorder of which Mr. Macpherson, Chief Secretary for Ireland, so bitterly and so tragically complains."

HON. DR. CODY IS GIVING UP SEAT IN THE PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURE

Resignation Looked for by Monday or Tuesday Next—Has Already Given Hon. C. Howard Ferguson Reasons for Withdrawing From Politics.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, March 6—Hon. Dr. Cody, Minister of Education in the late Hearst Government, is giving up his seat in the Legislature. The resignation for the member for Northwest Toronto has not been handed in as yet, but it is stated positively that he has made up his mind to retire from politics, and that his formal resignation will be in the hands of Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Liberal-Conservative leader, probably by Monday or Tuesday. Dr. Cody has already been in touch with Mr. Ferguson and has furnished him with his reasons for dropping out. Hon. Dr. Cody could not be reached last night, but reasons for his decision are quite well known.

Interested in Province

When Dr. Cody entered the political field in 1918 he did so for a specific purpose. He felt that in the promotion of education in Ontario there was a field of service in which he could do much for his Province. Although never a politician, he threw in his lot with the Hearst Government and devoted his energy and ability to making the Department of Education a great directing force in the educational life of the Province. With the defeat of the Hearst Government his work in the deparmtent was automatically ended, together with his reason fo. remaining in public life.

His resignation has been expected for some time and will cause little surprise, though there was a feeling that he would remain through the first session of the new Legislature.

PUNISH TURKS FOR MASSACRE

TURKEY TO LOSE MUCH IN PEACE SETTLEMENT NOW

HER ARMY MAY BE ELIMINATED

TERRITORY IN EUROPE CONFINED TO BUT A NARROW PENINSULA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, March 6.—There is likelihood that the Cilician massacre may cost Turkey much of what the treaty of peace would otherwise have left her, according to expression heard in inner circles at White Hall, where Allied Foreign Ministers continue faming a Tukish settlement. It is believed, among other things proposed, the western boundaries from Enos on the Aegean Sea to Midia on the Black Sea, may be abandoned and a line may be drawn much further east. This would limit Turkish position in Europe to the narrow peninsula north of the Sea of Marmora.

France and Britain Agree.

France and Great Britain are credited with being in agreement in this respect, but there is less certainty expressed as to Italy's attitude, and the matter is yet to be settled definitely. Another effect of the Cilician outrage, is said to be the unanimous sentiment among members of the Foreign Ministers' Council toward totally depriving Turkey of an army, and permitting her to maintain only a force of gendarmes. This scheme seemed recently to be doomed to abandonment, but it is now said to be the most probable solution of the question.

Canadian runners will compete in a twenty-six mile Marathon at Detroit.

FIGHTING STILL IN MESOPOTAINIA

SKIRMISHES BETWEEN TURKISH IRREGULARS AND BRITISH TURKS COMMON.

EXCUSE MADE FOR MASSACRES

DO NOT APPROACH GREEK ATROCITIES, DECLARE SOME TURKS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Constantinople March 6 —British Turk forces in Mesopotamian oil regions, particularly near Jerkuks and Mosul, have been engaged in constant skirmishes with tribesmen and Turkish irregulars, opposition of these forces being similar to that encountered by the French at Aintab, Marash and other points in Cilicia.

Armenian epRublic.

Recognition of the Armenian republic without defining its boundaries is said to have undoubtably embittered the Turks in Cilicia as Armenians, they claim that Adana and Cilicia must be incorporated in a new republic as they belonged to ancient Armenia.

Horrors of Armenian massacres and deportations are blandly dismissed by Turks with the statement that the Turkish army suffered at the hands of Armenians, and that deportations are necessary.

It is also contended that the recent massacres at Marash does not approach Greek atrocities against the Turks when the former landed at Smyrna last year. Under orders of the Supreme Council, Nationalist leaders also say frankly that many clashes similar to that at Marash are inevitable if Europeans insist on partitioning portions of Turkey where Turks predominate.

PLAN TO MURDER LOYAL SUBJECTS

200,000 SINN FEINERS IN IRELAND MORE MALIGNANT THAN EVER

London, March 5.— "More than 200,000 Sinn Feiners are all ready to murder the loyal subjects in Ireland." declared Ian MacPherson, Chief Secretary for Ireland, in the House of Comomas tonight in the course of an impassioned denouncement of Irish Republican activities.

"I would not be surprised if, after tomorrow, many loyal an defficient officials were endangered. We are up againt a tremendous situation in Ireland. The 1916 rebellion has not been stamped out yet. The Sinn Fein spirit is more malignant than it has ever been. I intend to do my utmost to maintain law and order.

"The Government has no intention of bringing Lord Mayor Kelly, (Dublin) and other deported prisoners to trial," he added.

MacPherson's statement was elicited by the charge of Catp. Wedgewood-Benn that the Chief Secretary was inspiring outrages in Ireland.

MISTAKEN POLICY OF PETERBOROUGH

TOWNSHIPS REJECTING GOOD ROADS SYSTEM COME IN FOR CRITICISM

A deputation of local citizens waited on the Minister of Public Works and Highways in Toronto. The deputation was composed of C. R. Banks, president, W. H. Bradburn, chairman, of the Good Roads Committee; H. O. Fisk, secretary-treasurer, of the Automobile Association; R. B. Rogers and W. S. Dodds, of the Peterborough Board of Trade; Mayor McIntyre, Aldermen Copping and Jones, of the City Council; County Warden Nicholls, Mr. Strickland and Mr. Graham of the Lakefield Board of Trade; Mr. McIntosh, reeve of Monaghan; Mr. Baptie, reeve of Cavan, and others, regarding road improvement in this locality. The deputation urged the designation of a provincial highway from Port Hope to the Kawartha Lakes system via Peterborough and Lakefield. The Minister assured the deputation that the road from Port Hope to Peterborough would be taken over as a provincial highway, but he could not see his way clear to designate roads as provincial highways which were not thought of sufficient importance in the townships through which they ran to be brought by these townships into the good roads system of the Province. It did appear to some present that through a mistaken policy of some of our friends to the north, this valuable country must forego, for a time at least, modern transportation facilities about to be enjoyed by the rest of the Province.

INDEMNITY FOR WAR PENSIONS

DEPENDENTS OF DECEASED SOLDIERS TAKEN CARE OF IN PEACE TREATY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, March 6.—All dependents of soldiers, sailors or airmen killed during the war have been notified by the Board of Pension Commissioners that under the terms of the Peace Treaty all pensioners of deceased men are to receive indemnity for their loss. The amount of the indemnity is to be based on the age of the man killed and the age and number of his dependents. Pensioners are only required to submit date of birt hof deceased and that of their own birth.

Addressing the Ontario Bar Association at Toronto, Hon. Justice Olson of the Municipal Court of Chicago urged that effective measures be taken to prevent mental defectives from leaving Europe for immigration to Canada.

SUDDEN UPRUSH IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE FEATURES IN WEEK'S FINANCIAL MARKETS

International Financers Agreed That Foreign Credit Situation Weighs Heavily Over World's Commerce---Early British Adjustment of Trade Balance is Admitted, However.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, March 6.—The sudden uprush in foreign exchange, which brought the pound sterling some 50 cents over its low record of a month ago, and the concurrent advances in rates to other Allied countries, were the foremost features of the week in the financial market. This rise was attended by a circumstantial report of early gold imports on a huge scale from England, and possibly France, but these were almost entirely discredited in high banking quarters.

International financiers are agreed that he foreign credits situation weighs heavily over the world's commerce, but avers that British trade balance is in process of rapid readjustment, with marked betterment in the French situation.

There was a pronounced slackening of business in stocks, which were irregular at best, save for a resumption of pool operations in motor oils and affiliated issues. The reasons for the strength of these shares were furnished by further advances in oil products, crude and refined, pressure of activity reported by automobile manufacturers, and rumors of higher prices for motor accessories. Rails derived little benefit from their return to private ownership, although low grade issues were occasionally active at moderate advances. The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the United States Steel Trust case came as a pleasant surprise to leading industrial interests, but was without material influence as a market factor.

Call Loans.

Rates for call loans eased in the latter part of the week, but in no other branch of the money market was there any alteration from stringent conditions of the past month.

MOVEMENT FOR TECHNICAL SCHOOLS IN PETERBOROUGH GAINS INPETUS

Dr. Miller of Toronto Will Advise Board of Education on This Question.

The question of whether or not Peterborough is to have a Technical School is likely to be settled next week. Dr. Miller, of Toronto, technical advisor of the Department of Education, will be in the city some day next week to give the local Board of Education his advice on the subject. It is also understood that before he reaches any decision on the subject he will institute a thorough survey of the industries and requirements of such in the city. This survey will probably extend over a period of two or more weeks and it is upon this more than anything else that Dr. Miller's decision will be determined.

If these investigations are satisfactory it is likely that the Board of Education will be authorized to have plans of the new school drawn up ready for inspection by Dr. Miller's department. The cost of such a school will be divided between the Dominion Government for a fund set aside for that purpose, the Provincial Government, and the city, the share of each being a third.

Mr. R. Denne, chairman of the Board of Education, stated this morning, in answer to enquiries, that up to the present no scheme had been considered at all. They were waiting until the necessary information could be obtained from Dr. Miller before going ahead.

A delegation from the G. W. V. A. Toronto branch waited upon the Board of Education in that city to protest against the appointment of D. R. Franklin as chief draughtsman for the board on the ground that he was neither a returned soldier nor of Canadian birth.

HAPPY EVENING SPENT AT THE C. I. COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

Assembly Hall Filled to Overflowing by a Delighted Audience Diplomas, Medals and Scholarships Pesented Successful Pupils--Splendid Entertainment Programme

The Commencement exercises held in the assembly hall of the Collegiate Institute last night were attended with overwhelming success. The hall itself is very commodious, but last night its accommodation was taxed to the utmost by the large numbers of parents and friends of the pupils who turned out to witness this annual event. Indeed, long before the hour of opening every bit of seating accommodation had been taken up and many pupils were compelled to stand around the sides and at the back of the hall all through the program.

Chairman's Remarks.

The opening remarks by Mr. R. Denne, chairman of the Board of Education, were brief and to the point. After calling on the trustees present to take the platform, he commented on the favorable showing made by the staff of the Collegiate in the last government report, which had placed the Institute in the position of being second to none in the Province. He thanked the parents heartily for their attendance. More co-operation between parents and teachers meant better results for the pupils. Mr. Denne pointed out that at the present time the teachers were working at a great disadvantage with reference to accommodation. Lack of a gymnasium and household science room would have to be remedied (loud applause). This matter had been delayed up till now on the excuse of high prices. The technical advisory committee of the Board of Education was inviting Dr. Muller here next week, he said, and it was hoped that something definite with regard to a technical school would result. He pointed out that under the present system of technical education the Dominion Government would pay one-third of the cost of building a school, the Provincial Government one-third, and the city would pay the remainder.

Departmental Diplomas.

The chairman called on Principal H. R. H. Kenner to present the departmental diplomas. Mr. Kenner explained how the diplomas were granted by the Department of Education: they were in two grades, senior and junior. The senior diplomas wer presented to students who passed Faculty Entrance Parts I. and II., which was the equivalent of a second year university course. The junior diplomas were presented to students passing Normal Entrance and Junior Matriculation. He drew particular attention to the achievement of Miss Isabel Baird, who made 75 per cent. in the Faculty Entrance Part I. examination.

Mr. Kenner expressed the opinion that the achievements of the students as shown below, and the high average passing the different examinations were very good, taking into consideration the wave of sickness

SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1920.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

THE SUPREME COURT of the United States has decided that the United States Steel Corporation is not a trust monopolising production of the country's basic material to its own exclusive aggrandisement. Because it was big, because it represented millions of dollars in capital, this trust had been classed with those corporations who use their wealth and influence to raise and hold up prices irrespective of value, and to mercilessly corner and throttle all who stand in their path. But the fullest enquiry seems to have elicited the fact that this steel corporation was not a monopoly, that it has live and powerful competitors, that its own employes compose the greatest number of the trust's shareholders, that its prices today are those of last March, although other steel companies are asking higher prices.

The United States Steel Corporation, besides making its employes shareholders, seems to have seen to it that its workmen were properly housed, looked after their material welfare on general lines, and altogether regarded them as brother mortals of flesh and blood, with human failings and human needs.

Commenting on the decision in favor of this steel corporation, an American contemporary says.

"In welfare work the steel corporation has set the pace for the whole industrial world, so that the new generation of employes and managers that has come into control in the last twenty odd years has adopted a new viewpoint as to the relationship between themselves and their employes."

It is comforting indeed to learn of this new viewpoint by both employers and employes, a relationship which needs to be fostered generally if a state of "peace on earth and good will between all" is to find its place on this terrestrial sphere. There need be no friction between employer and employe when both sides recognize each other's rights and work toward a common end of mutual weal. The principle of employes holding shares in the corporation in which they work is gaining ground this side of the Atlantic, and an uplift of the masses seems to be in sight, and rightly so, if Democracy is to prevail. Man was not born to be a slave, but to "live," and not merely "to exist," even if it be by the sweat of his brow, as Genesis teaches us. And we seem to have entered a new century in which the common good of people is to find precendencein the growth of nations.

The policy of trust-busting originated in the United States during the Taft Administration, and the case against the United States Steel Corporation was a holdover from the time when trust-breaking was at its height. And the result has been to show that here is one big business which does not monopolize and increase prices at a time of abnormal demand; that was not deserving to be penalized because it was big, and which concerned itself in the well-being of its employes without covering that concern with the mantle of charity. Oh! that they were all alike!

THIS YEAR'S TAX RATE.

AT LEAST ONE city council has decided to this year cut down civic expenditure and to undertake no permanent improvements that are not positively imperative. Peterborough's Council might well take a leaf out of that other council's resolution book, for the burden of taxation is ever growing, and the average taxpayer is ever groaning. Of course, high prices must affect civic expenditure as well as that of individuals, but why not economize wherever possible? Ald. Gordon sounded the right keynote the other night in Council when he advised postponing certain proposed expenditures a year or two until increased revenues in sight are available to help meet those expenditures. From all indications the tax from the 31 and a decimal mark of 1919 to 35 mills. In fact, it looked last Tuesday evening as though 35 mills would not take care of the estimates under consideration. His Worship Mayor McIntyre suggests paring everywhere to at least not exceed 35 mills, and pare Council should wherever possible.

Let each department of civic administration have sufficient appropriation for its needs to maintain community interests and let each department avoid an overdraft But whatever proposed expenditure can be eliminated without imposing hardship or injustice on the public, individually and collectively, should be abandoned this year, when, it seems, we are facing quite an increase in our tax rate, do what Council will.

AS OTHERS SEE JOHN BULL.

THE SUN and New York Herald has this to say of Great Britain and her settling down to normal peace conditions:

The extraordinary welcome the House of Commons gave to H. H. Asquith when he took his seat as member from Paisley meant more than an exuberant outburst of emotion stirred by the reappearance in public life of a statesman of high attainments.

The popular demonstration in Mr. Asquith's honor spontaneously raised by Englishmen and Englishwomen in the streets of London meant a great deal more than mere satisfaction over the reinstatement in legislative office of a lawmaker of unusual skill and foresight.

The especially punctilious greeting extended to Mr. Asquith by his successor in the office of Prime Minister had a significance far more interesting than the recognition by Lloyd George of a member capable of leading the Opposition to the present Ministry with ardor and informed intelligence.

Each of these noteworthy displays of sentiment, from the impulsive tribute of the populace to the formal salutation by the Prime Minister, betokened one thing: the fact that English men and women are preparing to face again the problems of their domestic life, the problems of their Empire and the problems of the world with English sanity, with English hard-headedness, with English capacity to face the truth.

It is an error to assume that John Bull is incapable of hysteria. It is a mistake to believe John Bull does not fall into moments of weak sentimentality. It is a blunder to accept the theory that John Bull at all times and under all circumstances keeps his head. John Bull sees red sometimes. John Bull gets moon-struck sometimes. John Bull loses his head sometimes. But John Bull has the great and saving quality of always getting his senses back before his unreason has ruined himself and all those dependent on him.

Thus the amazing tribute paid to Mr. Asquith is not merely evidence of the regard in which he is held. It is testimony to the approaching restoration of the dependable and trustworth processes of peace government in England, throughout the Empire, and consequently all over the world. The short cuts of war government, the suppressions of war politics, the extravagance, blindness and despotism of war government are to be thrown into the discard.

The insanity which has sought to treat great free nations as helpless children, to exploit their weaknesses and to render their strength ineffective has lost its power over the mind of the English nation. The subterfuges and false pretences of a desperate struggle, literally a struggle for existence, made necessary in some cases, desirable in others, or simply endurable in a great many are going to be cast aside in English politics, and when they have been cast aside there they will soon lose potency in the politics of other nations in which they still hold sway.

What the immediate future in English politics may produce in detail it would be idle to discuss. But England has served notice on the world that from now on her affairs are to be treated on sound and enduring principles of political and economic philosophy. Again John Bull is going to meet each issue on its merits, judge each project coolly and in the light of experience, and move with caution but not with trepidation to the protection of his material and spiritual possessions: and when John Bull moves sanely, watchfully and intelligently toward a desired goal in politics, in commerce, in industry and in finance, it behooves others to see to it that they do not let folly rule their courses.

RESULT OF PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

THE FACT THAT during the war the people of the United States obtained their sugar at lower prices than those of any other great nation in the world, is directly attributable to the protective tariff which developed the domestic beet sugar industry in that country, according to a statement by Truman G. Palmer, Executive Secretary of the United States Sugar Manufacturers' Association. The Dingley Tariff of 1897 increased the import duty on sugar from an ad valorem duty to a specific rate of 1.685 cents per pound on 96-degree raw sugar which was the grade most largely imported into the United States.

In 1896 six sugar beet factories operating in the United States produced 32,726 tons of sugar. Immediately after the passage of the Dingley Bill new beet sugar factories began to spring up in many of the northern and western States. This development was checked to some extent in 1903 by the enactment of a reciprocity treaty under which raw sugar from Cuba was imported subject to a duty of 1.348 cents per pound. Nevertheless, the industry has grown, and the domestic production in 1914 exceeded that of 1896 by 700,000 tons, while the increase in the production of sugar in the insular possessions of the United States amounted to 982,000 tons making a total increase in domestic and insular sugars of 1,682,000 tons. In 1914 sugar production in the United States and in the insular possessions of that country represented about half of the total domestic requirements. In addition, the 20 per cent. preferential duty granted to Cuba in 1903 resulted in increasing that island's sugar production by over 1,760,000 tons by 1914.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

EXTRAVAGANCE A CITY VICE.

(Toronto Star.)

"One can find just as many grab-alls and close-fisted skinflints along a city street as along a township concession. Niggardliness is no more general in one than in the other," says the Belleville Ontario, but it admits that it is in the cities and towns that you find nearly all the foolish spendthrifts who waste their money about as fast as they get it.

NO ONE TO TEACH.

(Lindsay Warder.)

Two schools in Ontario county, and not many miles from Lindsay, have been closed for lack of pupils. The cry has been right along that a lack of teachers handicapped the rural boy or girl, but to have two schools close for lack of pupils is indeed a deplorable state of affairs.

WASTED LESSONS IN THRIFT.

(Detroit Free Press.)

A Massachusetts manufacture, to give his employes a lesson in thrift said that he waste for the week had been $177, and as an object lesson threw that amount of money in coin out of the window. The thrifty employes carefully gathered up the money, and their only regret was that they had not wasted twice that much.

SOME BRIDE!

(Charlottesville, Ky., Chronicle.)

The bride is a woman of wondrous fascination and a remarkable attractiveness, for with a manner as enchanting as the wand of a siren and a disposition as sweet as the odor of flowers, and spirit as joyous as the caroling of birds, and mind as brilliant as those glittering tresses that adorn the brow of winter, and with heart as pure of dewdrops trembling in a coronet of violets, she will make the home of her husband a paradise of enchantment like the lovely home of her girlhood.

TOO LATE TO BEGIN.

(Sketch.)

"Why did old Klosemann insist that his wife give away the bride when his daughter was married?"

"Oh, he said he'd never given away anything yet, and he was too old to begin."

FOUNDATIONS FOR BRIDGE ABUTMENTS

Editor Review: I think the Council and people of this city are deeply indebted to the Peterborough branch of the Engineering Institute for their very valuable, if somewhat circumspect, report on the "sufficiency of the foundation for the eastern river pier of the Hunter street bridge"—especially with regard to that part of the report which deals with the total "inadequacy of the preliminary information regarding that part of the structure" and their strong recommendations "that ample borings be immediately made for the western river pier."

While I do not pretend to put myself in the same class of Engineers as my old friend Dick Rogers—who I hope to see Minister of Railways and Canals in our coming Farmers' Government at Ottawa—I think himself and his associates on this committee have made a grave mistake in passing upon the sufficiency of the foundation for the eastern abutment or river pier of this bridge—without knowing exactly what kind of a foundation the western abutment or river pier is going to rest on.

The whole weight and pressure of this immense concrete arch must be borne chiefly by these two abutments or piers—these two piers must work together—their functions are inseparable, if one fails the other is useless, and I can't understand how any Engineer, or body of Engineers, can pass on the sufficiency of the foundation of one of these piers without taking the sufficiency of the other equally into consideration. If they are satisfied on the sufficiency of the foundation for the eastern abutment or river pier on the assumption that it is able to sustain half the load and pressure—how do they know—before the results of the borings they ask for are known to them—that they can get a foundation for the western abutment or river pier that will sustain the other half—and if they can't what becomes of this single arch.

Now, in view of the fact that the Institute of Engineers had to take so much for granted— such as— "we are also informed that underneath this hard pan at the south side is a stratum of sand the depth of which was unfortunately not obtained," and again, "From information given to us by the engineer in charge this hard pan is at least 3½ feet in thickness" &c. &c. is it not, even at this late date, with the while of our worthy Mayor and Aldermen to ask The Institute of Engineers to give their opinion on the bridge itself—whether in their opinion the single reinforced concrete arch is likely to prove the most suitable ad permanent design for this location. Surely this opinion would be invaluable to the council at this critical juncture.

As a matter of fact I am trying to pay into the civic exchequer in the form of taxes about one and one-half times as much as this whole committee of Engineers put together, I therefore have some small excuse to offer for taking a keen interest in this costly cost plus cost job. While I wish to do what little I can to protect my own interest and the interest of the ratepayers in general, I do not wish to be accused of trying to hit Mr. Barber below the belt. As far as I am concerned there is not the slightest doubt in my mind that Mr. Barber prepared his plans for this immense reinforced concrete arch, the abutments or river piers of which were to rest on solid bed rock foundations—and when he found out his mistake—decided to take a chance—a chance on which he has nothing to lose and which may cost this city an immense sum of money. And I think fully ninety-five per cent of the people who read this letter will agree with me after a perusal of these statutory declarations.

Respectfully yours
J. W. FITZGERALD.

Sermon to Young Men in Trinity Church.

On Sunday night in Trinity Church the pastor, the Rev. F. E. Malott, will preach a sermon of especial interest to men on the subject, "Run for Your Life." This will be the fifth sermon on the "Seven Deadly Sins." There will be good music. Among other members a male quartette will be given. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come to this service.

Teach the Children to Save

Habits are acquired early in life. Children, who are taught the value of money and the habit of saving, grow up into good business men and capable women.

The easiest way to teach children to save, is to start a Savings Account for each child ($1.00 each is sufficient). After a child has saved another dollar to make an additional deposit, he or she will have a better appreciation of just what a dollar stands for, and how much work and self-denial it represents.

SUN LIFE SHOWS BIG GAINS ON ALL SIDES

49th. ANNUAL REPORT IS ISSUED SHOWING TREMENDOUS GAINS IN BUSINESS

Several new and interesting records in the insurance business were made by the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada during 1919. The 49th annual report of the company has just been published and shows that the new business actually issued and paid for during the past year was $86,548,850, being an increase of $34,957,457 or 67.7 per cent over 1918. The tremendous business of the Sun Life will be realized when it is stated that applications for new assurances retaned during 1919 exceeded one hundred million dollars. The figure creates a distinct record in the insurance business of the Dominion, as no Canadian Company has ever before approached this total.

The business in force amounted to $416,358,462, showing an increase of $75,548,805. The assets of the company were increased by $8,091,089 and now amount of $105,711,468, while the report shows a net surplus of $8,037,440 over and above all liabilities and capital stock which indicates the importance attached by the company to safety and protection. The company paid out to policy-holders and their beneficiaries $12,364,000 bringing the total amount paid out in the connection since organization to $91,227,532. Another record was made in regard to income with a total of $25,704,201 or an increase of $4,053,101 over the previous year.

Owing to the remarkable development in the business of Canada's greatest life insurance corporation, the directors feel that the business in the Dominion is due to enormously expand during the present year.

WHAT U. F. CLUB SAYS

The United Farmers of Indian River club have gone on record claiming that the Union Government had outlived its usefulness; also that they were only representing one-tenth of the population of Canada. Following is the resolution:

"Resolved, that in the opinion of this club the present Government is no longer representative of the people of Canada.

"Resolved, that the sentiment of this club is in favor of an early dissolution of Parliament and an appeal to the electorate."
